Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. We considered the revenue loss. We necessarily had to consider the viewpoint of the House, that the 20-percent reduction should run from about $1,400 to $303,000. The figure agreed upon of $137,000 is a sort of midway station. It is the kind of thing which the Senator knows happens when we are compromising figures.

Mr. LUCAS. I appreciate the fact that in any legislation there must be compromise in order to obtain legislation. But I notice that the compromise was applicable only to the middle and upper income brackets, and there was no compromise with respect to the lower income brackets where a reduction is really needed.

Mr. MILLIKIN. We did not take any amendments to the conference that would have raised that question.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Could the Senator give the Senate the amount in dollars of the total tax reduction as represented by the conference report?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes. The amount is $3,300,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. How much does the conference report raise the amount of tax reduction over that in the Senate amendment.

Mr. MILLIKIN. The item which I have mentioned comes to between $56,000,000 and $60,000,000.

Mr. TYDINGS. That is the only increase in the amount of tax reduction as a result of the conference over the original Senate amendment?

Mr. MILLIKIN. That is correct, with the exception of minor technical adjustments which would follow from changing the bracket.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The $60,000,000 which the Senator is now discussing goes directly to those persons who have incomes in excess of $73,000 and up to $303,000?

Mr. MILLIKIN. They will have a 20-percent reduction instead of 15 percent in the brackets between $79,000 and $137,000.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the $60,000,000 will go to that one group of people who are now receiving from $79,000 per annum up to $137,000 per annum?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Yes; and who are working about 3 days a week for Uncle Sam at the present time.

Mr. LUCAS. And 3 days for themselves. It is pretty fair pay.

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would not call 50-percent slavery a very happy condition.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD at this point a table of estimated Federal receipts, general and special accounts, for the fiscal year 1948, under present law, House bill, Senate bill, and conference report.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Estimated Federal receipts, general and special accounts, for the fiscal year 1948 under present law, House bill, Senate bill, and conference report

[2] As proposed by the President in the 1948 Budget.
[3] Part of the reduction in liability under the House bill will result in increased refunds rather than decreased receipts; however, for comparative purposes, the full amount is shown here as a decrease in receipts. The estimate of increased refunds is $450,000,000.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD two tables, table I being a comparison of individual income tax under present law, House bill, Senate bill, and conference report, single person—no dependents; and table II being a comparison of individual income tax under present law, House bill, Senate bill, and conference report, married person—no dependents.

There being no objection, the tables were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HOLLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield for a question?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I yield.

Mr. HOLLAND. If I correctly understand the conference report, it means that an additional reduction of 4¾ percent of the total income of the taxpayer is made to every taxpayer whose income is $50,000 a year and upward. Is that correct?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Those taxpayers whose incomes fall between $79,000 and $137,000 will get a 20-percent reduction, instead of a 15-percent reduction, as provided in the Senate version as it went to the conference.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it correct that every taxpayer receiving an income of over $100,000 will receive an additional reduction of his taxes in the amount of $2,375 for each year?

Mr. MILLIKIN. Will the Senator repeat the question, please?

Mr. HOLLAND. Is it correct that every taxpayer receiving in excess of $100,000 of income a year will receive in each taxable year an additional reduction of his tax bill in the amount of $2,375?

Mr. MILLIKIN. I would have to compute that. I do not find the tax burden table that makes that clear. If the taxpayer is in the $100,000 income bracket, he receives a 20-percent reduction, instead of the 15-percent reduction which was provided by the Senate amendment. That will continue up to $137,000 of income, after which point the reduction decreases to 15 percent, and that continues up to about $302,000, after which it decreases to about 10½ percent.

Mr. HOLLAND. Is the reduction cumulative, in that every taxpayer with an income above $100,000 will receive the full benefit of the increased rate up to that stage, and will carry that benefit all the way up, no matter how high his income may go?

Mr. MILLIKIN. A taxpayer who has an income of $100,000 will get a 20-percent tax reduction on his $100,000. A taxpayer who has an income of $150,000 will receive a 20-percent reduction on the first $137,000 and a 15-percent reduction on the balance.

Mr. HOLLAND. I thank the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. As I understand the parliamentary situation on a conference report of this character, the Senate must vote it either up or down, and no amendments can be made to the report. Is that correct?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That is correct; the conference report is not open to amendment. The question is on agreeing to the report.

Mr. MILLIKIN. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask for the yeas and nays, Mr. President.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHITE. On this vote I have a pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], who is unavoidably detained. I am informed that, if he were present, he would vote "nay." If I were permitted to vote, I would vote "yea."

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON]. The Senator from New Hampshire, if present and voting, would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY]. The Senator from Nebraska, if present and voting, would vote "yea," and the Senator from Wyoming, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], who is absent by leave of the Senate is paired with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD]. The Senator from Missouri, if present and voting, would vote "yea," and the Senator from Virginia, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS]. The junior Senator from Pennsylvania, if present and voting, would vote "yea"; and the senior Senator from Pennsylvania, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED], who is absent by leave of the Senate, has a general pair with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. The Senator from Kansas, if present and voting, would vote "yea"; and the Senator from New York, if present and voting, would vote "nay."

The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. LANGER] is detained on official business at the Government departments. If present and voting, he would vote "nay."

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Maryland [Mr. O'CONOR], who is absent on public business. If present and voting, the Senator from South Carolina would vote "nay" and the Senator from Maryland would vote "yea."

The Senator from Wyoming [Mr. O'MAHONEY], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Wyoming would vote "nay" and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. BYRD], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL]. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay" and the Senator from Missouri would vote "yea."

The senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MYERS], who is absent on public business, is paired with the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN]. If present and voting, the senior Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "nay," and the junior Senator from Pennsylvania would vote "yea."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent, has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. If present and voting, the Senator from New York would vote "nay," and the Senator from Kansas would vote "yea."

The Senator from Virginia [Mr. ROBERTSON], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES]. If present and voting, the Senator from Virginia would vote "nay," and the Senator from New Hampshire would vote "yea."

The Senator from North Carolina [Mr. UMSTEAD], who is absent on public business, is paired with the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], who is absent on public business. If present and voting, the Senator from North Carolina would vote "yea," and the Senator from Florida would vote "nay."

I further announce that the Senator from Montana [Mr. MURRAY], who is absent on official business, and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON], who is absent by leave of the Senate, would vote "nay" on this question, if present.

The result was announced—yeas 48, nays 28, as follows:

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to absent myself from the Senate tomorrow. For the purpose of the RECORD, should there be a vote on any of the treaties before the Senate previous to the time fixed in the unanimous-consent agreement, Thursday at 2 o'clock, I announce myself in favor of the treaties as presented to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate beginning tomorrow, until next Tuesday, in order to attend the commencement exercises and the inauguration of the new president of the University of Arkansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] and I have canvassed the Senate as generally as we could in respect to the debate on the pending treaty. We find only one Senator, apparently, who has any desire to speak on the treaty, and there is some doubt about his doing so. It is probably advisable, however, that a definite hour be set for a vote, so that all Senators may be on notice regarding the terminal vote. I think it is agreeable to everyone interested if I make the following request, that at 4 o'clock p. m. tomorrow the Senate proceed, without further debate, to vote upon the four treaties in the order in which they are listed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection?

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I should very much appreciate if the Senator could find it possible to amend the unanimous-consent request suggested so as to make the hour 3:45 o'clock tomorrow. If he cannot, I shall abide by the hour suggested.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Very well, Mr. President; I suggest that the vote be taken at 3:45 o'clock p. m. tomorrow.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Is it in order now to move to postpone the further consideration of the pending treaty to January 25, 1948?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the unanimous-consent request is agreed to, a motion to postpone will not be in order.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The unanimous-consent request, if agreed to, would preclude such a motion. If we agreed unanimously to vote tomorrow, nothing could set aside the agreement except another unanimous consent agreement. I should like to know if it is in order now to move to postpone further consideration of the treaty until a day certain.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has before it at this time a request for unanimous consent that a vote be taken at 3:45 o'clock tomorrow.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Let me rephrase the request to cover the suggestion of the Senator from Arkansas. I ask unanimous consent that at 3:45 o'clock tomorrow the Senate proceed without further debate, to vote upon the four treaties, and any motions in connection therewith, the treaties to be taken up in the order of their appearance on the calendar, which request, in the opinion of the Senator making it, leaves the Senator from Arkansas entirely free to make the motion to which he refers.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I may say, for the information of the Senator from Michigan, that unfortunately I shall be away tomorrow, and I shall be forced, under those circumstances, in any case, to make my position in regard to the treaty clear at this time. I considered making such a motion today, and I did not want to be foreclosed.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator can proceed immediately. We are now considering the treaty, it is before the Senate, and if the Senator will permit the agreement to be made so that we may know what the final termination plans are, the Senator can proceed immediately in the direction he indicates.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. With that understanding, I have no objection to the request.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, if we agree now by unanimous consent to vote tomorrow at 3:45 o'clock, the Senator could not make his motion today and get a vote on it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Oh, yes; he could. The request I have made would include all motions respecting the treaty.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the agreement as now proposed were entered into, the motion could then be made, and action could be taken upon the Senator's motion at any time between now and 3:45 o'clock tomorrow afternoon.

Mr. CONNALLY. With that construction, of course, it would be proper for the Senator to proceed now.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I very much dislike to object to any unanimous-consent request, and if the request were for a vote to be taken 24 hours later than the time suggested I should have no objection. I think, however, that the importance of the pending question, and the consequences which would flow from the Senate's action in this matter, demand that we at least take time to give it more thought and more consideration. So far as I know, it was not until yesterday that the Senate was advised that this treaty would be taken up today, and today being Tuesday, I think that if we were to take until Thursday at 3:45 o'clock in considering it, the request might be reasonable. I shall, however, be forced to object to the unanimous-consent request to vote at 3:45 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Connecticut objects.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I wish to make a further suggestion. I have no interest in hurrying the Senator from Connecticut, or any other Senator, to a premature vote. The suggestion about a vote tomorrow was based upon a very careful canvass, by the Senator from Nebraska and the Senator from Michigan, of Senators who were interested, so far as we knew, and the result of our inquiry left us without any speaking program, even for the remainder of this afternoon. The only interest the Senator from Michigan now has is to fix a time certain for the vote, so that all Senators may be on notice as to when it is to occur, and without any attempt to mortgage or divide the time between now and then, because in the opinion of the Senator from Michigan the debate in respect to the treaty will exhaust itself very promptly, and I should like to have the Senate free to proceed to something else in the interim, if the debate should end. So, with that understanding, I shall rephrase my request, and I ask unanimous consent that on Thursday, at 2 o'clock, the Senate shall proceed to vote upon the pending treaties or any motion still pending in connection with them.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I cannot understand why it is necessary to postpone this matter until Thursday if the list of speakers has been exhausted, and if it is for the purpose of saving the time of the Senate. I do not understand the reason for postponing the vote.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Neither do I.

Mr. LUCAS. In other words, the Senate will be proceeding for 2 days without further discussing the treaty. I do not understand it at all. It seems to me we ought to proceed this afternoon and try to conclude the matter, if no other Senator desires to discuss it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It has just been disclosed that I cannot even get an agreement for tomorrow.

Mr. LUCAS. I think we should proceed and go through with it.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it

Mr. HATCH. If no further debate is desired, should we not proceed to vote this afternoon?

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think perhaps the debate is exhausted for this afternoon, but I cannot say that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] does not wish to speak tomorrow, although he may not be prepared to speak today. It was in the spirit of ultrafairness, to protect the rights of all Senators, that I was making the suggestion in respect to tomorrow.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I merely wanted to observe that this strikes me as unusual procedure. While I appreciate that, as the Senator from Michigan says, his suggestion was made in a spirit of cooperation and in a desire to have the vote set for an hour certain, yet, since there is no further debate to be had, I am unable to understand why there should be a delay in the voting until tomorrow. I raise the point merely to get action.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator just saw me try to get an agreement for tomorrow, in which effort I failed. I submit my request.

Mr. LUCAS. I object.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois objects.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I withdraw my request, and will make none further.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE NOMINATIONS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, there are on the Executive Calendar the nominations of two judges whom it is important to confirm. I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, to consider the nominations of ROBERT EWING THOMASON, of Texas, and of Albert V. Bryan, of Virginia, to be United States district judges.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I wonder if the Senator would not include the nomination of Peyton Ford, of Oklahoma, in the Department of Justice, which is on the calendar. The position in the Department of Justice is vacant, and has been vacant for a month.

Mr. WILEY. I have no objection whatever, and I include that.

Mr. THOMAS of Oklahoma. I ask that the unanimous-consent request be agreed to, including, with the two judges mentioned, the nomination of Peyton Ford, of Oklahoma, as Assistant Attorney General, to fill an existing vacancy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the unanimous-consent request. The Chair hears none, and the clerk will state the nominations.

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Peyton Ford, of Oklahoma, to be Assistant Attorney General to fill an existing vacancy.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Hon. ROBERT EWING THOMASON to be United States district judge for the western district of Texas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Albert V. Bryan to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Virginia.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, has the Executive Calendar been concluded?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor. Does the Senator from Georgia desire to ask the Senator from Wisconsin a question?

Mr. RUSSELL. No, Mr. President; I am asking the floor in my own right.

Mr. WILEY. I ask that the President be immediately notified of the confirmations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I am very glad the Senator from Wisconsin brought up the judicial nominations and had them disposed of. I want to say that there is another nomination on the calendar similar to the ones just considered in which I am very much interested. I hope we may agree on an early date for consideration of the nomination. The Senator from Maine [Mr. WHITE], the distinguished majority leader, a few days ago, expressed some concern about the matter and some anxiety in connection with its consideration. I wish to join him in his expressions. I have spoken to the Senator from Wisconsin about the case.

Mr. WILEY. The Senator from Texas has spoken to me about the nomination. I have agreed that as soon as we can have an understanding in relation to legislative measures which are on the calendar, we will immediately fit in somewhere the nomination of Joe B. Dooley. I shall be happy to bring it up. Since it is a contested matter, I felt I could not bring it up today.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not insisting on it being considered today, but I hope the Senator from Wisconsin will exert his powers to bring about an understanding regarding it. As I have no voice in the understandings on the other side of the aisle, I hope that he will bring his powerful influence to bear, to secure some sort of understanding, so that it will not be necessary merely to "fudge in," as the Senator suggests, or to "wedge in," the consideration of this nomination because it is of the highest importance.

Mr. WILEY. I believe the Senator understands my position very well.

Now, Mr. President, I desire to be recognized in relation to a matter that has recently come to my attention, and it will take me probably 15 minutes.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. President, I yielded my right to speak on the confirmations sought by the Senator from Wisconsin. I had a perfect right to address the Senate at that time, when the nominations were being considered, but I yielded, in order to expedite the consideration of the appointments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senator from Wisconsin has completed the order of business that he was bringing before the Senate at that time, then the Senator from Georgia will be recognized.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY—AGREEMENT ON TIME FOR VOTE

Mr. RUSSELL. I wish to express to the senior Senator from Michigan my deep appreciation for the consideration which he had shown a certain member of the minority party in agreeing to let the vote on the pending treaties go over until an hour certain. I must say, Mr. President, it is a little unusual to have the minority leader object to a request that has been made by a member of the minority, when the majority was generous enough to fix an hour certain for a vote on the treaties. It is not unusual in the Senate—or it was not in the old days, when we tried to be somewhat considerate of each other's rights—for matters to be carried over for a day or 2 days, when a Senator has been taken by surprise by a matter being brought to the floor of the Senate and has not had an opportunity to prepare to speak, or, in some cases, to go through the material in his files and determine whether or not he should make a speech.

I regret very much, Mr. President, to see that practice abandoned. I think it has not only been beneficial to the Senate and to individual Senators, but it has been very helpful to the Nation as a whole for Senators to be given a chance first to determine whether or not they wish to address themselves to a subject and, when they do wish to address themselves to it, to have an opportunity to express their views.

Mr. President, it has been well said that in the clash of mind with mind the truth scintillates. Any debate, within reason, which takes place on the floor of the Senate on these very perplexing questions respecting which the minds of our own people are confused or divided, is helpful, and assists the Senate to perform its high function to the American people. As one member of the minority I wish to express again to the Senator from Michigan my appreciation of the fairness which he has always manifested toward the members of the minority, and which he extended to some individual Senator in this case. I do not know what Senator is involved, but I do know it is nothing unreasonable for a Senator to request that a matter of this great importance shall go over for a day in order that he might have an opportunity further to determine the action he will take.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. RUSSELL. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. In view of what the Senator from Georgia has said I withdraw the objection I made a moment ago, and shall permit the unanimous-consent request to be entered into respecting a definite hour on Thursday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Illinois withdraws his objection to the unanimous-consent request that a vote be had at 2 o'clock p. m. on Thursday next. Is there further objection to the unanimous-consent request previously made by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]? The Chair hears none, and the unanimous-consent request is entered into.

The unanimous-consent agreement, as reduced to writing and agreed to, is as follows:

Ordered, That on the calendar day of Thursday, June 5, 1947, at the hour of 2 p. m., the Senate without further debate proceed to vote upon any motion, amendment, or reservation that may be pending, or that may be made or proposed with respect to the treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, and upon the question of ratification of the said treaties in the order named.

ORDER OF BUSINESS IN EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is the Senate still in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes; the Senate is in executive session for the consideration of the Italian peace treaty only.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a further parliamentary inquiry. As the Senate is in executive session for the consideration of peace treaties, and is also in executive session for the purpose of considering nominations which have been sent to the Senate by the President of the United States, what is the status of the nominations for postmasters with respect to which resolutions have been submitted to discharge the Committee on Civil Service and Postoffice?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has not gone into formal executive session. Unanimous consent requests have been considered on the basis of the individual requests.

Mr. LUCAS. Do I understand the Chair to hold that the Senate has not been in executive session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate has been in executive session on each specific question which has been raised.

Mr. LUCAS. A further parliamentary inquiry. When the Senate goes into executive session, even under unanimous-consent agreement, does that in anywise affect the resolutions to discharge the committee with respect to the nominations of postmasters?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Specific requests were made from the floor for the consideration of matters which were on the Executive Calendar.

Mr. LUCAS. If I correctly understand the Chair's ruling, I must say that I cannot agree with it. The Senate can go into executive session under a unanimous-consent agreement, but when the Senate goes into executive session that in nowise affects the resolutions which have been submitted to discharge the committee concerning certain nominations of postmasters submitted by the President of the United States. Do I have a correct understanding of that matter?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. If the Senate went into executive session by unanimous consent or by motion generally, then the ordinary procedure would be followed; but the Senate went into executive session by unanimous consent for a specific purpose.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LUCAS. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I simply want to explain to the Senator from Illinois that in his absence yesterday afternoon I asked unanimous consent that, as in executive session, the Senate should proceed with the consideration of the treaties. The request was deliberately made in that fashion and explained to minority Members, including the Senator from Maryland, for the purpose of avoiding the precise question which the Senator from Illinois now raises.

Mr. LUCAS. I thank the able Senator from Michigan, but I want to make the statement, Mr. President, that sooner or later I am going to be constrained to object to the taking up of anything by unanimous consent on the Executive Calendar until some disposition is made of the resolutions which are now on the table to discharge the committee from the further consideration of about 700 postmasters, all told, throughout the United States of America. I have been agreeing to the unanimous-consent requests, but sooner or later I shall object, and some of us will be constrained to compel the Senate to go into executive session on a show-down as to whether or not the Senate is going to confirm or reject the nominations of postmasters.

Mr. FULBRIGHT obtained the floor.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I wish to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Is it the ruling of the Chair that when consent is given to a unanimous request that the Senate go into executive session, that the matters which can be considered in such executive session are limited by the terms of the unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The unanimous-consent request was made for the specific purpose of considering the Italian peace treaty, and the Senate is limited to that one specific question.

Mr. GEORGE. The parliamentary inquiry I wish to make is as follows: When the Senate goes into executive session, under unanimous consent or on motion, is the Senate limited to consideration of particular matters in that session?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senate is not ordinarily limited to consideration of particular matters when it goes into executive session by unanimous consent or on motion. But unanimous consent was asked yesterday that the Senate proceed, in executive session, to consider a specific matter, that is the Italian treaty. It was so recognized and so held. The Chair might say further that the Senator from Wisconsin asked unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session specifically for the purpose of acting upon certain nominations.

Mr. GEORGE. I must respectfully submit that the reasons the Senators wanted the Senate to go into executive session were as stated by the Chair, but when once the Senate goes into executive session, the Senate is in executive session. The Senate cannot, by a preliminary unanimous-consent agreement, limit its activities within an executive session. I am merely inquiring regarding the view of the Chair, for if it were pertinent at this time I should appeal from it, because it cannot be a sound rule of procedure. If the Presiding Officer please, any Senator may state the reason why he wishes an executive session, and that he wishes the Senate to consider only one or two or three matters, but if he obtains consent for an executive session, then the Senate is in executive session, and, in my judgment, any executive business is in order.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has been recognized. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Maine?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, as I understand the situation, and I think I understand it rightly, the Senator from Michigan asked unanimous consent that the Senate, as in executive session, proceed to act for a specific purpose, namely, the consideration of a treaty. Now the Senator from Wisconsin has made a precisely similar request. He asked unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the consideration of designated nominations, and named them, and the Senate consented to going into executive session upon those terms and those conditions, which were a part of the Senator's request. I submit, Mr. President, that after having reached an agreement, and having agreed that we should go into executive session for a definite, specific, limited, and defined purpose, that commitment follows us into executive session, and that it does not follow that immediately we cross the line, as in executive session, we have the right then to disregard the conditions and the terms upon which the Senate entered into executive session.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, the unanimous-consent agreement is merely in lieu of a vote. It is simply one method by which the Senate goes into executive session. It does not go halfway in and halfway out, or two-thirds in and one-third out.

I most respectfully submit to my distinguished friend that when we go into executive session we are in executive session. If it were a pertinent question, I should appeal from the ruling of the Chair, because it is a ruling which simply cannot be defended. The only reason on earth why the Senate proceeds by unanimous-consent agreements is in lieu of motions, in lieu of a parliamentary procedure which is dispensed with by the unanimous-consent agreement. I am not protesting because these are the only particular nominations which are to be considered in this executive session, but I do protest against the limitation of an executive session when once we have it.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has the floor. Does he yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry .

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. LUCAS. Is the Senate in executive session or in legislative session at the present time?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, by unanimous order of the Senate, the Senate is in executive session for a limited purpose, namely, the consideration of certain treaties.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I ask unanimous consent to amend the unanimous-consent agreement so as to go further into executive session, to consider the resolutions which have been lying on the table, for the discharge of the Committee on Civil Service in relation to approximately 700 postmasterships throughout the United States.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Illinois asks unanimous consent to amend the existing unanimous-consent agreement in the particulars described by him. Is there objection?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. I feel very much inclined to agree with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] with respect to the ability of the Senate to go into executive session for a particular purpose and not be in executive session for anything else. But it may be entirely a moot question. Personally I doubt very much whether it was necessary for the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, our very distinguished President pro tempore, to ask that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering the treaties, to avoid the situation which he said a moment ago he sought to avoid, in connection with the question raised by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. LUCAS].

I do not think there is any Senator on this side of the aisle who would wish to interfere with the consideration of the treaties in order to confirm the nominations of postmasters. Certainly I myself would not consent to such interference, much as I am interested in the confirmation of postmaster nominations, and much as many of us are interested. I believe that the importance of confirming postmaster nominations, as compared to the importance of ratifying these treaties, is out of all proportion, and I myself would not consent to laying the treaties aside for one moment in order that we might take up the question of the discharge of a committee from further consideration of the postmaster nominations, or their confirmation.

I do not think it was the purpose of the Senator from Illinois to try to inject that question. Rather it was his purpose to clarify the situation. I am certain that neither the Senator from Illinois nor any other Senator is bereft of the sense of responsibility to the extent that he would ask that we lay aside an important treaty to consider postmaster nominations.

However, the question is raised as to whether, when we go into executive session, we are in executive session. I do not know of any rule of the Senate which provides that the Senate may go into executive session for one purpose and not for any other purpose that may be legitimate. I have no fear that we are going to lay aside these treaties in order to consider postmaster nominations.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to say for the advise of the chair, whoever may be in the chair, that this is a very simple matter, to be resolved in the right way by forcing a vote for an executive session whenever it is desired to consider any executive business. If the ruling of the chair is to be adhered to, I must join with other Senators who say that there should be some limitations on unanimous consent agreements.

Mr. MORSE and Mr. LUCAS addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. The Senator from Oregon was on his feet first, I yield to him.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I simply wish to make a brief comment on the parliamentary situation in which we find ourselves. I believe that if the ruling of the Chair stands, it will be a very unfortunate precedent.

There seems to be a growing opinion in the Senate that we can do anything by unanimous consent under the rules. I submit that such is not so. We cannot destroy fundamental procedural rights in the Senate by unanimous consent, because such rights accrue to the individual Senator. We are dealing here with a question of jurisdiction necessary to take up executive business. From the standpoint of jurisdiction, we cannot take up under the rules a treaty until we first go into executive session. The executive session goes to the totality of the jurisdiction. We cannot limit that jurisdiction by unanimous consent because we cannot transact any business of an executive nature until we are in executive session. Once we are in executive session the jurisdiction rests in each Senator to call up any executive business that is pending. We can vote him down but we cannot take his jurisdictional rights away from him by any agreement in advance of the executive session that only certain executive business will be discussed, if and when we go into executive session.

In my opinion, the Chair will look in vain in the rules of the Senate to find a rule which supports his ruling. I do not believe that we need to carry the question to the extent of an appeal this afternoon, but I think the Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE] has placed his finger on the essence of the point we are raising when he says that if we have to protect our rights from such a ruling as the Chair has handed down this afternoon, we shall have to object to ever going into executive session with any attempted limitation upon jurisdiction.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not know what the ruling is which has been handed down, which is so bitterly assailed. The Chair is not conscious of having handed down any ruling, except to recognize the fact that the Senate gave unanimous consent, as in executive session, to consider the treaties. There has not been any ruling on anything that the Chair knows about.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. The present occupant of the chair was not in the chair when the ruling was made. Certainly a ruling has been made that no other business on the Executive Calendar may be considered under the unanimous-consent agreement requested by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] yesterday.

The Senator from Georgia, the Senator from Oregon, and other Senators disagree with that opinion. I wish to associate myself with them. I raised the question in the first instance. I definitely believe that once we go into executive session we cannot place any limitation of time on the executive session, and we cannot go into executive session for one particular purpose. Once we are in, we are in.

Let me say further, in reply to the able Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], that I do not wish the inference to be drawn from the remarks which he made that I raised this question simply for the purpose of laying aside the treaties which are now before the Senate.

After the unanimous-consent agreement was made, the able Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. WILEY] rose and obtained unanimous consent to go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nominations of Mr. Ford, Mr. Holt, and Mr. Overby. It was after that that the Senator from Illinois raised the question as to the motions to discharge the Committee on Civil Service. In view of the fact that the Senate did go into executive session at the request of the Senator from Wisconsin to consider certain nominations, I thought it was perfectly proper to raise the question which has been debated for the past 30 minutes.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one comment?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. I yield to the Senator from Oregon.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the Senator from Illinois points out that there has been a ruling by the predecessor of the present occupant of the chair. He is quite correct. I think the present occupant of the chair has, in effect, ruled when he stated with apparent approval what the unanimous-consent agreement was. He states it as though such a unanimous-consent agreement would be subject to the interpretation that has been made of it. The point we are raising is that the Senate cannot, by unanimous-consent agreement, agree to go into executive session with a limitation upon the jurisdiction of the Senate while in executive session in advance of going into that session itself. Once the Senate goes into executive session it is the same thing as the jurisdiction of a court vesting in a case. If a court as a matter of law has jurisdiction then once it takes jurisdiction it has jurisdiction. Its jurisdiction cannot be taken away from it by any attempt of the parties or of another court to limit its jurisdiction. Once the Senate goes into executive session it has jurisdiction over all executive matters until the Senate itself votes itself out of executive session. Any attempt to limit the jurisdiction of the Senate while in executive session by any unanimous-consent agreement entered into with that objective in mind, prior to the Senate's actually going into executive session, cannot be binding upon individual Senators because it goes to their jurisdictional rights which automatically accrue to them once the Senate is in executive session.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, now that the parliamentary situation is clarified I want to advert to the question of the ratification of the treaty with Italy. I may say that I was forced to be absent from the Senate yesterday afternoon in order to make a commencement speech and I did not anticipate making a speech today on the subject. But since it has been brought up I think it is necessary to express myself regarding ratification of the treaty with Italy.

I should like to say by way of introduction that I have not had a single letter from an Italian constituent or from any foreign-born person in my State regarding the treaty, and it is not a case of trying to protect their interests in either Italy or any of the other countries concerned.

I have been considering the treaty for some time and have been very doubtful about the propriety of its ratification prior to the settlement of the relations between Austria and Germany; in other words, the over-all settlement of the peace in western Europe. But when the newspapers carried the announcement of the Communists taking over the Government of Hungary it seemed to me that was final confirmation of what many of us have believed was their policy. I have the feeling that if we proceed now to ratify the treaty, the significant part of which is the withdrawal of our troops from Italy, we shall create such a condition that the Communists in Italy, with the backing of the Communists in eastern Europe and in Russia, will proceed to take over the Government of Italy in a similar fashion.

Therefore, I think that a discussion of reparations, as to whether they are too large or too harsh, or a discussion of clauses regarding the retention of art objects, as to whether or not they are good or have any significance, is quite beside the point. In the face of what happens, as I understand, when Communists take over control of a government, as they have in Hungary, in Rumania, and in Bulgaria, all the details of the treaty designed to protect the inhabitants of course have no significance whatever. I think that is a persuasive reason why consideration of the treaty should be delayed. I want to make it clear that it is not because the treaty itself is an unreasonable one in consideration of all of the factors which faced the conference. I have great sympathy for the position of the distinguished chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, and my criticism of the treaty has nothing whatever to do with his efforts or with the efforts of our representatives in obtaining the terms which they did obtain in this treaty. I realize that if we were treating with people who would live up to their treaties—in other words, with responsible persons on the other side, and with people upon whom we could depend to carry out the treaty—it is very probable the situation would be different. It is very likely that our representatives did the best they could. I realize that they must compromise and must give and take on points such as Trieste, hydroelectric projects, and coal. My basic difficulty regarding the treaty is not the details which have been mentioned and about which so much has been said by Italians in this country. They call them basic injustices. I think the important thing at this particular time which causes me to believe that consideration of the treaty should be delayed is the renewed expansion of the Communists as exemplified by their actions in Hungary. That gives them a constitutional basis. At least, what they have done, it is claimed, was done in accordance with the constitution, although everything indicates that it was done by force and the threat of violence. Certainly the former Premier of Hungary, in his statement from Switzerland, indicated that it was for fear of his life that he went to Switzerland, as a result of such violence. In any case, the Communists now have control right up to the border of Italy, and it looks clear to me that they would refuse to make any effort to arrive at a treaty with Austria in order to maintain there the troops they have in Hungary, under the terms of the armistice, and to take over that country.

Therefore, in consideration of all the happenings within the past few weeks it seems to me that by withdrawing our troops Italy would be subjected to the very probable repetition of what has occurred in Hungary. I do not think we ought to do that.

I have on occasion in the past urged in the Senate that we approach the problem in Europe in connection with the settlement of the peace from an over-all point of view, and that we try to look at the problem and see what is needed from an economic point of view and from the standpoint of how much money is needed, and from an over-all point of view regarding non-Communist Europe. I think the plan which I understand is being considered by the State Department, which is called the continental economic plan, is a step in the right direction. On the other hand, I think the State Department has been very slow in developing that policy. It seems to me that taking this action now would in a sense prevent the creation of any unification of action or any economic or political unification in western Europe, because it would be a step in the direction of setting up a recreated Italy separate and distinct, without any regard to any over-all agreements or arrangements between the western European states. I think the basic difficulty in considering the Italian treaty is due to the fact that the principal signatory, other than the United States, is, I believe, completely undependable with regard to carrying out its terms. When we look back and consider the agreements at Tehran and at Yalta—particularly at Yalta and at Potsdam—and consider the lively discussions which went on in the press and on the floor of the Senate regarding the wisdom of those agreements, and then consider how completely they were ignored, how wholly ineffective they were in practice in their application to the way governments were set up in Poland, in Rumania, and in Yugoslavia—how completely the tripartite pariticipation provisions were ignored in setting up governments—it seems like a sort of dream; there is something completely unreal about it. I have the same feeling, at the moment, regarding the treaty with Italy. In view of what has happened in Hungary, and in view of the fact that that is not the first time such a thing has happened, it seems to me quite unrealistic and sort of other-worldly to be bothering about the specific provisions of the treaty. The fact is—and this is the important fact—that if we withdraw our troops from Italy, the result will be the creation of a situation in which the Communists, who already are very strong in Italy, will be able to proceed by force as well by intrigue—the latter being the well-known method they have used in other countries—to take over the Italian Government at the proper time. My guess is that if we do ratify the treaty, that proper time will not be in the immediate future, but probably will be after they have succeeded in obtaining the release of Italian credits and Italian property in this country, amounting to approximately $150,000,000, or at least more than $100,000,000. Of course, they will wait until they have received payment on the loan which already has been extended to the Italian people, just as the Communists in Hungary timed their action by waiting until there had been returned to Hungary the $32,000,000 in gold which we had only a few weeks ago.

So I would not expect such action to be taken in Italy next week. On the other hand, after weighing all the possibilities and, in my opinion, the probabilities, I cannot see how delaying the ratification of this treaty until next January, let us say, would result, under existing conditions, in any greater disintegration than that which would occur if we withdrew from Italy. In fact, I think the presence of our troops in Italy gives her some assurance that the assistance we give to Italy will be applied for the purposes for which we intend it to go, and at the same time I think the presence of our troops there is a deterrent to the taking over of the Italian Government by the Russians. All of us recall that about the only time the Russians have refrained from completing an expansionist move which they had undertaken was in the case of Iran; and I think their action at that time was in response to a very positive and definite position on the part of the United States, and was in accord with a specific agreement which has been made with the United States and Britain and Iran regarding the date of withdrawal of the Russians from Iran. In other words, a line had been drawn there, so to speak, by a treaty; and when the Russians were challenged, they did not wish to proceed regardless of our protest.

But that situation is very different from the situation in Italy. Upon our withdrawal from Italy upon the recreation of an independent Italy, the Russians' procedure will be to gain their objectives while proceeding in accord with the Italian constitution, just as the Russians did in the case of Hungary. Of course, such action is in a sense in accord with their constitution, but in another sense the use of force and threats, as was done in Hungary, seems to me to be a complete perversion of what was intended by the constitution, either in the case of Hungary on the one hand or in the case of Italy on the other hand.

Mr. President, I realize the momentum of the move to have the Senate ratify the Italian treaty; and I also recognize that the great persuasive powers and influence of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the chairman of our Foreign Relations Committee, coupled with the statement of the Secretary of State, undoubtedly will procure the ratification of this treaty. I make this statement only because I feel so strongly that the ratification of the treaty at this time would be an error and would lead to disastrous results not only in Italy but, more particularly, in respect to the plan, if there is one, or the idea of creating in western Europe some system of federation, economic unification, or whatever word we may like to use, to bring those countries together in a relationship which will enable them to trade freely among themselves and, I hope, in time to work out a political federation of some kind which will withstand the shocks of ill fortune in the future, and which, I would hope, would make a great contribution to a peaceful world.

Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks a few editorials dealing with the subject of a federated Europe. I make this request primarily for the purpose of showing to the Senate and to the people of the United States the widespread interest in the proposal to promote a federation in western Europe. I think many persons are unaware of the fact that all over the United States, and in all kinds of newspapers, editorials and expressions in various articles on this subject have appeared.

There being no objection, the editorials and articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

THE ONLY WAY

Now that Congress has approved the Greek-Turkish-aid program and we are launched upon the Truman doctrine, a question arises that must be answered:

Is it to be merely a holding operation against communistic aggression?

If it is just that, if we lack the imagination and the daring to make it any more than that, then we probably are embarking upon a losing proposition.

Long-term policies and programs must be evolved and supported, if the Truman doctrine is to succeed.

Such a long-term program is imperative for Europe.

Such a program has been advanced in the Congress through a concurrent resolution introduced in the House by Representative BOGGS of Louisiana and in the Senate by Senator FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas. It says:

"The Congress hereby favors the creation of a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations."

There never was a more timely moment to push this program. As a matter of fact it seems the only alternative to chaos and the disappearance of Europe as a bulwark of western civilization.

Once this country adopts the goal of European federation as a major part of our foreign policy, a great many problems and issues will fall into place and make possible a more sane handling of them. One of the great weaknesses in our feeble efforts to counteract Russian radio propaganda has been the lack of sane long-term objectives that make sense to the suffering millions of Europe.

There is still more than half of Europe left free of Soviet domination. That part could provide a sufficient foundation to demonstrate the workability of the federation idea. But there isn't any time to lose. The part not under Soviet domination may be much smaller a year from now.

The idea of European federation is old. But it has been advanced more and more frequently in the last few years. Senator FULBRIGHT in a Senate speech the other day used some quotations supporting the idea, some of which we are going to repeat.

Take this sentence from the book, "Strategy for Democracy," published in 1942 by Kingsley and Petergosky:

"Europe must unite. Peace on the European continent can be made a stable affair only through some process of federalization."

Here is what William Bullitt, former ambassador to Russia, said in a speech at New York University, on March 28, 1943:

"The world needs a strong, integrated, democratic Europe. A loosely-held-together agglomeration of weakness is not strength. Such a Europe might slip rapidly into another uneasy balance of power or, if it should not be armed, into another uneasy balance of impotence and fall prey to internal and external pressures."

From the book, Revolt of the Masses, by Ortega and Gasset, we read: "The real situation of Europe would, then, appear to be this: Its long and splendid past has brought it to a new stage of existence where everything has increased; but at the same time the institutions surviving from the past are dwarfed and have become an obstacle to expansion. Europe has been built up in the form of small nations. In a way the idea and the sentiment of nationality have been her most characteristic invention. And now she finds herself obliged to exceed herself. This is the outline of the enormous drama to be staged in the coming year. Will she be able to shake off these survivals, or will she remain forever their prisoner? Because it has already happened once before in history that a great civilization has died through not being able to adopt a substitute for its traditional idea of the state".

Further in this book, we find: "To my mind the feeling of shrinkage of impotency, which undoubtedly lies heavy on the vitality of Europe in these times, is nourished on that disproportion between the great potentialities of Europe and the form of political organization within which they have to act."

In the Courier, in December 1943, Dorothy Thompson said: "For no peace can be made without Europe, which happens to contain 350,000,000 people. The crux of the whole peace is the reconstruction of Europe. But so far not a single basis in principle or in action has been laid for that reconstruction".

Last December, at Zurich, Winston Churchill made this statement: "I am now going to say something which will astonish you. The first step in the recreation of the European family must be a partnership between France and Germany. In this way only can France recover the moral and cultural leadership of Europe. There can be no revival of Europe without a spiritually great France and a spiritually great Germany".

This is the way history must be shaped unless Europe is to slip back into the Dark Ages again, to be reformed behind the iron curtain of its Soviet masters.

The Truman doctrine is not enough as a holding operation. It must involve much more than that. It must involve a plan for the reconstruction of Europe which, as Dorothy Thompson says, is the crux of the whole peace.

Only the federation plan holds forth hope of permanent peace and economic well-being for Europe—all of Europe.

FAITH OF A EUROPEAN

Whatever one may think of the political implications in Winston Churchill's proposal of a united Europe, there is no denying the brilliant act of faith which his words compose. The "rubble-heap, charnel-house, breeding ground of pestilence and hate"—that Europe we of today see plainly. "Has she nothing to give to the world," Mr. Churchill asks, "but the contagion of the black death?" His categorical denial, moving in its terms and its associations, is the language which for two dismal postwar years we have been awaiting.

"There is the fairest, most temperate, most fertile area of the globe. The influence and the power of Europe and of Christendom have for centuries shaped and dominated the course of history. * * * Religion, law, learning, art, science, industry throughout the world all bear in so many lands, under every sky and in every clime, the stamp of European origin and traces of the European influence."

Winston Churchill, for years the first citizen of Britain, has constantly thought of himself as a citizen of Europe. "We hope to reach again," he says, "a Europe purged of the slavery of the ancient times in which men will be as proud to say: 'I am a European' as once they were to say: 'Civis Romanus sum.'"

Is Churchill, great traditionist that he is, here looking at the present through the eyes of the past, or is he glancing prophetically at the future? He says that it is often a mistake to try to settle everything at once. "Far off, on the skyline, we can see the peaks of the delectable mountains. But we cannot tell what lies between us and them."

When he couples his plea for a united Europe with an unequivocal statement on the imperative need of some effective world supergovernment, we can take the measure of his time scale, which projects him far into the future.

That, likewise, brings into greater perspective the implications of his more specific statements on European unity. By defining the "four pillars of peace" as the United States, the Soviet Union, the British Commonwealth, and a united Europe, and placing Britain in the last two of these, does Mr. Churchill open himself to the charge of creating a purely anti-Russian bloc? He denies it, and explains that the Europe he envisions is not only a geographical entity but a cultural entity in which individual human liberties form the touchstone.

It was not so, of course, with the Romans or the Holy Roman Empire; Napoleon made it so very imperfectly and Hitler rose to power through the attempt to deny history itself. But Churchill's Europe, as he makes clear in speaking of France's future role, will be the creation of an act of faith if it is created at all. It is, he says, a spiritual conception which so long as men feel its worth will not die.

UNITY IS EUROPE'S PROBLEM

The ancient Greeks used the word "problem" to mean some thing or event thrown unexpectedly into experience, creating difficulties, and requiring man's mind to find new and different ways of getting on in a world suddenly disordered. As Prof. Horace M. Kallen suggested at the U. B. Centennial, it marks the intrusion of conflict into order—"the irruption of the obscure or unknown into the clear and known." Europe today is confronted with the problem, in the original use of the word, of disintegration rather than recovery after combat. Mr. Churchill's plan for a United States of Europe is designed to solve this problem, and deserves the attention of whatever nation-saving statesmen there remain on that unhappy Continent that cradled western civilization as we know it.

This half-American Briton speaks generously and grandly as a European whose patriotism is not alone to a nation but to a continent and a civilization. Surely his is the voice of Europe speaking for common survival. He would smooth away frontier lines, demolish tariff impediments to rising standards of living, so all European states can, as he well puts it, assure their peoples "those fundamental human and personal rights and liberties on which our democratic civilization has been created." He asks the pointed question: "Are we Europeans, through our poverty and our quarrels, forever to be a burden and a danger to the rest of the world?" He calls for France and Britain to become the cofounders of a federal union through western Europe, in order that prosperity can live as freedom's guest.

His offer of common citizenship to Frenchmen in the despairing summer of 1940 shows that this calls for a United States of Europe is no sudden Churchillian dream. Indeed, a solution of this sort has been in the imagination of great leaders in Europe since France's Henry IV put forward his grand design over three centuries ago. Surely, Mr. Churchill is right in saying that the present is the supreme opportunity for unity in Europe in some form.

Anne O'Hare McCormick says that the best argument against it is the political impossibility of concord at the moment. At the same time, this political nuclear fission is the very best argument that the time for unity is at hand. The people of that unhappy Continent have only to look across the Atlantic as it was 160 years ago to find one of history's most powerful analogies by example. But for the chaos that was confounding the United States that had emerged from the war of independence, the founding fathers would not have been able to have brought into being the more perfect Union that has now grown into the strongest as well as the freest power the world has ever known.

The United States had achieved its independence from George III, but the individual States were unwilling to entrust the Confederation Congress with the power to operate as a central government. Each State had its own tariffs and excises; the New York of Gov. George Clinton levied on schooners from Massachusetts and provision boats from New Jersey as though they were from Bremen, Brest, or Bristol. Paper money became not worth a continental because printing presses turned it out night and day. The Confederation Congress could tax nothing, and the States showed little interest in meeting the requisitions made upon them. At length things reached so low a point that George Washington, James Madison, and others were able to project a new frame of government and to persuade the jealous States to put it into commission. The gravity of the need forced efficient solution.

History does not repeat exactly, but it does afford analogies that are serviceable to statesmen seeking the way out from catastrophe. The peoples in the ruins of Europe can take heart from the perils that beset Americans in 1787—perils that were overcome through resolute action. Mr. Churchill puts it well for the Continent whose self-regeneration he seeks: "This is the hour of choice, and surely the choice is plain. If the peoples of Europe resolve to come together and work together for mutual advantage, to exchange blessings instead of curses, they still have it in their power to sweep away the horrors and miseries which surround them and to allow the streams of freedom, happiness, and abundance to begin again their healing flow."

THE VOICE OF A STATESMAN

(The United Nations has failed because it recognizes national sovereignty. There can be no international law while nations retain self-willed sovereignty.—Former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts.)

It is not necessary to be as pessimistic as Justice Roberts is to observe that at the present stage the chances of the United Nations to become the potent arbiter of peace seem scarcely greater than were those of the League of Nations.

The chance for the League of Nations to be endowed with the degree of governance necessary to prevent war was thwarted by the bitter-enders in the Senate who prevented the effective participation of the United States. The United Nations was launched with the handicap of the veto power, and the opportunity to correct this weakness by exempting the control of armaments from the veto has been resolutely blocked by Russia.

We can hope that UN will yet be endowed with the vitality and authority it needs, but the possibility that this may not happen is at least sufficient to suggest the wisdom of working meanwhile for more limited objectives which will contribute to the preservation of peace. The doctrine of limited objectives is especially applicable to the proposal for a United States of Europe, the consummation of which would not conflict with but rather strengthen the ultimate chance for a powerful United Nations.

The Fulbright resolution would place Congress on record as favoring a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations. Winston Churchill sees a United States of Europe not as a rival but as a corollary of the United Nations. In his speech last week launching the United European Committee, Mr. Churchill said:

"In the UN constitution agreed on at San Francisco, direct provision is made for regional organizations to be formed. United Europe will form one major regional entity. There is the United States, with all its dependencies; there is the Soviet Union; there is the British Empire and Commonwealth; and there is Europe, with which Great Britain is profoundly blended. Here are the four main pillars of the world temple of peace. Let us make sure that they will bear the weight which will be reposed upon them.

"After the first great war the League of Nations tried to build * * * an international order upon a weak, divided Europe. Its failure cost us dear. Today, after the Second World War, Europe is far weaker and far more distracted. One of the four pillars of the temple of peace lies before us in shattered fragments. It must be reassembled and reconstructed before there can be any real progress in building a spacious superstructure of our desires."

This speech will go down as one of the great orations of the greatest British orator of this generation. With the same exaltation that marked his speeches in the war, Churchill rose above his own predilections and loyalties and appealed to the conscience of mankind.

Has Europe nothing to give the world, he asked, but war and vengeance until all that invests human life with dignity and comfort has been obliterated? With all that modern production and transportation can offer, is Europe to strangle herself with trade barriers until she is incapable even of averting famine from the masses of our people? Or will the European states come together to allow the streams of freedom, happiness, and abundance to begin again their healing flow?

Churchill asked Prime Minister Attlee to resume the advocacy of a united Europe which he voiced before the last war, and he appealed to France to share with Britain the duty and the opportunity to unite the Continent. While Communists marched with anti-Churchill banners in front of the hall in which he spoke, he appealed to the Russian people to understand how much they stand to gain by the elimination of the causes of war in Europe.

Here was a speech to wake the lagging imagination of our statesmen in Washington, as well as in London, Paris, and Vienna. Can they not see that this is the same Churchill, the same man of vision, who tried to warn Europe of what should have been done to avert the last eruption? Is he to be again the man before his time, the voice crying in the wilderness?

[From the Mankato (Minn.) Free Press of May 20, 1947]

UNITED STATES OF EUROPE

Winston Churchill attracted much attention, in his own country and throughout the world recently when he spoke in London in behalf of a United States of Europe.

This is not a new theme for Mr. Churchill—he was advocating it vigorously before the beginning of World War II; it was part of the eventual plan he had in mind when he offered France joint citizenship with Britain during the dark hour which the French experienced in June of 1940.

But if a united Europe was advisable and desirable in those seemingly faraway days, it is an absolute necessity now. Broken, battered, and weakened by two devastating wars within a quarter century the democratic nations of Europe, all of them, are now so prostrate that it is virtually impossible to talk about the emergence or the independence of any one, even the strongest of them, standing alone.

Either Europe must stand united against the threat of Communist totalitarianism or it will be submerged by that form of collectivist threat. Churchill is as sound, his vision is as clear and sure on this question as it was 10 years ago when he repeatedly warned against the growing danger of Hitlerism.

Out of the present chaos and confusion there will either come a united, coherent group of states, acting in unison for a common purpose, or there will come the collapse of all that we have regarded as good and essential in western Europe's civilization. The aid which the United States is extending to various countries and regimes can be only temporary—the long run solution of Europe's basic problem lies in the program which Winston Churchill has outlined with prophetic vision, born of long years of study and experience with Europe's tangled affairs.

BARS TO EUROPEAN UNION

Back in the early thirties Winston Churchill put forward the idea of a united Europe. It was an idea foreign to the thinking of its time—a time of going Fascism, dawning Hitlerism, Maginot mentality, ultranationalism, insincerity, and appeasement. Mr. Churchill, a Tory with a vision, saw the evils and their remedy. But no one of comparable vision and authority in all Europe answered and supported him.

It took a second World War—which a strong, united Europe almost surely could have prevented—to show the true value of Mr. Churchill's remedy. Europe of 15 years ago had all the necessary ingredients of that remedy except one—wisdom. Today such important ingredients as stability, prosperity, health, and strength are gone. And there is some question whether wisdom has been gained.

A few nights ago Mr. Churchill again appealed to Europe to unite. It was an eloquent, intelligent plea which took into account all the grim realities of the present.

Mr. Churchill urged a European federation as one of the "four pillars of the temple of peace." The others, he said, are the United States, the Soviet Union, and the British Commonwealth. They would support a United Nations expanded into a world supergovernment to prevent war.

"Are the states of Europe," Mr. Churchill asked, "to continue forever to squander the first fruits of their toil upon the erection of new barriers, military fortifications and tariff walls and passport networks against one another?"

For the most part, Europe's answer was silence. France, which with Britain would be the backbone of any European union, showed a slight reaction. Her statesmen were too busy for comment. Most French newspapers ignored his speech.

Instead there came from France the voice of Charles de Gaulle, wartime hero, interim President, and now head of a new and somewhat disturbing political movement. Following Mr. Churchill by a day, M. de Gaulle made a speech in which he called for a strong state in France.

The former general said he meant by a strong state "what others mean in reference to themselves—for example, in Moscow and Washington—a state whose chief is a chief and in which no confusion of powers hampers or dilutes responsibility."

It is odd that M. de Gaulle should mention Washington and Moscow in the same breath—especially since he must know that in the United States the powers of government are delegated, though not confused, and that responsibility is divided, though not diluted.

Substitute the word "authority" for "responsibility" in the quotation above and you have a statement that might have been made by Hitler or Mussolini in the days when Mr. Churchill first proposed a united Europe.

If M. de Gaulle expresses a growing sentiment in France today, then the difficulties of adopting Mr. Churchill's plan are increased enormously. For the same reason the plan becomes even more urgently necessary.

A UNITED EUROPE

Mr. Churchill—again at his best, eloquently urging his countrymen to dedicate themselves to a cause "majestic and high"—is championing a united Europe which will assure the blessings of peace and prosperity to its own people and to the world.

Mr. Churchill is laying the foundation for a broad campaign in the field of public opinion and he rightly refused to complicate the situation with details. He makes it clear that the whole design for a United Europe is within, and subordinate to, the United Nations and that the way must be prepared by a favorable public opinion before particular governments can be expected to act. He asks that from now on his own and other governments should meet continental problems from the European rather than from the nationalistic angle.

The plan for a stable and peaceful Europe should command the support of Russia. Mr. Churchill regrets that this is not the case, but says that the peace, amity, and well-being of so many millions of men and women must not be frustrated by the veto of any single power, however respected.

It is important that we in this country recognize that a program for a United Europe does not run counter to the United Nations, any more than does the existence of the United States itself. It is also equally essential that our own policies in Europe shall be guided by principles applicable to the continent as a whole and not merely to separate nations. Behind the German problem or the Austrian or the Italian problem is that of Europe as a whole.

TIME FAVORABLE FOR DEVELOPMENT OF JOINT ECONOMIC PROJECT FOR RECOVERY OF ALL WESTERN EUROPE—LELAND STOWE SAYS THIS WOULD MEAN COORDINATION OF PRODUCTION, EXPORTS, POWER, MONETARY POLICIES—EXPERTS THINK THIS IS ONLY WAY TO REHABILITATION

(By Leland Stowe)

As a spokesman for postwar Europe's salvation, Winston Churchill has made himself both vulnerable and suspect by his Greek policy, his Fulton, Mo., speech, and other matters. But when the old organ master of the King's English discusses the need of a European union—or of a federation of western Europe, if necessary, as a starter—he is not dealing with a personal monopoly. Some of us, alas, can remember the moving humanitarianism of Aristide Briand as he pleaded vainly at Geneva in the late 1920's, for a "United States of Europe." If only governments and peoples had listened then.

I happen to prefer vastly the Briand approach to the recent Churchill approach. Given his background and convictions, Churchill is bound to consider a possible union of European countries chiefly in terms of a counterbalance to Soviet Russia.

Would it not be more constructive, and also safer and more practical, to think of Europe today as a natural bridge and a potential neutralizer between Russia and the Anglo-American powers?

Does not this prostrate Europe need recovery, an over-all economic treatment, far more than it needs strategic injections?

These are questions which the American Government now begins to face. Washington must have answers prepared before the menace of a general European collapse slides into reality within a year or 18 months.

It is of some real encouragement that important administration officials now are directly concerned with the economic basis of the growing crisis in Europe. If we can evolve a program that puts European recovery ahead of power politics, we may reduce the area and excuse for power politics in due time. This is where the concept of a European federation assumes exceptional significance.

When Briand crusaded bravely for a United States of Europe there were pitifully few in London or Washington who were at all interested, least of all, those in political power. But these 20 intervening years of ceaseless crises and disasters have served as a brutally effective plow turning up a certain amount of promising new soil in high places.

The mental attitudes of British and American leaders are changing at last. The terrible facts of Europe's alarming plight are proving more powerful than the clear-sighted logic of lone idealists like Briand. So we hear serious talk at last about union or federation for Europe.

What has caused this pronounced change in attitude? Obviously it has been precipitated by the depredations of World War II. Nations and men have finally wrought such chaotic havoc on Europe, the center of modern civilization, that no purely nationalistic cures—applied nation by nation, without regard for resources and geography—can be expected to cure anything.

This Europe is much too ravaged, dislocated, and impoverished to be restored separately, piece by piece. Yes, it might be propped up piece by piece for a short time—$500,000,000 prop for Italy today, a similar prop for France tomorrow, and so on. But it is now clear that each operation of this sort—like our present one in Greece—would only be a blood transfusion of short-term efficacy.

Europe has become too weakened and poverty-stricken to respond to anything less than an all around treatment which attacks her economic disease as what it really is—an entity, a common whole.

When this much is recognized as fact in Washington, it raises an interlocked question: Can America's Government and her taxpayers afford to finance Europe's recovery in any way except by treating much or most of Europe as an economic whole?

Some highly placed Washington officials are beginning to face this question also. They have to face it because America, it is said by very competent authorities, may have to provide some 15 billion dollars, or perhaps more, to underwrite European recovery between 1948 and 1951.

There seems no likelihood that this step or this cost can be avoided. The alternatives would be near-anarchy, civil bloodshed, or revolutions in several leading European countries. The consequent increase in communism, or in totalitarian governments of whatever kind, would certainly be very considerable. Quite aside from this, a Europe in protracted anarchy, being totally unable to buy from us, would dangerously increase unemployment in the United States.

Thus two unprecedented situations now exist. For the first time European nations are in such intolerable economic circumstances that they may be forced to eschew narrow nationalisms in support of a European union. For the first time also the United States Government and people have a personal dollars-and-cents interest in helping build a union of European countries.

Finally, all concerned have a time-limit gun pointed at their heads unless they cooperate to do something about it. Never before has this combination of imperatives existed.

Within 5 years we shall see whether the intelligence of western leadership was sufficient to grasp and act upon the drastic meaning of these present imperatives.

By "European union" we do not now mean an early emergence of a United States of Europe, with individual countries playing an identical role with the States in the United States. It would probably take many years for anything so integrated and federalized to emerge in Europe—possibly decades. As of now, however, it is certainly possible to develop a common economic plan for the recovery of all of western Europe.

That would mean coordinated production and export schedules, joint distribution of the Ruhr's coal and steel, inter-related systems of electrical power, correlated monetary policies, and similar cardinal features of economy and finance.

It would mean a joint economic plan for Allied Germany, France, and Italy. Around this nucleus the Netherlands, Scandinavia, Belgium, Austria and Switzerland would be brought in. Such an economic European union should be equally open to Czechoslovakia, Poland and Danubian Nations now in the Soviet zone.

In the view of some Washington experts, and others in London, Europe's economic recovery must be achieved through this federated, over-all approach, either with the Soviet's assistance or without it, if necessary. They insist that western Germany, France, and Italy constitute the heart and stomach of any vital European organism. Only taken together and treated together do they make any economic common sense.

Now, the experts insist, it has become far too costly to attempt to treat them in any other way. Around the German-French-Italian nucleus a general European recovery can be built. As a living and growing central organism it could scarcely fail to attract other countries into a coordinated economic program.

Only hope for Europe

It is expected that Moscow will be suspicious or antagonistic to any synchronized steps toward European economic union. Nevertheless Europe's millions are as hungry for hope as they are for food. They want to live; and they wait impatiently for some program, some major action, which promises them life. Only a plan and a big plan can give them hope and offer them life.

The ironies of our common world predicament are many. One of these ironies is now becoming evident. An American Congress, which often registers itself as skeptical or opposed to economic planning, will find itself compelled to approve economic planning on a very large scale in order to save Europe—in order to save Europe from chaos, Communism or a number of other things. Washington will also have to plan for Europe's recovery in order to have any assured recovery here at home.

We shall have to lay the foundations for an economic European union—or else.

CHURCHILL IS THINKING ALONG RIGHT LINE

Winston Churchill, in renewing his plea for a United States of Europe, points to a step that may be necessary to the salvation, not only of the continent in question, but of the world.

Whether the union could be formed along the line favored by Mr. Churchill is open to debate. He seems to contemplate an organization similar to the United States of America. However, there are age-old differences among the European nations in language and culture.

But the need of a large degree of political and economic unity in Europe seems obvious. The lack of such unity breeds war, and war today quickly spreads. A peaceful Europe probably would mean a peaceful world.

Mr. Churchill does not wish to supplant the United Nations as a global organization, but holds that a federalization of European nations would go a long way toward insuring success of the U. N. by eliminating sources of discord. Some day his dream may come true.

[From the Terre Haute (Ind.) Star of May 21, 1947]

BARS TO EUROPEAN UNION

Back in the early thirties, Winston Churchill put forward the idea of a united Europe. It was an idea foreign to the thinking of its time—a time of going fascism, dawning Hitlerism, Maginot mentality, ultranationalism, insincerity, and appeasement. Mr. Churchill, a Tory with a vision, saw the evils and their remedy. But no one of comparable vision and authority in all Europe answered and supported him.

It took a Second World War—which a strong united Europe almost surely could have prevented—to show the true value of Mr. Churchill's remedy. Europe of 15 years ago had all the necessary ingredients of that remedy except one—wisdom. Today such important ingredients as stability, prosperity, health, and strength are gone. And there is some question whether wisdom has been gained.

A few nights ago Mr. Churchill again appealed to Europe to unite. It was an eloquent, intelligent plea which took into account all the grim realities of the present.

Mr. Churchill urged a European federation as one of the "four pillars of the temple of peace." The others, he said, are the United States, the Soviet Union, and the British Commonwealth. They would support a United Nations expanded into a world supergovernment to prevent war.

"Are the states of Europe," Mr. Churchill asked, "to continue forever to squander the first fruits of their toil upon the erection of new barriers, military fortifications, and tariff walls and passport networks against one another?"

For the most part, Europe's answer was silence. France, which with Britain would be the backbone of an European union, showed slight reaction. Her statesmen were too busy for comment. Most French newspapers ignored his speech.

Instead there came from France the voice of Charles de Gaulle, wartime hero, interim president, and now head of a new and somewhat disturbing political movement. Following Mr. Churchill by a day, M. de Gaulle made a speech in which he called for a "strong state" in France.

The former general said he meant by a strong state "what others mean in reference to themselves—for example, in Moscow and Washington—a state whose chief is a chief and in which no confusion of powers hampers or dilutes responsibility."

It is odd that M. de Gaulle should mention Washington and Moscow in the same breath—especially since he must know that in the United States the powers of government are delegated, though not confused, and that responsibility is divided, though not diluted.

Substitute the word "authority" for "responsibility" in the quotation above and you have a statement that might have been made by Hitler or Mussolini in the days when Mr. Churchill first proposed a united Europe.

If M. de Gaulle expresses a growing sentiment in France today, then the difficulties of adopting Mr. Churchill's plan are increased enormously. For the same reason the plan becomes even more urgently necessary.

[From the New York (N. Y.) Times of May 26, 1947]

A "CONTINENTAL PLAN"

According to a dispatch to this newspaper by James Reston, official Washington is beginning to consider a new approach to European reconstruction which will take account of both the developing economic crisis in Europe and the growing apprehensions in Congress and elsewhere as to how far the United States can go in pouring out billions of dollars for foreign aid and relief without ruining itself. The new approach is a result of the growing realization that the old policy of shoring up the shattered economies of individual European nations and feeding their hungry is insufficient to bring about a real recovery, and that what is needed is a "continental plan" which will permit American aid to be concentrated on key problems and at key points and thus become a lever for the economic advancement of the continent as a whole without producing that general exhaustion on which Russia appears to count.

This new trend of thought was clearly indicated in Secretary of State Marshall's call for a worldwide survey of economic conditions to determine just what the reconstruction demands on the United States are. Since the end of the war, and in addition to more than $300,000,000,000 spent on the war itself, the United States has allotted for foreign aid and relief the enormous sum of more than seventeen and a half billion dollars. Despite this, and notwithstanding a partial recovery in some countries, Europe, which at one time was the economic power center of the world and still possesses enormous resources, has been unable to get on its feet and now faces a growing crisis as its productive capacity remains crippled and its foreign assets are literally being eaten up.

The main reason for this is, of course, the lack of peace and security caused by the deadlock between Russia and the West. But the events of the last 2 years have also taught us some lessons which we are only now beginning to heed. They have taught us that this is, indeed, one world, not only politically but above all economically; that the economies of all nations are mutually interdependent, and that in Europe in particular, as Under Secretary Acheson said, recovery cannot be complete until the various parts of European economy are coordinated in a harmonious whole. They have also made us realize that behind our allies and our former enemies stands a continent of which they are all a part, and that the infliction of a destructive peace on some nations must be paid for by the distress of all nations. Finally they are teaching us that revolutionary reforms which do not first assure the subsistence of those to be reformed are bound to defeat themselves.

The growing realization of all this is beginning to widen the vision of men everywhere above the narrower viewpoints of the war. It has brought the American Government around to the conviction that if any nation is to revive in Europe all nations must revive, including our former enemies. It has brought forth in Europe itself a growing movement for both political and economic integration, demonstrated by the customs union between the Netherlands, Belgium, and Luxembourg, by the plans for greater integration of the British and French economies, and by the increasing appeal of the idea of a United States of Europe. But two other things are likewise evident. The first is that the European plans, excellent as long range solutions, are yet unable to deal with the immediate situation. The second is that the immediate situation can be dealt with only with the cooperation of the Europeans themselves.

For that reason it might be well to weigh the idea of calling a European economic conference to consider the working out of the continental plan now being suggested in Washington. It might have to be called even if the next meeting of the Big Four leads to better progress toward peace than was achieved in Moscow, and it would appear to be essential if London turns out to be another failure. Such an economic conference should embrace as many nations as are willing to participate, but the rejection of it by some should not stop it. For the past 2 years Russia has been integrating that part of Europe under her control into her own economy, irrespective of past agreements or the recently concluded satellite peace treaties. If Russia will abandon these plans and join in an all-European reconstruction, well and good; she has as much to gain from it as any nation. But the western world can no longer afford to watch the Russian process of mastication with paralyzing fascination. The time has come to go ahead, with Russia if possible, without her if necessary. And the economic conference looks like the best step toward making such a move effective.

THE UNNECESSARY WAR

Winston Churchill revealed the other day that back in 1943 when President Roosevelt asked him what name should be given to the war then raging, Churchill had suggested "the unnecessary war." That name did not become widely circulated at the time. Perhaps that was just as well, for whatever its truth, it might have done our morale no good.

The Churchill remark is much more than an epigram. It is a complaint, bitter and cynical, but it is also an accusation and a declaration of high hope.

That bitterness is important, because it is something all thinking persons can identify in themselves. This country, Britain, and France had immense power and prestige in 1919. The people of the world had learned the grim lesson that war is no fun. The statesmen of these and of other countries tried to find some kind of program. We can pity them all, we can respect many of them, but as a group we must brand them failures. That is the complaint, the accusation that grows out of Churchill's remark.

But it is also a word of hope, perhaps the most impressive uttered so far. We have learned that condemning old wars and scoffing at possible future wars will not prevent those future wars. We know that the nonnecessity of a war is a minor question when we find ourselves in it. With this knowledge so recently burned into our consciousness we are too likely to accept the idea that wars are entirely inevitable, that our efforts to prevent, to avoid, to postpone them are doomed from the beginning.

We can admire Mr. Churchill's designation of the recent war as the view of a man who is both statesman and historian. From there we can go on to examine his own program for the future, presumably for the prevention of other unnecessary wars.

He calls for a United Europe within the United Nations. Only thus, he says, can Europe find respite from wars and their attendant agonies. He denies that this would be a blow at Russia.

It is possible that a United Europe is not the answer, and that if it is, Mr. Churchill is not the man best able to convince doubters of that. He has gone on record on many questions at many times and has a powerful array of enemies everywhere.

He does come out and say that the most recent war was not necessary and he appears to offer a way by which the world might escape another unnecessary war. The terrible slowness of recovery on the continent and in Britain itself may give his idea more of a chance than it would otherwise have had.

A EUROPEAN UNION TO FACE RUSSIA

(By Bertram Benedict)

Europe is slipping into chaos while nothing is accomplished on the peace treaty with Germany, the American people were told by Secretary of State Marshall in his radio report after returning from the fruitless Moscow conference. Yet at the same time Secretary Marshall gave only a counsel of patience, patience. If the State Department has any other proposal up its sleeve, none has been disclosed.

Yet many students of world problems, both in Europe and the United States, have a plan. It calls for a union of western Europe states, predominantly economic but also to some extent political, into what has come to be known as a United States of Europe. Senator FULBRIGHT, Democrat, Arkansas; Senator THOMAS, Democrat, Utah; and Representative BOGGS, Democrat, Louisiana, have introduced in Congress a resolution reading in full:

"That the Congress favors the creation of a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations."

It is no new idea. Disregarding such early advocates as Henry IV, William Penn, Immanuel Kant, and Victor Hugo, the proposal was pushed after World War I by so practical a statesman as Aristide Briand, 10 times Premier of France, and is now supported by hard-bitten Winston Churchill.

In fact, under Briand's instigation, the 27 European states that were members of the League of Nations met in Geneva in 1930 to discuss ways and means of creating a United States of Europe. The conference got nowhere fast. The delegates praised the principle, disagreed violently on how to achieve it. Some objected that a body outside the League would weaken the League. Others disagreed with the Briand thesis that political should precede economic unification. Others saw an attempt at economic and financial rivalry with the United States.

It will be noted that the Soviet Union was not represented. Some of the delegates at Geneva in 1930 thought it futile to project a United States of Europe with the largest and most populous European state left outside. Others even saw in the 1930 Conference another attempt to strengthen the existing "cordon sanitaire" against Moscow.

At all events, any move to create a United States of Europe in 1947 would in effect be an anti-Soviet move. The great difference would be that in 1930 the Soviet Union was on the defensive; in 1947 it is on the offensive. The move today would be an attempt to avert the chaos which is threatened by the Soviet tactics in international affairs and which the Soviet Union is widely suspected of actually desiring. If objection is raised that a union of western Europe now would create two worlds instead of the one world visualized by the United Nations Charter, the answer would be that in actuality Europe is already divided into two worlds.

[From the Charlotte (N. C.) Observer of May 19, 1947]

UNION OF EUROPE

Winston Churchill, in his speech in London last Wednesday launching the actual campaign for a United States of Europe, reduced the problem to its simplest terms—too simple, we fear, for actualities.

Europe, he said, the originator and once leading protagonist of western civilization, has degenerated into "a rubble-heap, a charnel-house, a breeding ground of pestilence and hate. Ancient nationalistic feuds and modern ideological factions distract and infuriate the unhappy, hungry populations."

As a result of this continuous, internecine strife, Europe has lost its place of leadership in western civilization, and, instead of giving hope and guidance to the rest of the world, it now has "nothing to offer but the contagion of the black death."

"Has Europe's mission," asks Churchill, "come to an end?"

He believes not and conceives that the only way of regaining her lost leadership is to bury the ancient hatreds and antagonisms under the pressing necessity for survival through a united Europe.

But, can the people of Europe be made to realize that this necessity for union supersedes all of their age-old differences?—that the alternative is the death of a continent? Can all of its diversified races and cultures be welded into a single whole?

Let us inquire, for a moment, what it takes to make a nation or a federation.

Common race and language, a community of religion, literature, history, tradition, and background—all of these two peoples may have and yet not be a single nation. The United States and Britain have all these in common, but they are not and never will be one country.

Of the 21 nations of Latin America, all but one speak the same language, have the same background, traditions, history, literature, and culture; many of them had the same liberator in the person of Simon Bolivar; but they remain vehemently and determinedly separate and independent states.

On the other hand the world has no more compact nation than Switzerland, with its three races, three languages, three cultures. The Germans of Switzerland have not the slightest feeling of communality with the Germans across Lake Constance; the Italian Swiss hold themselves distinct from the Italians beyond the Simplon Pass; and the French Swiss are a different nationality from the French below Geneva. They are neither Germans nor Italians nor French, but all are Swiss.

What, then, unites these Swiss while their blood relatives below the mountains are forever at one another's throats? The answer to that question should solve the riddle of how to submerge the racial hatreds of Europe in a continental union.

The bonds that unite diverse peoples into a single nation, we should say, are these: (1) A common political, social, and economic philosophy; and (2) a common aspiration for the future. The second is the more important, because it could overcome differences in the first.

Without that aspiration, for example, it would be impossible to merge a police state with one enjoying constitutional government; to harmonize a hereditary caste system with equality of opportunity; to adapt communism to free private enterprise.

But, when a common aspiration for the future becomes so overwhelming that it can force a reconciliation of racial and ideological animosities, then we have the makings of a nation or of a federal union.

Mr. Churchill believes that the basis of such an aspiration can be found in the ineffable weariness of Europe, in the profound despair of people so sick unto death of rapine, famine, and slaughter that their yearning for peace becomes the overmastering impulse of their lives.

If they can be convinced that the one way to achieve that peace is through a federal union of Europe that will transcend all disruptive forces, the common aspiration will have been planted in the minds and hearts of the people. The union will then be attainable.

As Churchill said, it is not the work of a day, but of many years, and we can make only the beginning. To the practical mind the obstacles seem almost insuperable, but, when human suffering becomes insufferable, it may react with a force stronger than all of the dictators, all of the nationalists, and all of the hatreds they have been able to engender.

For the sake of that bare possibility, we should give to the European Union movement our most hopeful blessing and our most energetic support.

[From the Manchester (N. H.) Union of May 20, 1947]

UNITED EUROPE

Winston Churchill has once more focused attention on the idea of a federated Europe. This idea has long been recognized by students of world politics as the logical basis of a stable and prosperous continent. The curse of Europe has been its sectional hatreds and rivalries that have made it a continent of division and conflict. Split up into comparatively small states, separated from each other by trade barriers, and looking upon each other as potential enemies, life on that Continent has been rendered economically and politically intolerable.

The chaotic conditions following World War II has made the demand for unity more imperative. Premier Attlee's prewar words that Europe must federate or perish are truer today than ever. Impoverished by the ravages of war, the European nations must work out some plan of standing together and striving to restore their ruined economic structure, or sink together into chaos and ruin.

The proposal made by Churchill therefore is nothing novel or unreasonable. It is backed up by both common sense and experience. There exists in the United States today an illustration of what a vast area can do when it makes union and not division its mainspring. It is not difficult to imagine the United States divided into 48 States rivaling each other, instead of the great American Union living at peace with its 2 neighbors, Canada and Mexico. What Churchill foresees is a United States of Europe in many ways similar to the United States of America.

There exists, however, one strong impediment to a federated Europe today, in the form of the basic division between Russia and the Western World. This impediment makes it inevitable that when Churchill talks about a federated Europe, his words must be taken as applying to western Europe alone. The union Churchill conceives is one based on the principles of western democracy, in which civil liberties would be guaranteed. This type of union will not be accepted by Russia and her eastern European allies. In fact, when Churchill talks about a federated Europe, the Russians regard him as simply making another play in the game of power politics.

Yet, it is a grave question whether the plan of federation should not be applied to western Europe, including Germany, or as much of it as is occupied by the western powers. There is no reason why the refusal of Russia to cooperate should be allowed to throw western Europe into chaos and ruin. That is exactly what Russia wants to pave the way for communism in western Europe, and it is exactly what the western powers cannot permit.

Some plan must eventually be worked out whereby the economic and political union of western Europe can be realized if that area is not to be engulfed by communism.

[From the Miami (Fla.) News of May 19, 1947]

FAITH OF A EUROPEAN

Whatever one may think of the political implications in Winston Churchill's proposal of a united Europe, there is no denying the brilliant act of faith his words compose. The "rubble heap, charnel house, breeding ground of pestilence and hate"—that Europe we of today see plainly—"Has she nothing to give to the world," Mr. Churchill asks, "but the contagion of the black death?" His categorical denial, moving in its terms and its associations, is the language which for two dismal postwar years we have been awaiting.

"There is the fairest, most temperate, most fertile area of the globe. The influence and the power of Europe and of Christendom have for centuries shaped and dominated the course of history. * * * Religion, law, learning, art, science, industry throughout the world all bear in so many lands, under every sky and in every clime, the stamp of European origin and traces of European influence."

Winston Churchill, for 6 years the first citizen of Britain, has constantly thought of himself as a citizen of Europe. "We hope to reach again," he says, "a Europe purged of the slavery of the ancient times in which men will be as proud to say: 'I am a European' as once they were to say: 'Civis Romanus sum.'"

Is Churchill, great traditionalist that he is, here looking at the present through the eyes of the past, or is he glancing prophetically at the future? He says that it is often a mistake to try to settle everything at once. "Far off, on the skyline, we can see the peaks of the delectable mountains. But we cannot tell what lies between us and them." When he couples his plea for a united Europe with an unequivocal statement on the imperative need of "some effective world super-government," we can take the measure of his time scale, which projects him far into the future.

That likewise brings into greater perspective the implications of his more specific statements on European unity. By defining the "four pillars of peace" as the United States, the Soviet Union, the British Commonwealth, and a united Europe and placing Britain in the last two of these, Churchill opens himself to the charge of creating a purely anti-Russian bloc. He denies it, and explains that the "Europe" he envisions is not only a geographical entity but cultural entity in which individual human liberties form the touchstone.

It was not so, of course, with the Romans or the Holy Roman Empire; Napoleon made it so very imperfectly and Hitler rose to power through the attempt to deny history itself. But Churchill's "Europe," as he makes clear in speaking of France's future role, will be the creation of an act of faith if it is created at all. It is, he says, a spiritual conception which so long as men feel its worth will not die.

MAN TO MAN

(By Harold L. Ickes)

The advocacy by Winston Churchill of a United States of Europe again brings into sharp focus the resolution introduced into the Congress a few weeks ago by Senator FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, and Representative BOGGS of Louisiana proposing support for a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations.

I do not believe I can remember an occasion when a resolution of this character has received such widespread support. Few have ever been offered that held out such a hope for world peace and a higher civilization.

It may be that the newspaper readers have not read much about it in their local papers. Until last week the press services had carried no accounts about it. The radio networks had not yet told the story. The reason for this is that the movement did not originate in any one particular place. It has been in the nature of a spontaneous ground swell.

The proposal for a United States of Europe did not come from a conference such as the Moscow meeting of foreign ministers. It was not the result of a convention in Geneva or Luxembourg Palace, or London. The suggestion was not made at a press conference at the White House, and so there had been no real news story. But that the movement for a United States of Europe is in reality a truly great news story is evidenced by the spontaneous support that the proposal received throughout this country.

Even a partial list of newspapers that have supported the proposal editorially is noteworthy. So far as I know, the first paper to take up the idea was the New Orleans Item. Within a matter of days favorable editorials appeared in the New York Times, the St. Louis Post-Dispatch, the Chicago Daily News, the Portland Oregonian, the Memphis Commercial Appeal, all of the Scripps-Howard newspapers throughout the country, and Time magazine. In Washington three newspapers have advanced the proposal editorially—the Washington Post, the Washington Daily News, and the Times-Herald.

I cannot but wonder if there has ever been an issue on which so many newspapers of such different colorations have been in agreement. That the Patterson-controlled Washington Times-Herald and Henry Luce's Time magazine should be found in the same rendezvous with the Washington Post and the St. Louis Post-Dispatch is almost unbelievable.

Finally, on May 14, the proposed United States of Europe became front-page news when Winston Churchill spoke in Royal Albert Hall, London, before more than 6,000 representatives of every shade of political opinion to be found in England. Among other things, he said:

"If the peoples of Europe resolve to come together and work together for mutual advantage, to exchange blessings instead of curses, they still have it in their power to sweep away the horrors and miseries which surround them and to allow the streams of abundance to begin again their feeling flow. It is, of course, alleged that all advocacy of the ideal of United Europe is nothing but a maneuver in the game of power politics and that it is a sinister plot against Soviet Russia. There is no truth in this. The whole purpose of a united democratic Europe is to give decisive guaranties against aggression. Looking out from the ruins of some of their most famous cities and from amid the cruel devastation of their fairest lands, the Russian people should surely realize how much they stand to gain by the elimination of the causes of war and the fear of war on the European continent. * * *"

If I understand Mr. Churchill's proposal it is that the nations of Europe that were our allies in the late war should begin to organize a United States of Europe leaving the latch string out for other nations, including Russia, which may not be among the first converts to the idea.

Mr. Churchill's eloquent plea is the more impressive when one reflects that Prime Minister Attlee, who possesses widely different political views, has likewise expressed himself in favor of the proposal.

We may be, if we press forward, on the threshold of one of the greatest political experiments of our times. But it is an experiment that must be made. As Mr. Churchill wisely observed, "let there be no mistake upon one point. Without a united Europe there is no prospect of world government."

It is my personal conviction that the nations of Europe either must federate, or perish, one by one. Even if an attempt to unite Europe should fail, the world would be no worse off than it is today. And if the undertaking should succeed, all humankind would take heart. Europe and the world will have peace if they are bold enough to take it.

Never has there been a Holy Grail so worth the seeking.

UNITED STATES OF EUROPE—CHURCHILL'S SPEECH FOR UNION UNANSWERABLE

(By Ralph W. Page)

WASHINGTON, May 21.—Winston Churchill is the greatest living master of language and for the same reason one of the clearest thinkers and greatest leaders of the age.

His speech last Thursday upon the necessity for the Federation of Europe is unanswerable.

What is Europe? Why it is a system of beliefs and ideas—a priceless compound of the Hebrew belief in God; the Christian message of compassion and redemption; the Greek love of truth, beauty and goodness; the Roman genius for law.

But what has befallen this Europe? Why is it a rubble heap, a charnel house, a breeding ground of pestilence and hate? Ancient nationalistic feuds and modern ideological factions distract and infuriate the unhappy, hungry population.

Now comes the vital question.

Are the states of Europe to continue forever to squander the first fruits of their toil upon the erection of new barriers, military fortifications and tariff walls and passport networks against one another?

Americans, who live under the impregnable protection and harmony of a federal system, readily agree with the great statesman's conclusion, with Prime Minister Attlee that Europe must federate or perish.

He is quite right in saying that the United States has a vital interest in a peaceful and prosperous Europe. "This," he says, "is surely not unnatural when we remember how the manhood of the United States has twice in a lifetime been forced to recross the Atlantic Ocean and pour out their treasure as the result of wars originating from ancient European feuds."

This is a past reason. But today we have an urgent present reason. To save our civilization and our trade and prosperity, as well as to forestall another war, we are compelled to devote more, and indefinite, treasure to the reconstruction of this Europe.

We understand that no amount of relief and charity distributed in the disruptive situation he so graphically described will succeed.

Our intent is to finance production, the revival of self-support, the return of trade, and so to receive back our investment and establish a profitable market for our produce.

We recognize, as well as the great English statesman, that the only hope of such a consummation is for the people of Europe to come together and work together for mutual advantage and to exchange blessings instead of curses.

In order to make American approval official, Senator J. W. FULBRIGHT, of Arkansas, and Representative HALE BOGGS, of Louisiana, have introduced a joint resolution saying:

"The Congress hereby expresses itself as favoring the creation of a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations."

The only hesitancy anyone in this country has to enthusiastic support of this purpose is the idea that the Russians would object and claim that the object is to create a coalition against them.

Such a strong, peaceful, and prosperous neighbor would in fact be a godsend to the impoverished Soviets. It would not only secure them against any fear of attack, but would provide them the materials for their reconstruction and a market for the great industries they are sacrificing to build.

It is true that such a Europe would offer poor pickings for a process of infiltration and disintegration that depends upon strife and despair. But not even the greatest advocates and admirers of the Kremlin can desire the perpetuation of ruin for the sake of spreading communism.

CHURCHILL ON A UNITED STATES OF EUROPE

In the week just ended Winston Churchill proved again that he is one of the great men of all time. He went to the heart of the world's life-and-death crisis; he set forth a way out; and he clothed his wisdom in a moving eloquence unmatched in our time and unsurpassed in any.

The center of the world's trouble, as seen clearly by Mr. Churchill, is the collapse of Europe, which threatens the stability of all the world. The remedy is to unite and reconstruct the Continent, within the framework of the United Nations. The eloquence was displayed in Mr. Churchill's stirring address to the United Europe meeting in London.

It is always profitable to quote at some length from Mr. Churchill. He began with this statement of the situation:

"The influence and the power of Europe and of Christendom have for centuries shaped and dominated the course of history. * * * Religion, law, learning, art, science, industry throughout the world all bear in so many lands, under every sky and in every clime, the stamp of European origin and traces of European influence.

"But what is Europe now? It is a rubble-heap, a charnel house, a breeding ground of pestilence and hate. Ancient nationalistic feuds and modern ideological factions distract and infuriate the unhappy, hungry populations."

Evil teachers, Mr. Churchill went on, urge the paying off of old scores, and false guides point to vengeance as the path to prosperity. This course, he said, would have terrible results:

"Is there, then, to be no respite? Has Europe's mission come to an end? Has she nothing to give to the world but the contagion of the black death? Are her peoples to go on harrying and tormenting one another by war and vengeance until all that invests human life with dignity and comfort has been obliterated?

"Are we Europeans * * * through our poverty and our quarrels, forever to be a burden and a danger to the rest of the world? Do we imagine that we can be carried forward indefinitely upon the shoulders—broad though they be—of the United States?"

As Mr. Churchill asserted, the time has come when these questions must be answered. Wisely he did not offer a detailed program for uniting Europe, for "it is often a mistake to try to settle everything at once." So he stated only in general terms his proposal that Britain and France join hands as founder-partners in the enterprise. They must, in friendly manner, bring the German people back into the circle of Europe, for otherwise the continent cannot be revived. He suggested that the old states and principalities of Germany, now being reconstituted, be invited to take their place in the Council of Europe.

It is already widely recognized that the revival of Germany is essential as part of a reconstructed Europe. As Secretary Marshall has asserted, the German problem cannot be settled by itself, or Poland's position by itself, or Austria's. In each case, as he told the Moscow conference, settlement must be regarded from the view of what is best for Europe as a whole. Nothing can be gained, and all will be lost, by keeping Germany an economic slum in the center of Europe.

Some sort of United States of Europe is of vital interest to America. Next year, if not this year, we shall have to consider granting very large additional aid to Europe. If present conditions there continue, there will be a very real danger—which some have remarked in respect to Turkish aid—that more help will be pouring money down a rathole.

It would be different if the European nations could come together, under the leadership of France and Britain, for a political and economic reorganization. We could feel that a new lend-lease program might well be as good an investment for peace as the old one was for war. Strong support for the United States of Europe idea has already appeared in this country. As Mr. Churchill said:

"This is surely not unnatural when we remember how the manhood of the United States has twice in a lifetime been forced to recross the Atlantic Ocean and pour out their treasure as the result of wars originating from ancient European feuds."

Russia has even more reason to want an end of dictator-breeding poverty and hatred in Europe. Twice in living memory she has suffered sorely from invasion by Europeans. Indeed a great merit of the unification plan, in the form proposed, is that it shifts from the idea of forming an anti-Russian bloc to that of organizing Europe under the U. N. as a pillar of peace and prosperity for all nations, including Russia.

At first Russia would, of course, suspect a plot. She would keep her satellites out of any European union. But as Mr. Churchill said, those nations which now wish to join can begin the enterprise, holding the door constantly open for the others. We could hope that in time Russia and her followers would learn that the United States of Europe did not threaten them. A recent favorable development along this line was the meeting of economic officials of Poland and Czechoslovakia, seeking to develop more trade with the western countries. They have found that Russia's standard of living is so low that nothing can be gained from trade with her.

In any case the European effort must be made. It is vital primarily to give millions of human beings a chance to live in human decency. Mr. Churchill spoke of the many, in Europe and outside it, who have suffered so much from military and economic war:

"Is the honest, faithful breadwinner never to be able to reap the fruits of his labor? Can he never bring up his children in health and joy and with the hopes of better days?

"Can he never be free from the fear of foreign invasion, the crash of the bomb or the shell, the tramp of the hostile patrol, or what is even worse, the knock upon his door of the secret political police to take away the loved one far from the protection of law and justice?"

In trying to answer these questions the United Europe movement could get the support of the British Government. Prime Minister Attlee has said that Europe "must federate or perish." Strong support also can be expected from President Truman and Mr. Marshall. It is a commonplace that if we are to avoid waging war, we must wage peace. The way to wage peace now is to strive for a federation which will end Europe's war-breeding and revive its former beneficent influence, to which American civilization owes its existence.

UNITED STATES OF EUROPE?

Formation of a "United States of Europe," as proposed in a speech by Winston Churchill last week, is not a new idea. Nor is it anti-Russian, though Russian ambitions stimulated by the break-down of the old Europe lend it a particular urgency now. What is novel in Churchill's suggestion is that it should come from a Briton. For the British have always felt instinctively that a divided Europe was less dangerous than one which at some future time might be united against them.

With British and American support the dream might at last be realized—unless, indeed, Europe is already too far gone to be saved. There are obstacles that seem insurmountable. But political systems are in flux; their rigidities may dissolve where we least expect it.

The whole European peninsula is so disorganized, abject, and impotent today that the alternative may be a return to the patchwork pattern of the Middle Ages. If that break-down occurs, it does not seem likely that the Catholic Church will again have the power to provide the stability and unification that can hold the structure together. Today it is the quasi-religion of communism which is prepared to muscle its way into that role.

Observers report that the people of Europe, whose opinion should carry weight, are convinced that the only hope left is for Europe—west of Russia—to be a much more compact unit than it has been in the past. That is why the Czechs and the Poles are seeking to collaborate more closely, both with each other and with the West. It is why the low countries—Belgium, Holland, Luxembourg—are removing trade barriers among themselves by a customs union to start August 1. Unable as yet to unite into one, Europe is trying at least to unite into fewer components.

UNITED EUROPE

A united Europe is not so wild a dream as those who would profit by the Continent's continued division pretend.

The day is here when the first steps toward unification must be taken if Europe is not to drift into deeper chaos. Czechs and Frenchmen, Norwegians, and Greeks, must be able to travel the Continent in safety and assurance saying, "I am a European" as the ancients traveled the known world with the universal passport, "Civis Romanus sum."

But the need of united Europe today is neither a recollection of past glories nor the expression of hope for the future, but the statement of an immediate practical need.

Winston Churchill, the Conservative who is fundamentally more radical and forward-looking than modern liberals bogged in ideological swamps, talking last week in historic Royal Albert Hall before the first meeting of the United European Committee which he launched in January, expressed sound reasons for continental solidarity.

There can be no solution of the German problem except in a European framework. The Moscow conference proved this. Europe cannot help itself without coming together for mutual aims, for, as Churchill rhetorically expressed it, "Do we imagine that we can be carried forward indefinitely upon the shoulders—broad though they may be—of the United States?"

Europe simply cannot go on and fill its role in western civilization under conditions which Britain's wartime Prime Minister described when he asked:

"Are the states of Europe to continue forever to squander the first fruits of their toil upon the erection of new barriers, military fortifications, and tariff walls and passport networks against one another?"

The continent today finds itself "a rubble heap, a charnel house, a breeding ground of pestilence and hate. Ancient nationalistic feuds and modern ideological factions distract and infuriate the unhappy, hungry populations."

Europe must help itself if it is to overcome these hard facts and face the future with any hope of peace and stability. There are difficulties in the way, but a start must be made. Churchill reminded his politically mixed audience of 6,000 persons of some of them when he recalled that 15 years ago, when he first proposed the idea of a United Europe, the United States was skeptical of the suggestion.

Today the United States, tragically aware of its inevitable connection with all European trends and events, realizes that a United Europe would be the greatest possible guaranty of peace. It concurs in Churchill's belief that there cannot be an effective world order until Europe is united. It sees Europe as one of the pillars of international order, the others being the American sphere, the Soviet Union, and the British Commonwealth of Nations.

What America fears is not a Europe united by free and equal component parts, but a Europe dominated by one power, whether or not it may be aggressive at the moment. In that sort of forced organization lies potential danger. Because of it the Truman doctrine was evolved. With a real United Europe no application of the Truman doctrine would be needed.

A difficulty still active is the attitude of the Soviet Union which sees in any European federation, however limited, a threat to the safety of Russia.

Churchill, who has been grossly maligned as the spearhead of a Europe organized against the Russians, dealt effectively with this fear when he said:

"The whole purpose of a united democratic Europe is to give decisive guaranties against aggression. Looking out from the ruins of some of their most famous cities and from amid the cruel devastation of their fairest lands, the Russian people should surely realize how much they stand to gain by the elimination of the causes of war and fear of war on the European continent.

"The creation of a healthy and contented Europe is the first and truest interest of the Soviet Union. We had therefore hoped that all sincere efforts to promote European agreement and stability would receive, as they deserve, the sympathy and support of Russia. Instead, all this beneficent design has been denounced and viewed with suspicion by the Soviet press and radio. We have made no retort, and I do not propose to do so tonight."

Europe must be united with or without the Soviet Union. To this end the United States will lend its support. The Churchill program, originating in a closer collaboration between Britain and France, is essential for peace. Ideologies must be subordinated. Old nationalistic feelings must go. The watchword was supplied by Churchill: "Without a united Europe there is no prospect of world government."

LAST CHANCE

Winston Churchill, who was an ardent champion of a United States of Europe even before the close of the recent war, declared in a speech last week:

"If the peoples of Europe resolve to come together and work together for mutual advantage, to exchange blessings instead of curses, they still have it in their power to sweep away the horrors and miseries that surround them and to allow the streams of freedom, happiness, and abundance to begin their healing flow. This is the supreme opportunity, and, if it be cast away, no one can predict that it will ever return or what the resulting catastrophe will be."

It is all very simple—perhaps too simple. Churchill is right. But people seem to be as stubborn as realism.

WORDS OF VALUE

Winston Churchill, for 15 years an advocate of a United States of Europe as the first essential step toward world peace, is returning to the attack. "It is not true," he said in a recent London address, "that a united Europe would menace Russia." On the contrary, he believes that the U. S. S. R. would gain much from a Europe relieved of the threat of war. He asks that France and Britain take the lead in restoring Germany's economy as a first step, lest Europe remain as it is today—"a charnel house, a rubble heap, a breeding ground for pestilence and hate."

This latest speech by the former Prime Minister came just as Life magazine and the New York Times announced their purchase of the five volumes of his war memoirs totaling about a million words, for a price said to be a million dollars.

Churchill's utterances have been listened to with well-deserved attention for years by those who disagree with him. They are always worthy of that attention, for no living man has participated as actively as he in the turbulent world scenes of the last 30 years.

EUROPEAN FEDERATION VERSUS REVIVED NATIONALISM

Back in the early thirties Winston Churchill put forward the idea of a united Europe. It was an idea foreign to the thinking of his time—a time of going fascism, dawning Hitlerism, Maginot mentality, ultra-nationalism, insincerity, and appeasement. Mr. Churchill, a Tory with a vision, saw the evils and their remedy. But no one of comparable vision and authority in all Europe answered and supported him.

It took a Second World War—which a strong united Europe almost surely could have prevented—to show the value of Mr. Churchill's remedy. Europe of 15 years ago had all the necessary ingredients of that remedy except one—wisdom. Today such important ingredients as stability, prosperity, health, and strength are gone, and there is some question whether wisdom has been gained.

A few nights ago Mr. Churchill again appealed to Europe to unite. It was an eloquent, intelligent plea which took into account all the grim realities of the present.

Mr. Churchill urged a European federation as one of the "four pillars of the temple of peace." The others, he said are the United States, the Soviet Union, and the British Commonwealth. They would support a United Nations expanded into a world super-government to prevent war.

"Are the states of Europe," Mr. Churchill asked, "to continue forever to squander the first fruits of their toil upon the erection of new barriers, military fortifications and tariff walls and passport networks against one another?"

For the most part, Europe's answer was silence. France, which with Britain would be the backbone of any European union, showed slight reaction. Her statesmen were too busy for comment. Most French newspapers ignored his speech.

Instead there came from France the voice of Charles de Gaulle, wartime hero, interim president, and now head of a new and somewhat disturbing political movement. Following Mr. Churchill by a day, Mr. de Gaulle made a speech in which he called for a "strong state" in France.

The former general said he meant by a strong state "what others mean in reference to themselves—for example in Moscow and Washington—a state whose chief is a chief and in which no confusion of powers hampers or dilutes responsibility."

It is odd that M. de Gaulle should mention Washington and Moscow in the same breath—especially since he must know that in the United States the powers of Government are delegated, though not confused, and that responsibility is divided, though not diluted.

Substitute the word "authority" for "responsibility" in the quotation above and you have a statement that might have been made by Hitler or Mussolini in the days when Mr. Churchill first proposed a united Europe.

If M. de Gaulle expresses a growing sentiment in France today, then the difficulties of adopting Mr. Churchill's plan are increased enormously. For the same reason the plan becomes even more urgently necessary.

BARS TO EUROPEAN UNION

SHALL UNITED EUROPE LIVE?

Mr. Churchill's crisp periods (in his Albert Hall speech, May 14) have not formulated the age-old question. They have merely taken it, magnificently, out of the realm of rhetoric into the arena of responsible statesmanship. Are we to be taxed by our children with another light-hearted and perhaps fatal treason to the cause of peace for not rising now to the opportunity of recreating a Europe we can recognize and revere as our own motherland? The opportunity for the restoration of Europe to our world-community councils was never clearer, despite appearances and smoke screens, as the need for her resurrection was never more peremptory.

To begin with the need, Europe's bodily health and spiritual vigor are a primary assumption in all our plans for the peace and reconstruction of one world. No pontiff, sane philosopher, or nontotalitarian statesman has ever dreamed of a realistic peace of which Europe's mani-colored but uni-patterned civilization was not destined to be one of the central pillars, if not its cornerstone. No reputable public voice has ever dared dispute the truth or implications of young Gordon Sewell's warning premise for the peacemakers:

"Europe is a spiritual conception. In the rich pattern of this culture there are many strands: the Hebrew belief in God; the Christian message of compassion and redemption; the Greek love of truth, beauty, and goodness; the Roman genius for law."

After our hairbreadth rescue of the soul of this Europe from the menace of Hitler's deadly attack, shall we allow her to disintegrate, to lose consciousness of her collective Christian personality and communion with the West, and to yield her bleeding body in desperation to the undertaker from the East? We shall if we continue to content ourselves with the lethargic, blind-alley policy of piecemeal relief and piecemeal economic and political barter which has characterized our planning for Europe's reconstruction from Yalta through Potsdam to Paris and Moscow.

Europe will not save herself, or be saved for the United Nations, piecemeal. We need to deal with her and appeal to her not merely as an economic whole, but as the single cultural entity she has never ceased to be and as the potential federation of sovereign Christian states toward which she was evolving ever more manifestly and consciously before the twin plagues of nazism and communism made her divided continent a shambles.

The hour of our need is the hour of our opportunity. World opinion is crystallizing about "regional agreement" in Europe, with or without Russia's consent. Americans of every faith and fealty, including high administration officials, are rallying to the support of the Fulbright-Thomas-Boggs concurrent resolution which would have Congress on record as favoring "the creation of a United States of Europe within the framework of the United Nations." Nothing but absurd and paralyzing concern for Communist "sensibilities" to blocs and cordons sanitaires (federation, of course, would be neither) lies in the way of our heeding now Mr. Churchill's counsel "to approach the various pressing continental problems from a European rather than from a restricted national angle * * * to design each new arrangement so that it can be fitted later into the pattern of a United Europe." Customs unions, trade agreements, cultural and diplomatic understandings have already progressed far beyond the planning stage in western Europe, and await only the semblance of peace in Germany, Austria, and Italy for their integration within a specifically European system of exchange.

It may take some heroic boldness, the cynics being what they are, for the distinguished delegates to "United Europe's" unofficial parliament convening at Geneva this summer even to broach the subject of a constitution or a charter. Let them be bold. Let them reveal to the peacemakers (including Russia) how widely their famous "Declaration of European Interdependence" is endorsed in Europe and within the UN. Let them make plain the promise of the first practical steps already taken to implement it. From there on, the problem of the unification of Europe becomes an urgent and a cheering challenge to her own restored good sense and to the moral stamina of her spiritual children all over the world.

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Mr. President, in order to place the question before the Senate—and I presume it will be voted on at the first opportunity—I move that consideration of the treaty with Italy be postponed until January 25, 1948.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arkansas moves that consideration of the treaty with Italy be postponed until January 25, 1948.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move—and I believe the motion is a preferential one—that the Senate now stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I had spoken to the distinguished majority leader. Let me inquire whether he has moved that the Senate now stand in recess.

Mr. WHITE. I am moving—and I think the motion is a preferential one—that the Senate stand in recess until tomorrow at noon.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator withhold his motion until I can make a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. WHITE. I withhold it.

Mr. GEORGE. Inasmuch as the Senator from Arkansas has submitted a motion for postponement to a day certain, under the unanimous-consent agreement which has been entered, as I understand——

Mr. BARKLEY. Yes; it has been agreed that the vote will be had on Thursday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It has been agreed by unanimous consent that the vote will occur on Thursday at 2 o'clock.

Mr. GEORGE. Under those circumstances, would it be in order to vote on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas as late as Thursday, before the final vote is taken on the treaty?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The motion to postpone, submitted by the Senator from Arkansas, can be voted on at any time between now and 2 o'clock on Thursday. If it is not voted on before 2 o'clock on Thursday, it will be voted on at that time.

Mr. GEORGE. I merely wish to have that matter understood, so that there will not be any debate on it at that time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, in making the motion, did not the Senator from Arkansas mean to have it voted on at this time?

Mr. FULBRIGHT. Either at this time or at any other time.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, under rule XXII, I understand that a motion to take a recess takes precedence over a motion to postpone consideration.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no question about that.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the willingness of the Senator from Arkansas to have his motion voted upon at this time, without further debate, would it not clear the atmosphere somewhat to have a quorum call and then have a vote taken on the motion?

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock tomorrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Maine.

The motion was rejected.

Mr. BARKLEY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

During the call of the roll,

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, in view of the fact that many Senators are engaged in committee work, and other official duties, and since we can vote on the motion at any time before 2 o'clock Thursday, I ask unanimous consent to withdraw the point of no quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request? The Chair hears none, and the point of no quorum is withdrawn.

A PROTEST AGAINST PRESIDENTIAL INVASION OF FUNCTIONS OF LEGISLATIVE BRANCH ON PORTAL-TO-PORTAL LAW

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I rise on a matter which I deem of tremendous consequence to the proper functioning of our system of checks and balances and separation of powers. I want to issue my most fervent protest against certain recent actions taken by the executive branch, with respect to the portal-to-portal law, the effect of which actions is to bring into question the historic separation of powers which has existed throughout American history among the three branches of government.

HISTORY FOLLOWING PORTAL-TO-PORTAL LAW

On May 14, the Chief Executive signed the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947. At that time he sent an unusual and virtually unprecedented message to the Congress, in which he presented his views with respect to the meaning of certain sections of that act.

The Presidential message was referred to the Senate Committee on the Judiciary, which immediately considered the statement of the President. It did so from the standpoint of determining (a) whether the interpretations suggested by the President were in conflict with those of the Congress; and (b) more important, whether the effect of the President's interpretative statement following the enactment of the bill was an invasion of the prerogatives of the legislative branch, if it should be considered substituting Presidential conceptions for Congress' will and intent in the law.

These significant questions were presented to the committee by two of its distinguished Members, the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER]. These two men, as the Senate knows, had in subcommittee performed intensive and exhaustive work on the portal-to-portal bill, the equal of which, as I have previously stated, I had rarely seen in my 8 years in the Senate.

However, I personally raised a doubt as to whether the Judiciary Committee should question the Presidential message as the two Senators suggested. But events since the suggestion by the two Senators was made have confirmed the worst fears that they rightly felt for the integrity of our checks-and-balances system of government. Moreover, these events have convinced me that my own judgment in the matter, in underestimating the harmful consequences of the Presidential message, was unwarranted.

RECENT DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE ACTION

Several months ago, the Department of Justice filed a petition for Government intervention in cases pending before the United States District Court for the Northern District of California. These cases involved the alleged failure on the part of employers to compute properly and pay overtime compensation under the Fair Labor Standards Act, with a resultant liability running from $20,000,000 to $50,000,000. The greater portion of that amount would be reimbursable from the Government because the employer was operating during most of the period under cost plus contracts with various Government agencies.

Five days after the Portal-to-Portal Act was signed by the President, a Department of Justice representative moved to amend the Government's answer so as to set forth a defense permitted by section 9 of the Portal-to-Portal Act. That defense related to good-faith reliance on administrative rulings, as well as good-faith reliance on an administrative-enforcement policy which, in effect, was a policy of not enforcing the act with respect to the issues involved in this case.

The motion was allowed by the court on May 22 but, and here is the significant point: 5 days thereafter the Department of Justice representative moved to strike the amended answer allowed by the court and substitute therefor another defense. This defense relied solely upon affirmative administrative rulings. It abandoned completely any defense which was available to the Government under the portion of the act relating to good-faith reliance on enforcement policy.

I understand that the Department of Justice had sent out instructions to its representative for the May 27 amendment, following consultations with the Labor Department.

I ask that the original amendment of May 19 and the subsequent amendment of May 27 be printed following my remarks.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the amendments to the Government's answer were ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(See exhibits A and B.)

Mr. WILEY. The effect of the May 27 amendment in its failure to assert legal defenses might obviously lay the Government open for a tremendous liability, not only in these California cases but in innumerable other cases which may involve claims upon the Government aggregating hundreds of millions of dollars. In summary, the Department of Justice is ignoring certain defenses which Congress has made available to it under the Portal-to-Portal Act, but which the President construed in his message as not being available to the Department.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. If I may conclude briefly, I shall be glad to yield.

REASONS FOR PROTEST

I protest this interpretation of legislation on the part of the Chief Executive and the subsequent action by the executive departments because—

(A) I believe that the Department of Justice should interpose every legal defense available to it in protection of the United States Government from these claims.

(B) If the Presidential message with its conflicting interpretations of the law—as compared with those of the Congress—is allowed to go unnoticed, it will set a dangerous precedent for the President in the future, in effect, to set aside the congressional will and intent. Moreover, it will, in effect, give him an item veto over individual phases of legislation, which the Constitution never intended.

(C) If the Presidential message were to go unnoticed, and if its interpretation of legislation should be adopted by administrative departments and courts, it would be a step toward the undermining of our entire constitutional system wherein each of the three coordinate branches of Government is supposed to exercise its jurisdiction independently.

Mr. President, I ask that a more extensive statement of the history of this case be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD.

(Subsequently Mr. WILEY withdrew his request that the statement be printed in the RECORD.)

Mr. WILEY. In conclusion, I may say that I shall ask the Senate Judiciary Committee to examine this whole problem at length and to consider inviting the Secretary of Labor and the Attorney General to give a full explanation of their actions.

I am now very happy to yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I wanted to inquire as to whether or not the interpretation now being made by the Attorney General is the interpretation that was set forth in the President's message?

Mr. WILEY. Substantially so; and contrary to the interpretation outlined by the joint managers of the House and Senate when they issued their conference report; and, I believe, contrary to the language of the statute itself. The amendment which was originally granted by the court, as I said, raised the issue of the defense of good-faith reliance on enforcement policy. For some reason, after the President's message had come in, the Department of Justice then was instructed to again amend the answer, and to eliminate the defense of good-faith reliance on enforcement policy.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, as I understand, in the first instance, the Attorney General was following the law.

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. He filed an answer following the interpretation of the law as the Senator sees it, and as the report indicates that it should be?

Mr. WILEY. That is correct.

Mr. FERGUSON. But, after the President sent his message to Congress, the Attorney General changed his idea, and took the ideas from the President's message, following that rather than his previous interpretation. Is that correct?

Mr. WILEY. Yes, that is substantially correct. I should like to call attention to page 16 of the conference report on the Portal-to-Portal Act. The language is as I now quote:

> It should be noted that under both sections 9 and 10 an employer will be relieved from liability, in an action by an employee, because of reliance in good faith on an administrative practice or enforcement policy; only: (1) where such practice or policy was based on the ground that an act or omission was not a violation of the act, or (2) where a practice or policy of not enforcing the act with respect to acts or omissions led the employer to believe in good faith that such acts or omissions were not violations of the act.

I have introduced into the RECORD the two answers but, to simplify the matter, it is clear that what has been done here is that the Government has abandoned, in its second amended answer, any defense which is available to it under the portion of the act relating to good-faith-reliance on enforcement policy.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a further question?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. Has not a similar question been raised in the matter brought before the Senate by the able junior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] as to the Government failing to file certain pleas in portal-to-portal cases, and is not an investigation now under way by the Committee on the Judiciary of that particular set of circumstances?

Mr. WILEY. The Senator is correct. The chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary appointed a subcommittee, of which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. MOORE] is chairman, and that subcommittee is now investigating what purports to be general claims that for years, when suits were brought, the Government has neglected to set up defenses which were available. After taking this matter up with the Committee on the Judiciary, if it is agreeable to the committee I expect to refer the matter to the subcommittee, of which, I understand, the junior Senator from Michigan is also a member.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for another question?

Mr. WILEY. Yes.

Mr. FERGUSON. The able Senator from Wisconsin is familiar with the fact that we have had great difficulty in securing the facts to ascertain exactly what has been done by the Department of Justice in portal-to-portal pay cases.

Mr. WILEY. The Committee on the Judiciary, which is handling over 30 percent of the bills in the Senate, has the same amount of help as committees which are handling a good deal lesser amount of work, say from 3 to 5 percent of the bills in the Senate. The result is that we find ourselves in the position of having practically no investigators available, and certainly a committee which has the amount of work to do that the Committee on the Judiciary has, should have and I hope will have additional funds allotted to it.

Pursuant to direction from the committee I submitted the other day a resolution providing for $45,000 additional which would provide means to employ efficient investigators so the committee could actively look into these matters which we think are of tremendous concern to the country. We have other matters involving penitentiaries which must be investigated. There are two or three other subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary which, if their work is to be really efficient, must be furnished effective investigators.

Mr. President, a statement was prepared by the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], and the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], which I shall ask to have printed in the RECORD, but which I seem to have mislaid. Perhaps the Senator from Kentucky has the statement. I wish to say that the statement, as I said before, was considered by the Committee on the Judiciary. The committee took no formal action. Some of the members of the committee thought that perhaps it was not wise to enter into any controversy in the matter. But the two Senators I mentioned had foresight. They sensed that perhaps the very intent of the message was to do just what has been accomplished. I for one did not sense it in that way. I acknowledge that I was remiss in not having the prescience they had.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. I may call the attention of the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin to the fact that the matter of the issuance of this statement was before the committee on two occasions, the latest of which was yesterday. If my memory serves me correctly, the matter was laid on the table for consideration by the full committee on next Monday. In other words, because of the absence of a quorum of the committee it was decided that we should not issue the statement as a committee statement until a quorum was present and had voted it out.

I am therefore somewhat surprised to find the chairman of the committee acting here on the floor contrary to what I know was the intent of the full committee. The distinguished chairman knows that I do not violently disagree with the legal interpretation which the statement places on the Portal-to-Portal Act. I am not in agreement with the interpretation which the executive department has placed on the act. I made the statement in the committee that I perhaps would not object to the statement being reported out. What I say now is that when our committee has under consideration an item so important as this, which involves the President of the United States and the Congress of the United States, it deserves the action of the full committee, and I do not believe it is proper for the chairman to put the statement in the RECORD this afternoon before the committee has had a chance to act on it, as was our understanding of yesterday.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am very happy to hear the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island state that he does not agree with the President in his conclusion. I want to set the Senator straight. I am not putting the statement in as a statement of the committee. I am putting the statement in as the statement of myself, endorsing fully the conclusions of the distinguished Senator from Kentucky and the distinguished Senator from Missouri, who spearheaded the portal-to-portal fight on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. WILEY. In a moment I shall be glad to yield. I want to say further that we did take the matter up in committee yesterday, but, because at the time we took it up there were only six Senators present, we were not able to take action on it under the rules. But, Mr. President, since that time the information I have given has come to me from California, and the pleadings have come to me, and I can assure the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island that yesterday when we were considering this matter I had no knowledge of the significant step that was taken in the court of California, which, if we permit it to pass unnoticed, to my mind, will represent a serious threat to the legislative integrity. I am speaking solely for myself, not representing the committee. I have called attention to the fact, as I think it is an obligation of a Senator of the United States to do.

I feel that the check and balances system of the Government is the most important thing that keeps the Government together. We must have a legislative body separate and distinct, with integrity. We must have a judicial body separate and distinct, with integrity. And we must have a similar executive body. In my 8 years as Senator I have never gone over into the other field and criticized the Executive when he performed executive functions. But when and if the Executive steps into the field of the legislative body of which I am a member, I feel it is my sworn duty to call attention to the facts involved, and let the public itself judge of the matter.

I now yield to the Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I am not at all acquainted with what happened in the courts of California or what orders were issued by the Department of Justice. Apparently it is something that happened since 12 o'clock yesterday noon. I know, however, that this was a matter of such grave importance that in committee on two occasions we decided to postpone its consideration until the full committee was present. We were acting on this matter in executive session. I believe that if something has occurred which requires the immediate attention of the committee on the subject which the committee had under consideration, the distinguished chairman of the committee could have gotten us together very quickly this afternoon.

But am I to understand, Mr. President, that hereafter any matter that we have under consideration in the executive councils of the Committee on the Judiciary can be made the subject of a speech on the floor of the Senate by any member of the committee. Am I to understand that henceforth nothing is to be regarded as sacred and secure within the confines of that committee until the committee has finished with it, or that every Member will have the right to express his own personal views prior to consideration by the full committee? If that is the rule, it will be all right with me. I shall be only too happy to abide by it.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am sorry that my distinguished colleague was not present when I opened my statement. I am only offering the statement of the two Senators——

Mr. McGRATH. That is the statement under consideration by our committee. The Senator is now asking that it be placed in the RECORD. That is the very statement which our committee voted yesterday to hold over for consideration until a week from yesterday. It is no longer the statement of two members of the committee.

Mr. WILEY. I am sorry that there has been any misunderstanding about this matter.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. In a moment. I have a responsibility, and I do not yield that responsibility to anyone else. My responsibility came when I found that in the courts of California the executive branch of the Government was failing to plead a defense which might mean millions of dollars lost to this country.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. WILEY. In a moment.

In relation to this particular instrument, which is the findings of the two Senators whom I have mentioned, on two different occasions we considered the matter in committee, and the committee refused to adopt those findings as its idea. One of those occasions was yesterday. When the question arose again yesterday we found that only 6 members of the committee were present. The chairman of the committee ruled that no action reporting the findings would be valid. That is why they were not reported.

On the other hand, if my distinguished colleague from Rhode Island feels that this instrument, which I have not read, and which is nothing but the findings of the distinguished Senators I have mentioned, in any way invades his personal prerogative or the prerogative of the Committee on the Judiciary, I can let the matter go for a week.

The statement of the two Senators is not necessary to establish the point which I was making. The point which I was making was not discussed in committee. Neither the committee nor I nor the Senator from Kentucky knew anything about it. It was brought up afterward, when the message came from California, and when these pleadings were placed in my hands. The only reason why I asked that this statement be printed in the RECORD was to confirm the solid judgment of two of my associates, the Senator from Missouri and the Senator from Kentucky. If any Senator wishes to object, I shall be glad to withdraw the request.

I now yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, are we to understand that the chairman of the Judiciary Committee now seeks to affect some action in the courts in which these pleadings are alleged to have been filed?

Mr. WILEY. Not at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. Is the chairman of the Judiciary Committee of the Senate now trying to affect proceedings in the courts of California?

Mr. WILEY. Not at all.

Mr. McCARRAN. If not, then why does the Senator bring to the floor of the Senate the pleadings of which he complains?

Mr. WILEY. I am sorry that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle cannot see my purpose.

Mr. McCARRAN. Why were not those instruments presented to the committee?

Mr. WILEY. I told the Senator why. They were not placed in my hands until this morning.

Mr. McCARRAN. Well and good. Could they not lie over until Monday, the regular meeting day of the committee?

Mr. WILEY. They will be presented to the committee in due time.

Mr. McCARRAN. Why are they presented to the United States Senate before the Senator presents them to his committee for action?

Mr. WILEY. For the reason which I have outlined. I feel that the people of the country should understand what is going on and the techniques which are being employed. If there is any place where the people should be made cognizant of what is going on it is on the floor of the Senate. That is the reason I brought the matter up. I have no apology to make to the Senator or to anyone else.

Mr. McCARRAN. Does the Senator mean by his speech on the floor of the United States Senate that he wants to affect the action of the courts in California? Is that his object?

Mr. WILEY. I have told the Senator that my purpose is not to affect the action of the courts. The purpose is to straighten out some of the executive officers of the Government.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. I think it is only fair to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin to make a statement in response to the observations of the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH]. I think he will agree, and that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. McCARRAN] will agree, that with respect to the action which was taken in the committee concerning the report, the events which occurred in the committee were as follows:

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] proposed, at one or two meetings of the committee, that the findings be reported. No action was taken. The distinguished Senator from Nevada—and I believe also the Senator from Rhode Island—suggested that no action be taken by the committee, but that members of the committee who desired to sign the report as individuals might sign the report and let it be made their report to the Senate.

Yesterday the Senator from Missouri was absent, and at his request I made a motion in the committee that the report be made by the committee to the Senate. It was suggested that a quorum was not present. As I remember, no action of any kind was taken.

I believe I am correct in saying that again the Senator from Rhode Island suggested that in his opinion such action would not be wise, but again suggested that such action could be taken by individual members of the committee. I think the Senator from Rhode Island will agree with me in my statement of the facts.

I contend that no action was taken, and that the Senator from Wisconsin has pursued the very course which the distinguished Senator from Nevada and the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island proposed several times in the committee.

Mr. McCARRAN and Mr. McGRATH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. WILEY. I shall be glad to yield in a moment, when the Senator from Kentucky shall have concluded.

Mr. COOPER. As to the other matter, I feel that the Senator from Wisconsin is simply bringing to the attention of the Senate the point that the statement of the President when he signed the portal-to-portal bill did not appear—at least to some members of the committee—to be an accurate interpretation of the intent of the committee and of the Senate when the bill was passed.

Mr. McCARRAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McCARRAN. The Senator from Kentucky has mentioned the name of the Senator from Nevada as having stated that I favored the report being made by individual Senators. I did nothing of the kind. I distinctly said, and I now say on the floor of the Senate, that for the Judiciary Committee to attempt to make a response to the President's message would be merely bickering with the Executive. Suppose the President should come back with another message, replying to ours, and then we should make further reply to the President. That is all it would amount to. The courts, in applying the rule of construction, will pay no attention to what we say after the bill is enacted.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. COOPER. Without attempting to argue the point as to what would occur between the Senate and the Executive branch of the Government, I again state that so far as the procedure in the committee is concerned—and I make this statement in support of the chairman of the committee—I distinctly remember that the Senator from Nevada stated that the proposed report should not be the action of the committee, but he stated, as I understood him, that he saw no reason why individual members should not sign the report.

Mr. McCARRAN. I made no mention of individuals whatsoever. I was not present at the meeting last Monday. I was present the previous Monday.

Mr. COOPER. That is correct.

Mr. McCARRAN. And I objected to its being sent in as a message from the committee, because it was not anything to be said by the Committee on the Judiciary. It reduces the dignity of the Committee on the Judiciary to a level with boys' play. That is all it is.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am sorry that that last statement has been made by the distinguished Senator from Nevada. We ought to be men enough to be able to differ without calling names. We go to church on Sunday. The Senator goes to his church and I go to mine. We have gotten above the point where we quarrel about religion. But when there is an election approaching we refer to the other fellow's actions as "boys' play." I have not been one who has indulged in boys' play in the Senate, but when I sense an obligation I have the right at least to be told that I have an honest conviction on it, and it is not boys' play. I told the Senate that the Congress of the United States passed a law; and it is the function of the Congress, under the Constitution, to legislate; it is not the function of the Executive to legislate. The Executive followed the course which has been pursued for approximately 14 years of infringing upon the legislative branch. We had during that time a period of "must" legislation, when men marched like little school boys to the crack of the whip. But, by all the gods, it will not happen again. When we dare to rise and say that the Executive not only tells us what we mean, in a message, but his minions go into court to carry out that intent, I say the people of this country have a right to know what is going on, and we should let public opinion be the deciding factor as to who is "playing horse" or engaging in "boys' play."

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LODGE in the chair). Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Rhode Island?

Mr. WILEY. I yield.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I simply want to keep the record straight, and in response to the explanation just made by the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER], I should like to review briefly how the issue arose and my position on it in the committee.

As the Senate will recall, the President of the United States sent a message here explaining his reasons why he saw fit to sign the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947. In that message the President attempted to place certain interpretations upon what the law meant. I have no hesitation in saying, Mr. President, that I do not agree with the interpretations placed on the act in the message of the President. That is aside from the point, however. The message was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for its consideration. The distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and the distinguished Senator from Kentucky [Mr. COOPER] undertook to draw up an answer to the Presidential statement. The reason they wanted the Committee on the Judiciary to approve of the answer was because they felt that the President's statement had become a part of the legislative history of the act, and that the courts would, within every right and reason, accept the Presidential interpretation as set forth in his message interpreting the act. Mr. President, I want it understood that I do not believe that any statement by the President, when he either signs or vetoes an act of Congress, becomes any part of its legislative history. The last chapter of legislative history, so far as my belief goes, is written and closed when the bill leaves the Halls of the Legislature. Therefore I took the position in the committee that nothing was to be gained by the Senate's entering into a controversy with the President over what was the meaning of the language which it had written into the portal-to-portal legislation; that we should accept the President's message and place it in our files and allow the courts to make the interpretations. I stated to the committee that, so far as I was concerned, for the committee to issue its statement, which in effect told how far the portal-to-portal legislation went, how far beyond what even the President of the United States himself thought, would be more than justification for the position which those of us had taken who opposed the legislation.

I am personally happy that the majority sees fit now to place this statement in the RECORD, because I think labor is going to be amazed when it realizes fully what the Senate Committee on the Judiciary itself thought was the full intent and purpose of the legislation and how far it goes beyond what even the President of the United States thought. I am delighted that the statement is going to be printed in the RECORD so that all may read it.

The point which brings up this controversy and which upsets me no little is the fact that the consideration of this very important matter was before the committee in executive session. We were trying to determine the wisdom of our committee's entering into this controversy with the President of the United States. There were some suggestions that if it was thought necessary that a statement be issued it could be issued by those members of the committee who felt so strongly about it, without the committee's taking an official position. I was not one of those who made that suggestion. The Senator from Kentucky will recall that my position was that I did not particularly care whether the committee issued the statement or not. I saw some advantage to our side in its being issued. But I thought it was very unwise to issue the statement. However, I was willing to abide by the majority action. We discussed the matter at great length yesterday and finally decided that inasmuch as we did not have a quorum present the matter should go over until next Monday, and it was made, as I understood when I left the committee, the special order of business for our consideration next Monday.

I have been asked many questions by the press concerning this controversy, because they all know about it. The proposed statement was distributed to all members of the committee. Information has leaked out of our committee that we were considering such a matter. It seemed that we should have given it full consideration before the statement was placed in the RECORD.

I want to say to the distinguished Senator from Wisconsin, whom I call one of my best friends in this Chamber and whom I admire greatly and under whom I am happy and pleased to serve on the committee, that I regret that the controversy has risen. I think it somewhat improper that the statement, which forms the root and basis of a serious matter now under consideration, should be placed upon the public record before it has been given the final consideration of the committee.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I am very grateful to the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island for his very friendly and conciliatory remarks, and I want to say that after consultation with the Senator from Kentucky I withdraw my request. Although the Senator from Rhode Island is perfectly willing that the statement go into the RECORD, I withdraw my request to have the statement placed in the RECORD. I hope the Senator from Rhode Island understands me in this regard. The purpose of my remarks was not primarily to have the statement put into the RECORD; it was in confirmation of my general thesis that the two distinguished Senators who worked so hard were correct in surmising that the President's message had something in it which I did not think was of consequence, and I was wrong. My real object in rising today was to bring to the attention of the country something that grew out of the President's message, which I never dreamed would grow out of it, and that is, that after he had made the statement we should see direct effects in the courts of our country involving millions, and in many instances it is claimed hundreds of millions of dollars, in suits.

Again I thank the Senator for his gracious remarks.

Mr. McGRATH. Let me say to the Senator that I do not intend to object to his placing the statement in the RECORD; and if he offers it for the RECORD, I shall make no objection. If he does not offer it for the RECORD, I shall be glad to consider it with him in committee next Monday.

Since the controversy has gone this far, I wish to assure the distinguished chairman of the committee that I shall assuredly vote that it be made a statement of our committee, because I think the issue now before the country requires that the committee make the statement.

EXHIBIT A

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, SOUTHERN DIVISION—CHARLES CARDINALE, ET AL., PLAINTIFFS, V. W. R. GRACE & CO., DEFENDANTS—NO. 26063S

(Motion of defendant W. R. Grace & Co. to amend answer)

Defendant above named moves the court to amend the answer on file in the above action by adding thereto the following additional defenses:

The acts or omissions, and each of them, of this defendant, complained of by plaintiffs, and each of them, in this action were in good faith in conformity with and in reliance on the administrative ruling, approval, and interpretation of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor, made and given on or about December 1938, that the straight time rate of pay paid by defendant to plaintiffs herein was the regular rate of pay within the meaning of the act and that overtime payments by defendant to plaintiffs were overtime compensation within the meaning of the act; and as a result thereof and pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, this defendant is not liable to plaintiffs, or any of them, for any of the acts or omissions complained of in this action.

Ninth defense

The acts or omissions, and each of them, of this defendant, complained of by plaintiffs, and each of them, in this action were in good faith in conformity with and in reliance on that certain administrative ruling, approval, and interpretation known as Interpretative Bulletin No. 4 issued by the Administrator of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor; and as a result thereof and pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, this defendant is not liable to plaintiffs, or any of them, for any of the acts or omissions complained of in this action.

Tenth defense

The acts or omissions, and each of them, of this defendant, complained of by plaintiffs, and each of them, in this action were in good faith in conformity with and in reliance on the administrative practice and enforcement policy of the Wage and Hour Division, Department of Labor, with respect to the class of employers to which this defendant now belongs and has belonged for all times mentioned in this action; and as a result thereof and pursuant to the provisions of section 9 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, this defendant is not liable to plaintiffs, or any of them, for any of the acts or omissions complained of in this action.

Eleventh defense

Defendant refers to the allegations in the eighth, ninth, and tenth defense of this answer and incorporates said allegations in this defense by reference.

The acts or omissions, and each of them, by this defendant, giving rise to this action were in good faith, and this defendant at all of the times mentioned in this action had reasonable grounds for believing that the acts and omissions, and each of them, if any, of this defendant were not a violation or violations of the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended, and for this reason the court in the exercise of the discretion vested in it by the provisions of section 11 of the Portal to Portal Act of 1947 should award no liquidated damages to plaintiffs or either of them.

This motion is made upon the ground that the foregoing defenses are authorized by the Portal to Portal Act of 1947, approved May 14, 1947, and are part of this defendant's defense to this action.

Dated May 19, 1947.

EXHIBIT B

IN THE UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT OF CALIFORNIA, SOUTHERN DIVISION—CASTAGNASSO, PLAINTIFFS, V. PARR RICHMOND, DEFENDANT, NO. 25302–H

(Motion of defendant, Parr Richmond, to amend answer)

Defendant above named moves the court to amend the answer on file in the above action by striking therefrom the amendments thereto allowed by the court on May 22, 1947, and substituting therefor the following:

Eighth defense

This defendant alleges, as a defense under section 9 of the Portal to Portal Act of 1947, that it believed that, in respect of all cargoes where the overtime rates established by the collective bargaining contracts in effect during the period in suit were 1½ times the straight time rates established by the contracts for such cargoes, the contract straight time rates were the regular rates for handling such cargoes within the meaning of those words in the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, and that payments at such contract overtime rates for handling such cargoes fully discharged all its obligations under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 for handling such cargoes. This defendant paid the plaintiffs in accordance with this belief. This belief, and payment in accordance therewith, were in good faith in conformity with and in reliance on the administrative ruling, approval, and interpretation of the Wage and Hour Division through its administrator, its regional director, and its regional attorney in 1938 and in conformity with and in reliance on the regulations, rulings, and interpretations contained in the Wage and Hour Division's Interpretive Bulletin No. 4. Wherefore this defendant says that by virtue of the provisions of section 9 of the Portal to Portal Act of 1947 it is not subject to any liability under the Fair Labor Standards Act for failure to pay compensation for handling such cargoes on any other basis.

This defendant says that it paid the plaintiffs in accordance with the terms of the collective-bargaining contracts in effect during the period in suit, except that in certain instances it paid the plaintiffs more overtime than the contracts called for—that is to say, whenever in any workweek a plaintiff had worked 40 straight-time hours and thereafter performed further work in periods which, under the contracts, called only for payment at straight-time rates, this defendant paid for such work at contract overtime rates because it believed that it was required to do so by the Fair Labor Standards Act. This defendant alleges that it believed in good faith and on reasonable grounds that payment as above stated was not a violation of the Fair Labor Standards Act, but on the contrary was a full compliance with its requirements. Wherefore this defendant prays that the court, in the exercise of the discretion vested in it by section 11 of the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, award no liquidated damages against this defendant in the event that it finds and rules that such payments fell short of full compliance with this defendant's obligations under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

This motion is made upon the ground that the foregoing defenses are authorized by the Portal-to-Portal Act of 1947, approved May 14, 1947, and are part of this defendant's defense to this action.

Dated May 27, 1947.

RECESS

Mr. WHITE. I move that the Senate stand in recess until 12 o'clock noon tomorrow.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.), as in executive session, the Senate took a recess until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 4, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate June 3 (legislative day of April 21), 1947:

DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE

Peyton Ford to be an Assistant Attorney General.

UNITED STATES DISTRICT JUDGES

ROBERT EWING THOMASON to be United States district judge for the western district of Texas.

Albert V. Bryan to be United States district judge for the eastern district of Virginia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

TUESDAY, JUNE 3, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HALLECK.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, the wise may bring their learning and the wealthy their riches, but we would bring the gifts which the poorest may offer, an honest and a contrite heart. Lord God, help us each day to hold fast these richest of offerings.

As we approach our labor, may it find us renewed in vigor and unafraid. O put us in league with all that is excellent and which knows no compromise or expediency, turning from any truants who fail in the way of uprightness and honesty of purpose. Deeper than we have known and clearer than we have seen, do Thou reveal and impress us with our responsibility and social duty, which demands that a public office is a public trust. As guardians of truth, of honor, and human rights, may we ever protect the sanctity of liberty, of peace, and the right to work. Break down the walls that separate men and enable them to serve one another.

For our Master's sake, Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 2436. An act making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CORDON, Mr. REED, Mr. BRIDGES, Mr. SALTONSTALL, Mr. FLANDERS, Mr. TYDINGS, Mr. MCKELLAR, and Mr. HAYDEN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed, with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 3203. An act relative to maximum rents on housing accommodations; to repeal certain provisions of Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the foregoing bill, requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. BUCK, Mr. MCCARTHY, Mr. CAIN, Mr. FULBRIGHT, and Mr. TAYLOR to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed a joint resolution of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. WILSON of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial from the Bedford Daily Times-Mail.

Mr. ROBERTSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a syndicated article on the labor conference report by David Lawrence and in the other to include an article from Aviation News of May 12.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD in two instances and include extraneous matter.

Mr. BUTLER asked and was given permission to extend his own remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, there have been various suggestions to the House as to what the President might do in respect to certain legislation. Last night I took occasion to read through the conference committee print on the labor bill which we will probably have up for consideration and action tomorrow.

I want to say just this: That if any political lieutenants of the President or any so-called leaders of labor brandish old hackneyed phrases about vicious or drastic labor legislation, and browbeat the President into vetoing this bill as it now comes to us, the American people will have witnessed a bunch of gangsters entering the White House and holding up the President with a wooden gun.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. RANKIN. Then I would like to have the gentleman explain how they "browbeat" the House conferees into accepting the Senate version.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Well, I think the only reason that somebody suggested was that they had to do something like that to try to get it through the White House. The gentleman should remember that the conferees are accepting the bill, not vetoing it. The bill has some values, but it definitely is not an antilabor bill and certainly he will be scared of a shadow who fears to accept it on that ground.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I trust that before the President acts on this bill he be allowed to see what it is. It is my understanding that the conference report is coming up in the House tomorrow, and if it has been printed yet, I cannot find a copy of it. It was not filed last night. It will probably be filed tonight, and we will get to our offices tomorrow at 7:30 or 9:30 or 10:30, and we may have a copy of the conference report then, which we are supposed to vote on soon after 12 o'clock. Frankly, I have been around here a good while, and I would like to know what is in this conference report before I vote upon it. Now, there is a committee print being circulated around here of what is supposed to be the bill, but no conference report is available to anybody. I would like to see what the statement of the managers on the part of the House and the Senate about this bill is before I vote on it.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include the second broadcast by our late colleague, the Honorable Fred Bradley, dealing with the Panama Canal.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. SPRINGER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Washington Times-Herald.

Mr. BRADLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial appearing in the Long Beach Independent.

THE NATIONAL DEBT

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I, too, am like the minority leader. I do not know what is in this conference report yet. But this is not the first time that I have been placed in such a position. For the last 10 or 12 years we have been in the same position when he was Speaker of the House. Time after time after time the Democratic House committees brought in conference reports and we were supposed to vote on them without any time at all for study. Now you have been notified the report will be ready tomorrow morning and you can look them over 4 hours before you have to vote on the conference report.

But, I want to call the attention of the minority leader to the Treasury statement of May 27, showing that the national debt at that time was $258,304,565,000. Who is responsible for that condition? For 15 years the Democrats and New Dealers have been building this debt up until we have now the greatest national debt that this country has ever known. We are going to have the toughest time we ever had if we do not cut down expenses now and try to balance the budget and try to reduce this debt that they have built up.

In 1940 we appropriated for the Interior Department $71,000,000—now it takes $600,000,000. It cost $18,000,000 to run the Department of Labor in 1940, for 1948 they want $356,000,000 for the Labor Department. Other departments of Government are just as exhorbitant in expenditures. Let us look at the personnel. The Department of State had 5,400 employees in 1939. They want money enough today to employ over 25,000 employees. The Department of Justice employed over 19,000 people in 1941. They now want to employ over 23,000 employees. The Department of Commerce employed 14,000 people before the war; now they want to employ over 40,000 employees. Is it any wonder we Republicans want to cut down expenses of Government and lay off employees. The taxpayers and voters gave us a mandate to do the job. Let us do it.

SERVICEMEN'S READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1944

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1135) to extend for 1 year certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years, for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know what this is all about.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I may say to the gentleman that this simply extends for 1 year the provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years. The present bill expires at the end of this month. Under the decentralization plan there are 1,468 branch regional, subregional, and other offices. These field offices are quartered in 1,685 separate buildings.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Is this something General Bradley wants?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. He has asked for it by letter to the Speaker of the House. It has the approval of the Budget. Our Committee on Veterans' Affairs reported the bill out unanimously.

I have asked to take up the Senate bill as the Senate already has passed the bill unanimously, and time is so important.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I withdraw my reservation of objection, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, has this problem been taken up with the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds? Do not they have something to do with the providing of space in the District of Columbia?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I understand General Bradley has done everything possible along that line with all the various departments.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I do not recall its having come up. I should like to know what they are using the space for that they already have, how much of that space is being utilized for concessions and being rented out to private enterprise, and how much money the Veterans' Administration is getting from the rental of space that the taxpayers are giving them, and using that to subsidize their cafeterias as they are doing in the Pentagon.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The general has assured us that this is not anything that is not necessary.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I am afraid we should know more about this matter before it passes in this manner. I am going to have to object to the consideration of the bill at this time.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Will the gentleman not allow it to go through? It will be more expensive, probably, if this bill is not passed promptly. The present bill expires the end of the month.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I think the bill may well be held over another day. We are receiving from Woodward & Lothrop and from Walgreen's drug store a million dollars. That is received by the War Department in the Pentagon. Yet they are occupying space in 17 other buildings, and that money is going to subsidize the employees over there to pay for their food, $1,000,000.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. May I say to the gentleman that most of these facilities are not in the city of Washington. They are scattered all over the country.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Would the gentlewoman object to holding this up for one more day?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. If the gentleman wishes to object, that is his privilege.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. I should like to have one more day, until we can learn more about this.

Mr. PHILLIPS. If the gentleman will yield, may I ask the gentlewoman if she has a list of these facilities?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not have the list here.

Mr. PHILLIPS. Could that be inserted in the RECORD so that, if the gentleman objects and the bill is held over, the Members may have an opportunity to see that list?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I am very sure that could be secured, and I shall be very glad to insert it.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Can the gentlewoman tell me why this bill did not come before the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. I do not think it has been the custom to bring these things before that committee. I know General Bradley has gone to all the various departments and asked what they could give him in the way of space. I know that from past experience.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Will the gentlewoman withdraw her request until tomorrow?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. The gentleman has reserved the right to object. If he objects to it today, that settles it.

Mr. WILSON of Indiana. Then I am going to have to object, Mr. Speaker.

CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS

Mr. ARENDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order on tomorrow, Calendar Wednesday, be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. EBERHARTER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by Mark Sullivan on the subject of the wool bill, which appeared in the Washington Post.

Mr. WILLIAMS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. PHILBIN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a speech he made on Memorial Day.

Mr. SMATHERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and include editorials.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include an analysis of the Taft-Hartley bill as reported by the committee of conference. This may exceed the limit by a page or two, but I ask that despite that fact I may be permitted to include it in my remarks.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, whose analysis is it?

Mr. MARCANTONIO. It is by Mr. Lee Pressman, general counsel of the CIO.

Mr. RANKIN. Do you not think it would be better to insert the report of the conferees in the RECORD instead of having the CIO come in and insert its criticism at extra expense to the Government?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a radio address.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that after the disposition of business on the Speaker's desk and the conclusion of special orders heretofore granted I may address the House for 5 minutes today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from North Carolina?

There was no objection.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. BATTLE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD.

Mr. KEFAUVER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a Memorial Day address.

Mr. KEATING asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in regard to a bill he is introducing today.

OLD-AGE SECURITY

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. EDWIN ARTHUR HALL. Mr. Speaker, one of the most inspiring parts of our Constitution is contained in the preamble which guarantees to all citizens the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. Yet, when men and women, 9 out of 10 of them in this country, reach the age of 60, they are unable to pursue that happiness because of limited means or the lack of wherewithal.

Therefore, I am advocating immediate consideration and passage of a universal old-age pension plan such as the one outlined by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. ANGELL] in his bill, H. R. 16. This is popularly known as the Townsend plan. Our hope is that not just one group or a few will be included in our social-security system, but all groups regardless of race, religion, or color, and regardless of occupation. All citizens of the land should have the opportunity to enjoy the fruits of a well-earned retirement and the results of all their productive years so that they can live happily in their old age.

We can successfully fight off communism by making our American system work. The most natural desire of everyone is to have security in his declining years. Reasonable retirement for all is the answer, especially when such retirement is actuarily sound.

The millions of Americans who have reached 60 or who are approaching this ripe age deserve consideration. They have the right to anticipate their brightest days to come.

With security guaranteed, they can emulate the experience of Rabbi Ben Ezra who in his wisdom said in Browning's poem:

> Grow old along with me!
> The best is yet to be,
> The last of life, for which
> The first was made.

THE SUGAR SITUATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks and include therein a letter I have written to the Department of Agriculture regarding the sugar situation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I am working again trying to get the Secretary of Agriculture to make sugar available for the housewives so that they can do their canning.

I said in part of a letter which I wrote to the Secretary of Agriculture:

Unless action is taken immediately by your Department and permit the use of some of the sugar by releasing the rigid restrictions for the purchase of it, we soon will hear of the destruction of sugar similar to the recent destruction of tons of food potatoes because of foolish bungling. Housewives in angry, protesting letters are daily asking why sugar is not available to preserve surplus food in their homes and factories, as was always their custom before the restrictive regulations.

I will say that even with the regulations the housewives in the past have been allowed a certain amount of sugar with which they may can.

The letter reads further:

Your Department should immediately make additional sugar available for canning and preserving in order to save tons and tons of food now available.

The letter in full is as follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., June 3, 1947.

Hon. CLINTON P. ANDERSON,
Secretary of Agriculture,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SECRETARY: I am writing to you again asking that you make additional sugar available to persons, families, and industrial users in the United States. From daily reports throughout the world enormous supplies of sugar are available, warehouses are full and overflowing, sugar is piling up on the docks, and transportation will soon be unable to handle the tremendous supply. Unless action is taken immediately by your Department to permit the use of some of this sugar by releasing the rigid restrictions for the purchase of it, we soon will hear of destruction of the sugar similar to the recent destruction of tons of food potatoes because of foolish bungling.

The press in sensible, logical editorials, housewives in long, angry, protesting letters, daily ask why sugar is not available for preserving their surplus food in the homes and the factories, as was always their custom before these restrictive regulations. Your Department should immediately make additional sugar available for canning and preserving in order to save the tons and tons of food now available and becoming available in increasing amounts each day. To permit the waste of this crop of sugar with the hordes of starving peoples throughout the world is criminal. Unless action is taken immediately by your Department to grant additional sugar for canning and preserving surplus foods, I shall ask the Congress to take the necessary action.

Very sincerely yours,

(Mrs. John Jacob Rogers).

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, since today is the birthday of Jefferson Davis, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include a speech by Bishop Galloway.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

FORMER SECRETARY BYRNES AND THE MOTION-PICTURE INDUSTRY

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I was very much surprised if not shocked to read a United Press report this morning that the film industry has employed former Secretary of State Byrnes to represent it before the Committee on Un-American Activities.

Mr. Eric Johnston, president of the film industry or the Motion Picture Producers Association, announces:

Byrnes' first assignment will be to champion the screen's freedom of expression before the House Committee on Un-American Activities which opens a public hearing on the film industry in Washington this month.

We are determined—

Said Johnston—

that subversive propaganda, Government pressure, or political censorship will never undermine freedom of the screen.

Mr. Speaker, the American people today are beginning to learn where this Communist propaganda in our motion-picture industry comes from, and the House Committee on Un-American Activities is not going to be intimidated in its effort to expose the Communist propaganda in motion pictures and to bring out legislation to stop it.

The "freedom of the screen," as Mr. Johnston calls it, does not surpass in importance the protection of American institutions, or the protection of the children of this country against the insidious poisons carried by many of these pictures.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

THE PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is the day for the call of the Private Calendar. The Clerk will call the first bill.

DIXIE MARGARINE CO.

The Clerk called the first bill (H. R. 354) for the relief of the Dixie Margarine Co., a Tennessee corporation, of Memphis, Tenn.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin and Mr. POTTS objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LT. COL. ORVILLE E. McKIM

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 559) for the relief of Lt. Col. Orville E. McKim.

Mr. DOLLIVER and Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin objected, and the bill, under the rule, was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

MARY LOMAS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1742) for the relief of Mary Lomas.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 19 (a) of the Immigration Act of February 5, 1917 (39 Stat. 889-890; 54 Stat. 1044; 8 U. S. C. 155), the Attorney General is authorized and directed to permit Mary Lomas, of Fairmont, W. Va., to remain permanently in the United States if she is found to be otherwise admissible under the provisions of the immigration laws other than quotas.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 9, after the period insert "Upon the enactment of this act the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper quota-control officer to deduct one number from the quota for Greece of the first year that the said quota is available."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MRS. INGA PATTERSON

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1152) for the relief of Mrs. Inga Patterson, widow of F. X. Patterson.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,375 to Mrs. Inga Patterson, widow of F. X. Patterson, of Washington, D. C., in full settlement of all claims against the United States for expenses incurred as a result of condemnation proceedings involving property of the said F. X. Patterson, Anacostia Road SE., Washington, D. C.: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATURALIZATION OF CERTAIN UNITED STATES ARMY PERSONNEL—YUGOSLAV FLIERS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 1652) to provide for the naturalization of certain United States Army personnel—Yugoslav fliers.

Mr. DEANE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Georgia?

There was no objection.

JAMES HARRY MARTIN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 617) for the relief of James Harry Martin.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That James Harry Martin, of Pontiac, Mich., be permitted to file an application with the Secretary of War for benefits under the World War Adjusted Compensation Act, as amended, on or before January 1, 1948, any time limit in such act for filing such an application to the contrary notwithstanding.

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. POTTS: On page 1, line 6, after the words "on or before", strike out "January 1, 1948" and insert in lieu thereof "July 1, 1949."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALLIED AVIATION CORP.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 631) for the relief of the Allied Aviation Corp.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Allied Aviation Corp., of Cockeysville, Md., the sum of $234,195.20 with interest thereon from November 1, 1943, to the date of payment, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for costs incurred and losses sustained in the creation and production of experimental amphibious gliders for the Navy Department in the prosecution of the war, the said costs and losses having been occasioned primarily by reason of the corporation's reliance upon representations, commitments, and assurances made in good faith by agents of and on behalf of the Government but which were not fulfilled: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with the prosecution and collection of this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$234,195.20 with interest thereon from November 1, 1943, to the date of payment" and insert in lieu thereof "$108,753.13."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MARVIN PETTUS

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 637) for the relief of Marvin Pettus.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Marvin Pettus, of Mansfield, Ark., the sum of $5,000, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for injuries sustained and damages suffered by him as result of being struck by an Army vehicle operated by Army personnel on the camp ground of Camp Chaffee, Ark., on the 15th day of December 1944, and said injuries having been caused by the negligent operation of said Army vehicle so as to cause it to run into the vehicle in which the said Marvin Pettus was riding: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

Page 1, line 6, strike out "$5,000" and insert "$1,536."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment.

Mr. POTTS. Mr. Speaker, I object.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair may say to the objectors that the question was put as to whether there was objection to the present consideration of the bill, and no objection was heard.

The question recurs on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

J. DON ALEXANDER

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 813) for the relief of J. Don Alexander.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. DOLLIVER and Mr. POTTS objected, and, under the rule, the bill was recommitted to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ESTATE OF ABRAM BANTA BOGERT

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 837) for the relief of the estate of Abram Banta Bogert.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the estate of the late Abram Banta Bogert the sum of $8,217.65, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for the personal injury, hospital and medical expenses, loss of earnings, property damage, and death of the said Abram Banta Bogert, as the result of an accident involving a United States Army truck driven by John G. Walter, Company D, One Hundred and Twenty-eighth Ordnance, Pine Camp, N. Y., on Route 9W in the town of Saugerties, Ulster County, N. Y., near pole No. 1515, about 4 miles north of the village of Saugerties, at about 4 o'clock on the afternoon of February 26, 1943: Provided, That no part of the amount appropriated in this act in excess of 10 percent thereof shall be paid or delivered to or received by any agent or attorney on account of services rendered in connection with this claim, and the same shall be unlawful, any contract to the contrary notwithstanding. Any person violating the provisions of this act shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction thereof shall be fined in any sum not exceeding $1,000.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 1, line 6, after the name "Bogert", strike out the bill down to the colon in line 5, page 2, and insert in lieu thereof "deceased, the sum of $6,117.65, in full settlement of all claims against the United States for personal injury and death of the said Abram Banta Bogert, Saugerties, N. Y., the medical, hospital, and burial expenses incurred by reason of such injury and death, and the property damage sustained as a result of an accident involving an Army truck, which occurred on Route 9–W near Saugerties, N. Y., on February 26, 1943."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LORENZO H. FROMAN

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 987) for the relief of Lorenzo H. Froman.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Lorenzo H. Froman, former owner of a certain farm consisting of 165 acres of land, more or less, near Camp Knox, in Hardin County, Ky., is, as such former owner, hereby authorized to bring suit against the United States of America to recover damages, if any, for loss or losses which he may have sustained or suffered, as such owner, by reason of establishment, construction, or maintenance of Camp Knox in the State of Kentucky. Jurisdiction is hereby conferred upon the District Court of the United States for the Western District of Kentucky to hear, consider, determine, and render judgment for the amount of any such damages, if any, as may be found to have been sustained or suffered by the said former owner of said farm, with the same right of appeal as in other cases, and notwithstanding any lapse of time or statute of limitations: Provided, That such action will be brought within 1 year from the date that this act shall become effective.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ESTATE OF NORMAN C. COBB ET AL.

The Clerk called the bill (H. R. 993) for the relief of the estate of Norman C. Cobb, Naomi R. Cobb, and Garland L. Cobb.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; and pending that motion I ask unanimous consent that general debate continue for the remainder of the day or until such time as there are no further requests for time. I may say I have spoken about this with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR], the ranking minority member, and he states there is no objection to the request.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. CANNON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, as I understand the gentleman's request there will be no occasion to read the bill today?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. We will read the first paragraph today, and, if possible, we would like to pass it.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I shall not object if the gentleman will confine his request to general debate here today. The Members leave and they do not know whether the bill will be read for amendment or not.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, we will read the first paragraph anyway.

Mr. CANNON. If the reading is confined to the first paragraph there will be no objection to the gentleman's request from this side of the aisle.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Michigan.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 3678, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 50 minutes, and I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and include certain tables compiled by me or under my direction.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I am presenting to the House of Representatives on behalf of the Appropritions Committee the military appropriation bill for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948.

The hearings on this bill were opened on February 17 and did not close until April 29, 1947. Four of the seven members of our subcommittee including the chairman are also members of the Deficiency Subcommittee of the Appropriations Committee which held important meetings during much of the same period that the War Department Subcommittee held hearings on this bill. This delayed us somewhat. I want to express my personal appreciation to every member of my subcommittee for the splendid cooperation I received. It was the most difficult bill which came before this subcommittee during the 11 years during which I have been a Member. I want especially to express my appreciation to my very able and distinguished colleague and former chairman of this committee, the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge JOHN H. KERR. I shall never forget his sympathetic and statesmanlike support and cooperation.

In making savings the committee always had in mind that we were making adequate appropriations for an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men as authorized by law with an Air Corps as planned by the Commander in Chief and the Army. This is in full accord with the over-all request of the War Department and the authorization of the House Military Affairs Committee. The committee is firmly convinced that we should have such an Army. It is equally convinced, in view of the savings we propose, that this Army will be more efficient and effective than before. Inefficiency causes waste; waste causes inefficiency and when you cut off waste you make the Army more efficient. Surplus personnel affects all personnel and makes all personnel less efficient. It encourages a "let Joe do it" policy.

The bill carries a reduction of $475,809,077 below the budget estimate and rescinds $1,100,000,000 of 1946 and prior years' appropriations. It reduces civilian employees by 74,631, at a saving of $184,086,216. It reduces Army officers from 146,000 to approximately 126,000, a reduction of 20,000, at a saving of $106,250,000. It reduces flying pay $3,600,000. In all, it takes 94,631 people off the pay roll, at a total saving of $293,936,216. This, together with other savings, reduces the budget requests by $475,809,077. The committee did not cut off one enlisted man. It did not take $1 from the research and development program. It did not cut off 1 of the 18,201 civilian employees engaged in research and development. It did not cut off 1 of the 30,000 employees engaged in and paid out of industrial production funds in our arsenals, quartermaster depots, and so forth. It did not cut one Army nurse officer or dietitian from the Army pay roll. The committee did not take $1 of the pay, clothing allowance, subsistence, rations of one enlisted man or of one necessary officer. The committee wants to be very specific in this phase of the savings made.

Decisions in making these cuts were not always unanimous, of course, the chairman himself being as often in the minority as on the majority side of the votes. Neither were they political. The gentlemen on the other side of the aisle, and especially the ranking member and former chairman, gave me much and valuable support.

I shall now consider the entire budget in detail as far as time will permit. I believe that if you read or listen to my remarks you will agree that the committee made these savings without sacrificing any feature or function necessary to a sound and effective national defense.

BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF ENTIRE WAR DEPARTMENT 1948 APPROPRIATION REQUEST

The following is a bird's-eye view of the entire War Department budget picture as presented to the legislative Joint Budget Committee of the Senate and House of Representatives for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948:

Total appropriation requested	$7,044,507,100
Total expenditure availability	10,038,327,755
Total estimated expenditures	8,254,658,654

While the amount of expenditure during any one year is limited by the length of time it takes to carry out a definite program and certain other factors, in the final analysis it is the President and not the Congress, the Executive and not the legislative branch of the Government, which determines the speed of the defense program and the actual amount of the expenditures. Witness the fact that it was the President through his Budget Bureau who stopped in a large part the 1947 research and development program of the Army Air Corps as well as the production of airplanes by ordering the Air Corps not to spend $135,000,000 of the funds appropriated for the present fiscal year. Of this amount, $75,000,000 was taken from research and development and $30,000,000 for production of airplanes. In April of this year, when it was too late, according to the testimony, to carry out the program and obligate the money, the President sent a message to Congress asking Congress to transfer this money to "Pay of the Army." Congress did so in view of the testimony that it was too late to obligate it. The same was true with regard to the transfer of $60,000,000 out of a total of $100,000,000 Congress appropriated for the National Guard and $30,000,000 out of $60,000,000 appropriated for the Organized Reserves.

The testimony shows that the total estimated expenditures are so estimated because the President told the Army that was the amount it could spend during the fiscal year 1948. Summarizing: Total appropriation, $7,044,507,100; total fixed by the President as amount to be spent,

$8,254,658,654; total available for expenditure, $10,038,327,755. Before I proceed further I want to emphasize that the Constitution intended Congress and not the President to control expenditures. This can only be done by having the appropriation budget and expenditure budget as nearly equal as possible and eliminating the tremendous backlog of money available for expenditure from prior years' appropriations.

BILL PROVIDES FOR A RESCISSION OF $1,100,000,000—1946 AND PRIOR YEARS

The testimony before our committee shows that the War Department still has available $5,270,883,360 of 1946 and prior years funds, including $185,000,000 reserved for the possible payment of portal-to-portal pay. Maj. Gen. George T. Richards, War Department Budget Officer, estimated that it would require $3,700,000,000 to liquidate the obligations still outstanding against these funds.

The Budget Bureau estimated it would require approximately $3,000,000,000 to liquidate such obligations. On page 171 of the hearings is found the following testimony:

Mr. ENGEL. It has happened that you have $2,270,000,000 more money than you thought you were going to have.

General RICHARDS. Yes, sir. That is the estimated amount and can be attributed to the aftermath of the war.

Mr. ENGEL. Would not that $2,270,000,000 be considered as a backlog?

General RICHARDS. The majority would be; yes, sir.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Will you turn that back to the Treasury?

General RICHARDS. We will never draw it from the Treasury?

However the fact is these funds may be drawn from the Treasury. They can only be used for 1946 and prior years' obligations. Since the major part of all war claims against the United States Army, including claims of foreign governments, were incurred for those years and inasmuch as the appropriation bills for those years carried transfer clauses, these funds can and may be and are being used in the settlement of such claims by transferring them to the various services of the Army and they can be used by the State Department for bargaining without any action on the part of Congress. The fact is that if these funds are not rescinded they may be used for such purposes in part or in whole. If they are rescinded they cannot be used. The committee recommends the rescission of $1,100,000,000 of 1946 and prior years' funds including the $185,000,000 reserved by the Army for portal-to-portal pay. This will leave adequate funds to meet any legitimate claims that may be filed against the Army for those years.

BREAK-DOWN OF WAR DEPARTMENT MILITARY BUDGET

The War Department budget is broken down further into two parts—military and civil functions. Each of these is broken down into two appropriations. The military is broken down into the principal and supplemental estimate. The civil-functions budget is broken down into the regular civil functions, including rivers and harbors, flood control, Panama Canal, and other items usually appearing in the budget, and in addition we have the item this year for government and relief in occupied areas. Following is a table of the break-down:

A. Military budget now being considered	$5,717,791,500
B. Supplemental estimate to be considered if and when Armed Services Committee authorizes the expenditure further broken down as—
(a) Engineer service, including construction in overseas possession	125,000,000
(b) Construction at military posts in United States	100,000,000
(c) Quartermaster Corps, cemeterial expenses	54,000,000
Total supplemental estimate	279,000,000
Total military budget estimate for fiscal year 1948	5,996,791,500
C. In addition to the above there is a contract authorization for the Air Corps in the amount of	280,000,000
Total estimates, including contract authorization	6,276,791,500
Civil-functions budget for 1948:
A. Regular civil-functions estimate, including rivers and harbors, flood control, etc	297,691,100
B. Panama Canal	25,024,500
C. Relief in occupied areas	725,000,000
Total civil-functions budget, including relief in occupied areas	1,047,715,600
Total War Department 1948 budget, including contract authorization	7,324,507,100

ONLY $5,717,791,500 OF TOTAL ULTIMATE BUDGET OF $7,324,507,100 NOW BEFORE HOUSE

Of the total War Department budget of $7,324,507,100 sent to the Joint Congressional Budget Committee by the President, we have before us only the military part amounting to $5,717,791,500 plus the $280,000,000 contract authorization, leaving the $279,000,000 supplemental estimate to be considered later if and when authorized by Congress, and leaving further the $1,047,715,600 civil functions and relief for occupied areas when that bill is considered, which it will be as soon as the present bill is disposed of.

THE PRESENT BILL WILL ONLY REPRESENT A PART OF THE TOTAL WAR DEPARTMENT CUT IN APPROPRIATIONS

The present bill will only represent a part of the total savings in War Department appropriations. Further savings will undoubtedly be made in rivers and harbors, flood control, Panama Canal, as well as other civil-function items which will come before this House later. Savings are also possible in the $725,000,000 estimate for relief in occupied areas. It is only when these items have been considered and passed upon, that total savings in the War Department appropriations will be determined.

SIXTY-ONE AND FIVE-TENTHS PERCENT OF ARMY BUDGET IS FOR PERSONNEL

In order to reduce a budget intelligently one should know what one is eliminating. A careful analysis of the Army budget shows that—

First. Three billion five hundred and twenty-three million five hundred and sixty-eight thousand two hundred and sixty-seven of the total appropriation of $5,717,791,500 considered in this bill, or 61.5 percent is for Army personnel, civilian and military.

Second. Of this $3,523,568,267 for total Army personnel, $2,295,000,543 or 40 percent of the total budget is for military personnel and $1,228,567,724, or 21.5 percent of the total budget is for civilian personnel.

Third. The remaining $2,194,223,233 or 38.5 percent is for gas, oil, planes, maintenance, travel, rations, subsistence, equipment and other nonpersonnel items usually found in the budget.

PERSONNEL MUST BE CUT IF SUBSTANTIAL SAVINGS ARE TO BE MADE

It is obvious from the foregoing analysis that no substantial saving can be made without a cut in civilian and Army personnel, since they constitute 61.5 percent of that part of the War Department budget considered here. I shall first consider Army military personnel.

WE MUST HAVE AN EFFECTIVE ARMY OF 1,070,000 OFFICERS AND MEN

I have repeatedly stated that any action I took in cutting the War Department budget would be with a view of maintaining an effective army of the presently authorized 1,070,000 officers and men, including an effective Army Air Force of 400,000 officers and men and any cuts that I have advocated have been with that objective.

JUST WHAT KIND OF AN ARMY DID WE HAVE BEFORE AND DURING THE WAR AND WHAT WAS RELATIVE OFFICER STRENGTH?

Before we proceed further let us examine the Army record and see what the percentage of officer strength was before and during the war.

First. March 1940: In March 1940 the total military strength of the Army was 249,466 officers and men. We had 18,870 or 7.6 percent officers. Nurses were not then commissioned officers.

Second. September 1941: In September 1941 the total strength of the Army was 1,601,013, including 116,989 or 7.3 percent officers. Nurses were not commissioned officers.

Third. March 1945: In March 1945, at the height of hostilities, just before Germany surrendered, with thousands of officers engaged in the procurement and production of billions of dollars' worth of war supplies and equipment, with thousands more being trained and held to replace casualties on every front, we had a total Army strength of 8,167,387, including 869,094, or 10.7 percent, officers. Nurses were commissioned officers and are included.

Fourth. January 1947: In January 1947 the total strength of the Army was 1,253,619, including 151,914, or 12.1 percent, officers.

Fifth. The budget proposes an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men, with 146,000, or approximately 13.7 percent, officers, assuming they have the full number of enlisted men.

The Army is now asking nearly twice the percentage of officers it had in September 1941 and 3 percent more officers than it had in March 1945, at the height of hostilities. This in the face of the largest reservoir of wartime officers—480,000—in reserve we have ever had and in the face of thousands of National Guard officers and an extensive peacetime officer reserve training program.

JUST WHAT KIND OF AN ARMY DID THE WAR DEPARTMENT ASK FOR?

Just what kind of an Army did the War Department ask for when it appeared before the Military Affairs Committee of the House of Representatives a year ago in March and April 1946? What was the testimony given by the War Department before that committee at that time upon which the legislation was based authorizing an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men? Let us examine the record.

OFFICER STRENGTH

A. On March 22, 1946, Maj. Gen. Willard G. Paul, General Staff, G–1, United States Army, testified before the Military Affairs Committee as follows:

We figure, roughly, 10 percent officer strength of the total strength. That means we would have around 140,000 to 150,000 officers on the 1st of July of this year (1946) and about 100,000 on the 1st of July next year (1947). (See p. 55 of hearings before Military Affairs Committee.)

The tables inserted in the record later show that they expected to have 1,550,000 officers and men on July 1, 1946—see page 151 of same hearings.

B. A statement by Brig. Gen. Gordon E. Textor was submitted by the War Department for the record in the hearings before the Military Affairs Committee on April 4, 1946. On page 161 of these hearings General Textor said, in part:

Thus, on January 1, 1948, when requirements are estimated to be 1,070,000 officers and men, total personnel available would consist of 634,000 volunteer enlisted men, 100,000 officers, and 65,000 inductees still in service—or a total of 799,000. We would thus be short 270,000 men.

He was arguing for a compulsory selective-service law. It will be noted that both General Paul and General Textor included 13,500 warrant officers and nurses in the total of 100,000 officers required for an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men, since all of the remaining 970,000 men over and above the 100,000 officers were accounted for as either enlisted or drafted men or men short and to be acquired either by draft or enlistment.

C. On April 4, 1946, Brig. Gen. Gordon B. Textor inserted in the record of the hearings—page 162—above referred to two tables of requirements and availables of an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men as of July 1, 1946, July 1, 1947, and January 1, 1948, which reads as follows:

Requirements and availables—24-month term of service for inductees

Date	Volunteer Army (enlisted men)	All officers	Total officers and enlisted men	Inducted men in service	Total availables	Requirements (officers and enlisted men)	Surplus or deficit
July 1, 1946	800,000	150,000	950,000	600,000	1,550,000	1,550,000	0
July 1, 1947	719,000	100,000	819,000	200,000	1,019,000	1,070,000	−51,000
Jan. 1, 1948	634,000	100,000	734,000	65,000	799,000	1,070,000	−271,000

NOTES.—No selective service after May 1946. 24-month term of service for inductees.

Requirements and availables—18-month term of service for inductees

Date	Volunteer Army (enlisted men)	All officers	Total officers and enlisted men	Inducted men in service	Total availables	Requirements (officers and enlisted men)	Surplus or deficit
July 1, 1946	800,000	150,000	950,000	600,000	1,550,000	1,550,000	0
July 1, 1947	719,000	100,000	819,000	30,000	849,000	1,070,000	−221,000
Jan. 1, 1948	634,000	100,000	734,000	0	734,000	1,070,000	−336,000

NOTES.—No selective service after May 1946. 18-month term of service for inductees.

In each case officers were computed at 10 percent of the total strength of the Army. The fact that in each instance they used the word "all officers" in the tables and then accounted for the remainder of the Army over and above the number of officers as enlisted or drafted men seems to be conclusive evidence that the plans of the War Department at that time were on the basis of 10 percent officer strength. In view of the fact that we have a Reserve officer strength of 480,000 plus a great number of National Guard officers and in view of our Reserve officers' training program for younger officers it appears that a 10-percent officer strength for a Regular Army was sound and adequate for our national defense.

There is no doubt but what the Military Affairs Committee and the House of Representatives in authorizing an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men had in mind 10 percent or 100,000 officer strength, as no other figure was at any time even suggested by anyone either inside or outside the Army.

D. During the hearings on this bill I asked the Army for a table of organization for an Army of 1,070,000 officers and men based upon 100,000 officers or 10 percent officer strength. This table was never furnished the committee. The Army had apparently changed its mind. Now let us examine the record of the hearings on this bill and see what they asked for.

E. While in April 1946 they asked for 10 percent officer strength, the first evidence that the Army had changed its mind came when it announced its plans for a reduced strength from January 1, 1947, and July 1, 1947. The record of the hearings on this bill shows—page 40—that on December 31, 1946, the Army had 162,515 officers and 1,156,968 enlisted men or a total of 1,319,583 officers and men and planned to have on July 1, 1947, 923,848 enlisted men and 146,152 officers for a total of 1,070,000 officers and enlisted men. They proposed to reduce enlisted men 20 percent and officers 10 percent during the last 6 months prior to July 1, 1947, when the limit was placed at and reduced to 1,070,000 officers and men. They increased the officer strength from 10 percent to approximately 13.7 percent of the total strength by adding 46,000 more officers than they told the Military Affairs Committee they required, thereby increasing the officer strength and reducing the enlisted strength by the same number, 46,000.

THIS CHANGE IN OFFICER STRENGTH COST THE TAXPAYERS $253,000,000

The average cost of an Army officer is approximately $5,500 a year. On this basis these 46,000 officers cost the taxpayers $253,000,000, or more than a quarter of a billion dollars. The present budget as submitted to the Congress includes this $253,000,000. Some of the members of our subcommittee felt that the War Department had broken faith with the Military Affairs Committee and with the Congress. In view of the fact we had more than 480,000 wartime Reserve officers, in addition to National Guard officers and Reserve officers being trained, and in view of the further fact that most of these 46,000 officers would probably join the Officers' Reserve if dropped from the Regular rolls, some of the members of our subcommittee felt that the first War Department estimate was right and that 100,000 officers were adequate. These members felt that these 46,000 surplus officers could be dropped and the $253,000,000 saved for the hard-pressed taxpayers of America without impairing our national defense.

MAJORITY OF COMMITTEE DID NOT AGREE

The majority of the committee did not agree on dropping these 46,000 officers and saving this $253,000,000. We went into the question further, called Secretary of War Patterson, Major General Richards, Army budget officer, and Major General Paul and several other officers before our committee for further evidence.

ARMY PROPOSED ONE OFFICER TO SIX OR SEVEN ENLISTED MEN FOR AIR CORPS AND ONE TO EIGHT OR NINE FOR OTHER THAN AIR

A. Maj. Gen. George Richards, budget officer, testified before our committee, that the ratio of officers to enlisted men should be one officer to eight or nine enlisted men in other than air. This would mean one-seventh or one-eighth officer strength for the Air Corps and one-eighth to one-ninth for other than Air Corps strength—pages 42 and 43 of hearings. The testimony further shows that the Secretary of War ordered the Air Corps cut temporarily for the fiscal year 1948 from 401,000 officers and men as proposed to the Military Affairs Committee to 375,000 officers and men. On this basis of one-eighth officer strength if we gave the War Department all it asked for, the Air Corps would be entitled to 47,000 officers or one-eighth of 375,000. The other than air forces would have 695,000 officers and men and would on the basis of one officer to nine enlisted men be entitled to one-tenth officers or 69,500 officers. This would give them a total of 116,500. This is upon the assumption that they would have 100 percent authorized enlisted strength.

B. If we adopt this plan we could cut off 29,500 officers which at $5,500 each would be a saving of $162,250,000 for the taxpayers. Some of the members of the committee felt that this saving could be made without impairing national defense.

C. If we gave the Army these 116,500 officers in addition to 13,500 warrant officers and nurses making a total officer strength of 130,000 we would cut off 16,000 officers which at $5,500 each would be a savings of $88,000,000.

D. General Eisenhower's evidence was about the same as that of General Richards, that is, 10 percent other than air and 15.6 percent or approximately 6.5 enlisted men to one officer for the Air Corps. General Richards was undoubtedly and naturally giving General Eisenhower's views.

SUMMARY ON OFFICER PROPOSALS

The committee considered carefully the following three proposals:

First. Whether to cut off 46,000 officers and save $253,000,000 for the taxpayers, giving the Army the total officer strength of 100,000 requested when they appeared before the Military Affairs Committee when that committee and the House determined the strength of the Army on April 1, 1946.

Second. Fix the ratio of one officer to seven enlisted men for air and one officer to nine enlisted men for other than Air Force, or a total officer strength of 116,500. We could save on this basis $162,250,000 for the taxpayers.

Third. Give the Army the ratio of 1 officer to 7 enlisted men for air and 1 officer to 9 enlisted men in other than air forces in addition to 13,500 warrant officers and nurse officers for a total officer strength of 130,000, cutting off 16,000 officers at $5,500 per officer, or a total saving of $88,000,000.

Fourth. Give the Army what it asked for—146,000 officers, despite all testimony, and let the taxpayer foot the bill and save nothing.

The committee finally decided on the following:

First. Cut off 2,600 warrant officers at a saving of $10,000,000.

Second. Cut off 17,500 officers at $5,500 each at a saving of $96,250,000.

Third. Make no reduction in officer nurses, dietitians, and so forth.

Fourth. No reduction of enlisted personnel was considered at any time.

This made a total reduction of 20,500 officers and warrant officers at a saving of $106,250,000.

The committee believed that many officers were placed on a flying status and were given flying pay who were not entitled to such pay. I asked the Air Corps to screen the list of flying officers carefully and take off such officers as were not entitled to flying pay. They took off 696 officers at a saving of $1,100,000. The committee considered that entirely inadequate and reduced flying pay by $3,600,000. In view of the fact that the total flying pay aggregates $68,000,000, I still consider the reduction inadequate.

CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES

In considering a reduction of civilian employees in the War Department one must first determine just how many civilian employees the Department planned on having during 1948 when the 1947—this year's—budget request was made and when an army of 1,070,000 officers and men was planned.

FIRST ASKED FOR 335,000 CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES IN THE ZONE OF INTERIOR OF UNITED STATES

In May 1946, when the hearings were held on the 1947 military appropriations bill for the War Department, Fletcher C. Waller, then Director of Civilian Personnel and Training, testified before our subcommittee as follows:

Mr. ENGEL. Can you give us the maximum and minimum or the number (of civilian employees) on July 1, 1947?

Mr. WALLER. It is anticipated that the number will be down to 335,000 on July 1, 1947.

Mr. ENGEL. How many of these will be in Washington?

Mr. WALLER. The average throughout the fiscal year will be about 21,000.

He later testified that on July 1, 1947, 19,000 civilian employees would be in Washington—see page 92 of hearings on 1947 military appropriations bill.

Again:

Mr. ENGEL. These civilian employees, of course, include employees in the armories, those engaged in war production, and so forth?

Mr. WALLER. Those are all employees with military functions; it does not include the civil functions of the War Department.

The above testimony referred, of course, to the number of civilian employees in the zone of interior of the United States.

TESTIMONY ON PRESENT BILL SHOWS 40 CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES FOR EVERY 100 SOLDIERS

Mr. A. H. Onthank, the present and also the prewar Director of Civilian Personnel, testified on February 17, 1947, before our subcommittee that the War Department required 35 to 40 civilians for every 100 soldiers. His specific testimony appears on page 156 of the hearings and is as follows:

Mr. ONTHANK. If you give the War Department a job to do which requires 1,000,000 soldiers it means roughly 35 to 40 percent civilians to back this up.

We have 500,000 officers and enlisted men in the zone of interior of the United States now and on the basis of 40 civilians for every 100 soldiers the War Department requirements would be met for the zone of interior by giving them 200,000 civilians.

Mr. Onthank testified further that there were 85,000 civilians in the zone of interior supporting overseas garrisons—see pages 133 and 134 of War Department hearings.

On this basis the total requirement for War Department civilian personnel in the zone of interior of the United States is 285,000.

HOW MANY CIVILIANS DOES THE WAR DEPARTMENT NOW WANT IN ZONE OF INTERIOR?

Brig. Gen. Arthur G. Trudeau, Acting Deputy Director of Personnel, testified before our subcommittee that they required 365,000 civilian employees not including 30,000 employees engaged in various types of production in our arsenals and elsewhere. This would place the total requirement for the zone of interior of the United States at 395,000 or 60,000 more than Mr. Waller testified they needed on July 1, 1947, and 75,000 more than Mr. Onthank testified they required.

THE 1948 BUDGET PROVIDES MONEY FOR 414,613 CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES FOR ZONE OF INTERIOR

Your committee went over the budget carefully, analyzed and computed the number of civilian employees provided for in the budget for each department or branch of service, as shown in six tables inserted. These tables will be referred to again. They show the following:

Table I: That the budget provided for 344,644 civilian employees in military establishments in the zone of interior of the United States. This table, of course, does not include the employees in tables II, III, and IV. Neither does it include overseas employees in No. V. Neither does it include the 30,000 civilian employees engaged in industrial production in our arsenals, quartermaster depots, and elsewhere. The budget has $868,240,343 to pay these 344,644 employees.

Table II: That the budget provided $52,498,690 to pay 16,583 departmental civilian employees.

Table III: That the budget provided $16,431,655 to pay 5,186 employees engaged or who will be engaged in industrial mobilization and planning.

Table IV: That the budget provided $59,426,290 to pay 18,201 civilian employees engaged in research and development. These are in addition to some who will be paid out of industrial production funds.

The above four tables do not include 30,000 employees engaged in industrial production of war supplies and equipment within the zone of interior. The total civilian employees in the zone of interior of the United States, including the 30,000 industrial employees provided for in the budget, are 414,613.

Table V: This table shows that the budget provided for 110,420 civilian employees of the War Department employed overseas in our possessions and occupied areas who will be paid $215,050,527.

Table VI: This is a summary of all civilian employees both overseas and in the zone of interior, but does not include the 30,000 industrial production employees. When we add these 30,000 we find that the budget provides for an over-all total of 525,034 civilian employees for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948. Of these employees, 495,034 will be paid a total of $1,212,087,505. The other 30,000 will be paid out of production money. As was stated, industrial employees are paid out of production funds. For example, the ordnance may have a certain amount of money to purchase Garand rifles or some other item. It may let a contract to a private corporation for a part of this amount and another contract to Springfield Armory, owned and operated by the Army Ordnance. The employees engaged in the production of this item at the Armory or Arsenal are paid out of the contract price, the Armory or Arsenal being in the same position as a private contractor. The amount paid these employees is not included in "Pay of the Army," but in the amount allowed for the production and purchase of supplies and equipment. The same is true with regard to the production of clothing by the Quartermaster General at the Philadelphia Quartermaster Depot and other similar production items.

THE BILL BEFORE THE HOUSE PROVIDES FOR A REDUCTION OF 74,648 CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES AND A SAVING OF $184,086,212

The tables above referred to and inserted in the RECORD as a part of my remarks show that if the bill is passed in its present form, it will provide for a reduction of 74,631 civilian employees at a saving of $184,086,216. The purpose of itemizing the proposed savings in personnel was not to tie down the War Department to exactly the number of employees named for each service but to give the committee's idea as to where cuts might and should be made.

COMMITTEE OPPOSED TO REDUCING CIVILIAN EMPLOYEES ENGAGED IN RESEARCH AND INDUSTRIAL PRODUCTION

The committee, however, had a firm conviction and was strongly opposed to cutting any civilian personnel engaged in research and development.

TABLES CAREFULLY WORKED OUT

These reduction tables were very carefully worked out. Each item was considered carefully and separately before the reduction was decided upon. The savings were made with the record of present and past War Department hearings in mind. It will be noted that reductions in personnel range from no reduction up to 25 percent. The over-all reduction averages approximately 15 percent both in number of employees and in the total dollar reduction. It was the intention of the committee that the percentage of reduction should be as uniform as possible in employees of all grades, unless it appeared that a service was top-heavy on higher grade employees.

ZONE OF INTERIOR REDUCTION

The total reduction of employees recommended in the zone of interior is 63,590 out of a total of 414,614 employees, including the 30,000 industrial employees.

A. This leaves a total for the zone of interior of 351,024 employees, or 16,024 more than Mr. Waller testified the Army planned to carry over on July 1, 1947, and 66,024 more than Mr. Onthank's testimony showed the Army required.

B. If we take the entire number of 74,631 out of the 414,613 employees in the zone of interior, including the 11,041 reduced in overseas personnel, then the Army would still have 339,983 employees in the zone of interior, or 4,983 more than Mr. Waller said they expected to have on July 1, 1947, and 54,983 more than Mr. Onthank thought they required.

C. In view of the constant reports which came to the committee from various sources of the large number of civilian employees in the armies of occupation and in our overseas theaters, including our island possessions, the committee felt that a 10-percent cut could be made in those theaters without hampering operations or national defense, and the committee so recommends. This 10-percent cut in overseas personnel would, of course, be a part of the total reduction made herein. The total figures are shown in table VI inserted at the conclusion of my remarks.

SUMMARY OF CUTS IN ARMY AND CIVILIAN PERSONNEL AND PAY

Reduction of 17,500 officers at a saving of $96,250,000.

Reduction of 2,600 warrant officers, $10,000,000.

Reduction in flying pay, $3,600,000.

Reduction of 74,631 civilian employees, as per tables attached, $184,086,216.

Savings on personnel by the total reduction of 20,100 officers and 74,631 civilians, $293,916,216.

GENERAL REMARKS ON REDUCTION OF ITEMS OF EQUIPMENT, SUPPLIES, ETC.

In considering a reduction of any appropriation for clothing, supplies, matériel, equipment, weapons, and other items, one must take into consideration the following facts:

A. What was the inventory on hand in terms of dollars and, whenever practical, in terms of weapons or items requested?

B. The amount available for expenditure from prior years' appropriations and the unliquidated obligations, and whether those unliquidated obligations were in part for obligations represented by unpaid invoices of goods carried in the inventory.

C. The amount of the appropriation for the preceding year, 1947 in this case, and the amount expended to the latest date.

D. The amount of the appropriation asked for in the current 1948 budget, including contract authorization.

E. The total amount available for expenditure if the amount requested is appropriated.

I. ARMY AIR FORCES 56 PERCENT OF TOTAL MILITARY BUDGET; TOTAL MILITARY BUDGET SUBMITTED IS $5,997,791,000

The total military budget of the War Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, is $5,717,791,000. This does not include the $279,000,000 supplemental appropriation not yet submitted. Neither does it include the $280,000,000 contract authorization given the Air Corps for planes, and so forth, which has been submitted. If we add this last amount to the $5,717,791,000 submitted it gives us a total of $5,997,791,000 for the Army which is here being considered.

II. ARMY AIR CORPS 1948 BUDGET REQUESTS

A. The total requests or cost of the Army Air Forces if all requests are granted for 1948 will aggregate $3,372,330,000, or 56 percent of the total War Department military budget of $5,997,791,000 submitted. Other than Air Forces will receive the remaining 44 percent, or $2,625,461,000.

B. Of this $3,372,330,000 for the Army Air Forces for 1948, should all amounts be available, only (a) $1,130,000,000, or one-third of this total, is appropriated directly to the Army Air Corps. This is for pay of civilians, planes, equipment, and so forth. Of the remaining sum, (b) $1,351,000,000 will be appropriated to the pay of the Army for pay, including $68,000,000 flying pay, subsistence, rent, and other allowances coming under this head; (c) $346,000,000 will be appropriated to the Quartermaster Corps for clothing, rations, and other similar items; (d) for engineers service to Air Corps, $169,000,000; transportation for Air Corps, $135,000,000; services, equipment, and miscellaneous items furnished by other services, $241,330,000.

III. HOW MUCH WILL THE ARMY AIR CORPS HAVE AVAILABLE FOR PLANES IF AMOUNT IS ALLOWED AND WHAT KIND OF AN AIR FORCE WILL WE HAVE?

Before we can determine what kind of an Air Force we will have, we must determine, first, the inventory value of usable planes and equipment on hand; second, the amount available and obligated for prior years for planes and equipment not yet delivered; third, the 1947 and 1948 appropriations.

INVENTORY OF AIRPLANES, SPARE PARTS, ENGINES, ETC.

Inventory: The dollar value of the items on hand on January 31, 1947, is as follows:

Thirty thousand five hundred and sixty-six complete aircraft usable for next 5 years, $4,675,000,000.

Spare engines: Domestic, 52,187, $773,000,000; overseas, 8,163, $114,000,000.

Aircraft parts and accessories, $1,158,000,000.

Equipment, $462,000,000.

Total inventory on hand, $7,182,000,000.

AMOUNT AVAILABLE FOR EXPENDITURES FOR AIRPLANES, SPARE ENGINES AND PARTS, EQUIPMENT AFTER JANUARY 1, 1947

The amount available for expenditure for airplanes after January 1, 1947, spare engines, parts, equipment is as follows:

A. Out of 1945 and prior years' funds:

1. For 733 planes, $257,603,559.

2. For spare engines and spare parts, $94,354,488.

3. For Government-furnished equipment, $90,607,460.

Total available from 1945 and prior-year funds, $342,565,507.

B. Out of 1946 year's funds:

1. For 635 airplanes, $139,485,547.

2. For spare engines, $35,805,056.

3. For Government-furnished equipment and maintenance, spare parts, $85,159,805.

4. Radar and radio equipment, $23,003,613.

5. Training equipment, $5,142,645.

Total available for expenditure from 1946 funds, $288,596,666.

C. Out of 1947 funds: The total appropriation for planes, spare parts, allowed by Congress for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1947, was $401,870,900. In September 1946 the President through his Budget Director impounded $30,000,000 of this amount and in April 1947 sent a message to Congress asking that $135,000,000 Air Corps money, including this $30,000,000 be transferred from the Air Corps to pay of the Army and it was so transferred. This left a balance of $371,870,900 available for expenditure for this purpose. Congress further appropriated $52,781,800 for radar and radio equipment bringing the total available for these two purposes to $424,652,700, $8,246,037 of which has been expended for these purposes up to January 1, 1947, leaving a balance available for expenditure of $416,406,663 from 1947 funds. This will allow the production of 681 planes at present prices in addition to spare engines, spare parts, and so forth.

D. Out of 1948 funds if allowed: The total appropriation and contract authorization for planes, spare parts, and engines requested for 1948 is as follows:

Appropriation requested for 838 planes at present prices, $400,000,000.

For spare engines and parts, $40,000,000.

For radio and radar, $40,000,000.

Total 1948 appropriation requested for planes, spare parts, spare engines, radar and radio, $480,000,000.

SUMMARY

Inventory on hand:

Thirty thousand five hundred and sixty-six complete aircraft, latest used in war and usable for average of 5 years, $4,675,000,000.

Sixty thousand three hundred and fifty spare engines, $887,000,000.

Aircraft parts, accessories, and equipment, $1,620,000,000.

Total inventory on hand, $7,182,000,000.

AVAILABLE FOR EXPENDITURE AFTER JANUARY 1, 1947, FOR PLANES AND EQUIPMENT

From 1945 and prior years appropriation, including 733 planes, $342,565,507.

From 1946 funds including 635 planes, $288,596,666.

Balance 1947 appropriation including 681 planes, $416,406,663.

From 1948 appropriation including 838 planes, radio and radar, $480,000,000.

Total available after January 1, 1947, for planes, spare parts, engines, equipment, including radio and radar, $1,527,568,836.

Inventory of planes, engines, and spare parts, $7,182,000,000.

Total inventory and expenditure available if all requests are granted, $8,709,568,830.

DECISION OF THE COMMITTEE ON REDUCTION OF PLANES, ETC.

The committee considered and reconsidered the question of whether or not a reduction in the appropriation for planes, spare parts, and engines could be made. Our decision was made more difficult by the fact that the President had reduced our 1947 appropriation for planes from $401,870,900 to $371,870,900 and at the same time had asked Congress to appropriate $480,000,000 more for planes, spare engines or spare parts, radio and radar equipment.

DECISION OF COMMITTEE

The decision was finally made that a reduction of 10 percent of the $440,000,000 appropriation for planes, spare engines, and so forth, could and should be made. This will reduce this appropriation by $44,000,000 or to $396,000,000. It will give the Army Air Corps $25,000,000 more cash appropriation for 1948 for this purpose than the President left them in 1947 after transferring $30,000,000 plane money to the pay-of-the-Army fund.

The Army Air Corps will have available for expenditure after January 1, 1947, for planes, spare parts, engines, equipment, including radio and radar, the sum of $1,483,558,836.

AIR FORCE EQUIPMENT IF PROGRAM IS CARRIED OUT

If this program is carried out our inventory of airplanes, spare engines, and other usable equipment will be as follows:

First. Inventory of 30,566 complete usable aircraft, 60,350 spare engines, spare parts, radio, radar, and other equipment as of January 1, 1947, $7,182,000,000.

Second. Value and cost of 2,683 of the latest planes of every type to be paid out of 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948 money. This includes a large number of heavy bombers, transport and fast fighter planes, also including adequate spare engines, parts, radio, radar, and other equipment, $1,483,558,836.

Total inventory of planes and equipment if and when this program is carried out will be $8,665,558,836.

We would, of course, have to deduct from this sum the number of planes that would be lost, damaged beyond repair, or destroyed after January 1, 1947.

MUST NOT BE OVEROPTIMISTIC

It must be noted that while the picture looks good now and perhaps for a year or two more, it will become increasingly worse because of the large number of planes which will become obsolete during the next 1 to 5 years. It is hoped that the plane production program can and will be increased materially as and in proportion to the reduction of Federal expenses. We hope for a reduction in expenditures in United States aid to foreign countries as well as a reduction of occupational and other costs as peace treaties are made. My purpose in giving the present-day picture is not to be misconstrued. This picture does not warrant the note of pessimism that has been current in the Nation regarding our relative air strength on the one hand. Neither does it warrant a note of overoptimism. In fact the real danger to our national defense lies in a possible overoptimism as to our military and of course our air strength.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT FOR AIR

The amount available for expenditure for research and development for the Air Corps from 1948 and prior years' appropriations if the total 1948 requests are granted are as follows:

From 1945 and prior years appropriations, $105,597,949.

From 1946 appropriation, $206,576,849.

From 1947 appropriation: The Congress appropriated $185,000,000 for research and development for the fiscal year ending June 31, 1947. In September 1946 the President impounded $75,000,000 of this amount and in April 1947 sent a message to Congress asking that this sum be transferred to "Pay of the Army." In view of the fact that it was then too late to obligate this sum efficiently according to the testimony, the committee granted the request for the transfer leaving the net sum of $110,000,000 available for that purpose. Fourteen million one hundred and thirty thousand four hundred and seventeen dollars had been expended prior to January 1, 1947, leaving as available for expenditure after that date the sum of $95,869,583.

From 1948 appropriation, $145,000,000.

The committee made no reduction in this appropriation.

TOTAL AMOUNT AVAILABLE FOR RESEARCH AFTER JANUARY 1, 1947

The total amount available for research and development after January 1, 1947, out of 1945, 1946, 1947, and 1948 appropriations, if this bill is passed in its present form, will be $553,044,391.

In concluding my remarks on this part of the bill I want to point out the irregularity of the past program on research and development. In order to obtain the maximum results with the minimum expenditure a research program must be planned over a term of years and the money, whatever the amount determined upon, must flow evenly and with the long-term program in mind constantly. The system of appropriating money, planning, then reducing the appropriation made and appropriating a larger sum again will bring a minimum result with a maximum expenditure instead of a maximum result with a minimum expenditure.

TRANSPORTATION CORPS

The budget estimate for the Transportation Corps aggregated $400,000,000, or 7 percent of the entire military budget of $5,717,000,000. This does not include the cost of the Air Transport Command. If we were to include this item it would run close to 10 percent. This in the opinion of the committee is entirely too high. This service had $374,062,232 unexpended balance of 1946 and prior years funds, including according to figures furnished me $101,320,203 overseas funds called triple-O funds and $137,529,935 unallotted funds. The budget provides for a total pay roll of $127,355,442 to pay 54,622 civilian employees. The committee after careful consideration recommends a reduction of $52,422,773 below the budget estimate. This includes a reduction of 9,139 civilian employees and a $22,422,773 reduction in the transportation pay roll, or a nonpersonnel reduction of $30,000,000.

AIR CORPS SUPPLIES, ETC.

In addition to the reduction in personnel and the 10-percent reduction on airplanes, spare engines, and parts which has been fully discussed, the following reductions were made:

Supplies and equipment, $300,000.

Transportation, $6,143,075.

Fuel and oil, $10,041,444.

Procurement of air-borne and ground communications equipment, $9,479,026.

Miscellaneous, $971,000.

Total, Air Corps, not including personnel and airplanes, $26,934,525.

ENGINEER CORPS

The budget estimate of the Engineer Corps was $365,000,000. The committee allowed $299,214,506, with a reduction of $65,785,494, including $32,204,640 reduction in personnel pay roll. The remainder of $33,580,854 was a reduction in matériel, supplies, and equipment, including $20,000,000 reduction in barracks and quarters. As high as 14.75 percent administrative overhead charge was added to some of these items. A total of $14,798,278 was so added, which the committee thought excessive.

OTHER REDUCTIONS IN SUPPLIES, EQUIPMENT, ETC.

A reduction of $16,303,401, in addition to personnel reduction, was made in the Quartermaster appropriation request for clothing and other items. No reductions were made in the Medical Corps outside of a 10-percent cut in personnel. A nonpersonnel reduction of $5,360,905 was made in the Signal Corps. A nonpersonnel reduction of $8,525,510 was made in the Ordnance Department. The remaining $17,167,666 nonpersonnel reduction which makes up the total reduction of $475,809,077, was made in other services not mentioned in this paragraph. All items including the above are included in the committee report.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan has consumed 50 minutes.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 additional minutes.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield.

Mr. AUGUST H. ANDRESEN. The gentleman referred to getting behind the iron curtain. Can the gentleman tell us how many Russian agents are in the United States getting in behind our curtain so as to find out what we are producing?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I do not know anything about that; I am not a sleuth.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I have only about 5 minutes remaining and I do not want to go over the hour unless, of course, the membership wishes to grant me more than an hour.

I would like to know; the United States Army, I am sure, would like to know, how they get military information out of Russia.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I would like to ask the chairman this question: The Air Corps Material Division has indicated it would like to maintain 10 depots throughout continental United States. I understand there is organic law that creates arbitrarily only seven depots. Are there sufficient funds in the present bill for the Material Division of the Air Corps to operate 10 depots if it so desires?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. No. We gave them the money the Budget asked for, the amount the Budget asked for for those depots.

Mr. SHEPPARD. Am I to interpret the chairman's answer that that would be only seven depots?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Seven depots; yes.

Mr. O'KONSKI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. O'KONSKI. In reference to the gentleman's statement regarding the difficulties of knowing the number of airplanes Russia has, it is very easy to figure that out. We can figure out what we gave them and that is what they have.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The reports I get state that they are outproducing us. It was not the planes we gave them. We know what we gave them, so we are not worried about that. The story was as to the number of planes they are producing. Press reports stated that Russia was producing more planes than we were producing and that they were producing better planes.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 15 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I am convinced that 90 percent of the taxpayers of this Nation demand that governmental expenses be cut. There are some expenses which have priority over others, and these taxpayers themselves realize this. The responsibility of being the wealthiest nation on the earth, and one which in normal times did one-half of the business of the world, places obligations on us, both morally and politically, which we must meet. Cutting our expenses and meeting our obligations is the most serious duty that ever confronted us.

We pyramided a debt of $400,000,000,000 in World War II, and since the war we have given or loaned to our allies and enemies of this war about $22,000,000,000, and have made private investments in these countries of approximately $14,500,000,000.

It is obvious that demands will be made upon this Nation to stabilize the affairs of the world for years to come, and it will require patience, knowledge, and wisdom to bring back a normal world. We doubtless have the patience and we have the physical attainment and knowledge which surpasses all other ages, but it is quite evident that what mankind lacks is wisdom. Knowledge is information gathered; wisdom is knowledge applied; and nations are like men—they know enough to do right, but, lacking wisdom, they do wrong. The trouble with the United Nations organization to promote peace upon the earth is that selfishness abounds and wisdom is lacking.

It is estimated that 19,000,000 men are today under arms and that 40 nations are spending at least $27,000,000,000 on armaments, and the smoke of war still smothers some portions of the world. More than 16,000,000 of the total men in uniform constitute the ground armies, 6,000,000 of whom are in China, 4,000,000 in Russia, a million and two hundred and fifty thousand in Great Britain, and in the United States more than 670,000. This Nation has incomparably the greatest sea power, the tonnage and striking power of our Navy outranking all others in the world combined.

Crushing taxation burdens all the world, and outside the United States peacetime conscription is well-nigh universal, and more money is being spent today on indirect military objectives in the development of atomic force, bacteriological warfare, guided missiles, jet planes, and new weapons than was ever spent before in the history of the world.

The chairman of our subcommittee has informed you that the subcommittee charged with the responsibility to hear and determine the justifications for appropriations for the Military Establishments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, has spent many days in hearing testimony in support of the justifications and has discharged its responsibility to the best of its ability in appraising the needs of our Army and has reported its findings and recommendations to the full Committee on Appropriations, and now submits the approval of these findings to the House of Representatives for further determination.

Last year, when I as chairman of the Military Establishments Appropriations Subcommittee reported this annual bill, I was moved to mention the splendid cooperation on the part of every member of the subcommittee in our endeavor to bring to the House a bill that was adequate to meet the needs of a peacetime Army. With one exception, every member of the present subcommittee is the same as last year's subcommittee, and without exception, each member has discharged his responsibility with the same degree of care and patriotism that moved us in the performance of our prior duties.

The course of political events has relieved me of the responsibilities placed upon the chairman of the subcommittee and these responsibilities now rest upon the shoulders of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL]. Mr. ENGEL is one of the most industrious men in Congress. In the performance of the duties placed upon him by reason of his position as chairman of the subcommittee, he has spent many long and tedious hours in performing the duties incident to preparing a bill of the magnitude of the one now before us. He cannot be commended too highly for the physical and mental energy and the conscientious service he has put into this bill. His work has inspired each member of this committee, and, in my opinion, this Congress and this Nation owes him a debt of deepest gratitude.

Hearings on the bill now before the House were quite extensive and in view of the heavy duties imposed upon each individual member by other activities, and especially in the heavy work in our offices, the constant attendance of each member reflected his patriotic desire to perform a task of the highest importance. There are items in this bill which do not have the full endorsement of each member, but the conclusions arrived at represent the cooperative and combined judgment of the membership of this entire subcommittee.

The present world situation is such that an appropriation for national defense must be viewed in the light of international relations. There is at the present moment no firm basis for peace. I am convinced that our Nation is making every effort to secure an honorable, valid, and lasting peace, and it is now apparent that even if such a desired achievement will be accomplished, it does not appear to be possible in the near future. Of course, when these accomplishments are brought about and the world becomes friendly and stable again, it will relieve this Nation from the necessity of maintaining a great standing army and providing funds to support it.

You will note that the largest single reduction made in the budget estimate is in the cost of the civilian personnel of the Army. This budget estimate approximated $1,200,000,000. The committee, after thorough consideration, has recommended a reduction of $184,086,216 in the budget estimate and the distribution of this reduction is shown in the tables in the report.

In the consideration of the estimates the committee developed the facts that just prior to Pearl Harbor, with an Army of 1,700,000, the supporting services of 380,000 civilian employees were utilized. At the peak of the wartime production, with an Army of 7,000,000 men and officers, there were 1,349,000 civilian employees; as of December 1946, the middle of the present fiscal year, with an Army of 1,319,000 men, there were employed in this country 411,000 civilians and in overseas areas 141,000, at an estimated cost of $1,000,337,000. For the fiscal year 1948, the budget estimate called for 384,614 civilian employees in the zone of the interior plus 30,000 to be employed on approved projects and paid from funds made available on a project basis, and 110,420 for overseas services, totaling 525,034. And from this total number the committee recommends a reduction of 74,631, of which 63,590 are in the zone of the interior and 11,041 overseas. No reduction whatever was made in the civilian employee estimate for research and development, and no reduction is proposed in the 30,000 to be employed on approved projects. After careful consideration, it is the opinion of the subcommittee that a reduction of $184,086,216 from this large item will in no way impair the program of our military service.

The next largest reduction made in the recommendation of the budget is in the appropriation entitled "Pay of the Army," and is brought about by a recommended substantial reduction in the number of officers and warrant officers. The justification for this is clearly supported by the fact that the Army has been reduced to 1,070,000 men, with a total of 132,500 officers and 13,500 warrant officers, nurses, dietitians, and physiotherapists. It was the opinion of the committee that this number of officers was excessive, and the committee suggests that one officer for each nine enlisted men is a proper proportion, and experience has indicated this rule to be correct. With the advance of science and technical equipment used by present-day armed forces, it is conceivable that a slightly higher percentage of officers might be required and might be desirable. With this thought in mind, a majority of the committee recommended that a reduction of 17,500 officers and 2,600 warrant officers be made, and in its recommendation has reduced this appropriation, on account of the reduction of officers, $96,250,000, and, on account of the reduction of warrant officers, $10,000,000. You will note that on a percentage basis this will provide for an Army of 1,070,000 men, supported by approximately 30 percent of that number of civilian personnel, and 12 percent office personnel, not including warrant officers.

QUARTERMASTER CORPS

Further suggested reductions are made by the committee in the Quartermaster Corps under the appropriation title "Regular Supplies of the Army." The budget request for $82,000,000 has been reduced to a recommended amount of $70,059,860—a reduction of $11,940,140—and the reduction, as shown in the report, is distributed throughout the quartermaster items. The committee was informed that the four items bearing the greater portion of the recommended reductions have in their depots supplies in excess of $53,000,000. I have no doubt that additional supplies are required in these items to supply the needs for the next fiscal year, but by proper management the supplies now on hand will be used first, insofar as possible, and with the additional funds provided in this bill the additional items required for the next year can be acquired.

I was impressed with the efficiency of the officers presenting the budget requirements for the Quartermaster Corps and believe in their ability to adjust their needs to the action taken by the committee. They are keenly aware of the requirements to keep members of the armed forces in good health, well-being, and high morale.

TRANSPORTATION CORPS

The Transportation Corps is primarily a service organization and its functions are to provide for the movement of Army personnel, supplies, equipment, and material. It has performed such duties in an admirable manner. It is not a policy-making organization and for that reason does not exercise control over the size, location, deployment, movement, or mission of the Army.

During recent years it is the general opinion that Army movements have been excessive; personnel has been moved many more times than would appear to be necessary, and each movement of personnel has required a corresponding movement of supplies, equipment, and material. This presents a difficult problem since the Transportation Corps is not directly responsible for the orders directing movement of troops, and so forth, but must provide the instrumentalities for the movement from funds appropriated to it. On the other hand, the administrative function responsible for the orders requiring transportation does not have the cost of that transportation taken from its appropriation. Therefore when the committee concludes that excessive funds are being spent for transportation it is not necessarily a reflection upon the Transportation Corps, but upon some other branch of the Department responsible for the orders requiring transportation. However, the only way an appropriating committee can attempt to remedy the situation is by reducing the funds requested for transportation and point out that the agencies of the Department responsible for directing excessive transportation should reconsider and be more conservative in requirements. On this basis, the budget request for the Transportation Corps of $400,000,000 has been reduced by $30,000,000 in addition to the proposed reduction of $21,832,873 in the civilian personnel items, $553,400 in departmental personnel, and $36,500 in industrial mobilization, leaving a total recommended appropriation for the Transportation Service of $347,577,227.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

The importance of scientific development cannot be overemphasized. Events which hastened the end of World War II make this crystal clear. Not only in the field of atomic energy is scientific development most important. On VJ-day our Nation excelled in this particular field; but in other scientific fields such as guided missiles, jet and rocket propulsion, and electronics, we now know that, in certain phases at least, we were not in the forefront. It is known, however, that in all these scientific fields only the surface has been scratched and that further utilization of benefits depends upon further research, discoveries, and developments.

The objective of all War Department research and development will be to apply the results of scientific analysis and research to the development of the most advanced weapons, techniques, material, and counter measures for the use of the Army in the execution of the military policy of the United States. This objective must envision the economic, political, industrial, and sociological implications with respect to the production of these weapons.

To implement such a broad objective, definite missions of research and development were presented to the committee as necessary. In brief, they are:

First. To create weapons which will be ahead of those of our competitors both in time and design.

Second. To create counter measures to the weapons of our competitors.

Third. To minimize the effect of climatic extremes on both men and weapons.

Fourth. To obtain the new scientific facts necessary to accomplish the foregoing objectives.

During the war, research facilities and programs were developed with haste to make up for our deficiencies. The accomplishments were without parallel in human history, but at the same time they were achieved at too great an expense both in time, money, and materials. If we profit from this expensive experience, we will develop a well-rounded program to explore all reasonable avenues of research and development; one which will insure our troops the most efficient, the lightest, the most durable, and the most climatic-resisting equipment possible to produce. The weapons will be the most accurate and the most mobile in the world. Clothing will provide the greatest protection for troops under all conditions; will be comfortable, yet efficient and durable. Our advance in all matériel will keep us in the forefront and enable us to do our part toward maintaining a peace which all desire.

The committee has been assured that every effort is being, and will be made, to coordinate the efforts of the several development agencies to utilizing in the most efficient manner, both time and money in the accomplishment of the research and development goal above set forth. The committee has not reduced the funds requested for this activity; its only admonition is that the expenditure be administered carefully with the purpose of accomplishing maximum results.

The committee recognizes that the research and development program will not and should not fluctuate with the size of the Army. In order to maintain progress and secure maximum results consistent with economy and efficiency, a relatively constant level of funds must be made available year by year for this activity. Otherwise, projects of great potentiality might have to be abandoned after only getting well under way. This would be waste. The funds recommended are, in the committee's opinion, the least which can insure economical continuance of the research and development program.

ARMY AIR FORCES

Events of the past few years have made it clear that the Army Air Forces have kept pace with other branches of our Army to produce the most powerful offensive fighting force the world has ever known. Many components go into a complete and rounded-out Air Force—not the least of which is the industrial capacity of our Nation to produce and place at the disposal of the trained Army personnel planes in large numbers which are unsurpassed in quality.

It was clearly pointed out by officials of the Army Air Forces, and I wish to call it to the attention of the Members of this body, that the mission of this branch of the Army is to provide the Air Force elements of national security. In recent years it has frequently been referred to as the "first line of defense," thus displacing claims made on behalf of the Navy for many years. But whether or not it is the "first line of defense," it is the force in our Army that can bring the policy of one of the great generals of our Nation to fruition. I refer to Gen. Nathan Bedford Forrest and his memorable statement that has become a classic, that he won his battles by getting "there fustest with the mostest." The Army Air Forces places our Nation in that position.

It is not my purpose here, however, to eulogize the Air Forces. All of you are familiar with their accomplishments. I do wish to point out some of the problems that confront this component of our Army, and as their problems become the problems of this body, it devolves upon us to provide the directorship and means of coping with the questions presented to the Army Air Forces.

From the time of Pearl Harbor to VJ-day there was an ever increasing production of Air Forces needs. That production, of course, came from the industrial capacity of our Nation. Since VJ-day the demand for the type of production required in wartime has slackened because the civilian economy does not require the same type of equipment and supplies used for war purposes. The question then arises as to how it will be possible to keep a sufficiency of the wartime type of capacity to meet an emergency should one arise. This is not a question solely with the Air Forces, it reaches into many other components of the armed forces, especially Ordnance. Insofar as the Air Corps is concerned the committee has approved in large part the requests for funds needed to keep industrial capacity in a position to quickly expand to meet required needs. It is necessary to keep abreast of scientific developments by producing new designs and prototypes of planes that may be used for testing purposes. It is necessary also to keep the aircraft industry sufficiently occupied that its capacity to produce the planes and other equipment and supplies needed will not be lost. There must be an even flow of work for the aircraft industry year after year to keep it current on required needs and to have a skeleton force which may quickly be expanded and built up to a place where emergency requirements can be met.

The present budget estimates for new aircraft is $440,000,000. A majority of the committee having ever in mind the need to reduce expenditures as much as possible have agreed on a reduction of 10 percent or $44,000,000. This will reduce the number of new aircraft from the requested 932 to approximately 800. A reduction of approximately 11 percent is recommended in the item for fuel and oil for aircraft as with fewer planes these requirements should not be as great.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KERR. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. The latest figures from the Air Force, which were not available earlier in the hearings, show that 932 airplanes could not be produced with that money, but that only 749 could be produced and that the cut made by the committee would reduce the airplane-procurement program from the highest estimate of 932 down to 561 planes. That is brought about by the reduction of the committee and the increase in the cost of airplanes. It is brought about by several factors.

Mr. KERR. I think, of course, that the gentlemen's statement is correct. But you know what the information of the committee is. We now have 30,000 airplanes.

Mr. MAHON. To all intents and purposes, some of our planes might just as well be denominated as cracker boxes, because in modern warfare they would not be first-line aircraft. Our number of first-line aircraft is certainly nothing like approaching what it should be.

Mr. KERR. Has the gentleman any idea of what our number of first-class aircraft is?

Mr. MAHON. I might make a guess, but I do not have any definite figures from the War Department. But it remains to be seen how these old stored aircraft will work if we should happen to need them in time of an emergency.

Mr. KERR. Well, you ought to complain to the War Department which has charge of the development of the Air Forces. They have told us how many planes which this money we have appropriated will make. It looks like you could have gotten from them the information as to how many we have available for fighting purposes now. There is no question but that we have got 30,000 of them distributed all over this Nation.

Mr. MAHON. Many of those 30,000 are out in the weather deteriorating and will probably never be used. The War Department will tell the members of this committee how many first-class aircraft we have—bombers and fighters—but I doubt that we would want to make public the intimate details of that. I know the most intimate details do not appear in our hearings and I would not take the responsibility of making it public on the floor.

Mr. KERR. I regret that the gentleman did not get that information and tell this committee about it if it was so important.

Small reductions in other items are recommended which in addition to reductions recommended in civilian personnel bring the total reductions recommended to $116,667,492, or approximately 13.8 percent reduction from the budget estimate.

I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman handled the situation very well. I was going to make a comment on the observations of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. I think the gentleman from North Carolina made appropriate answer. I might say more about it later. I thank the gentleman.

CONTRACT AUTHORITY

Mr. KERR. The bill provides for contract authorization of $280,000,000 for the procurement of aircraft, equipment, spare parts and accessories which will carry the program into future years and provide an even flow of orders for the aircraft industry.

I wish to point out if the Congress agrees to handling the aditional authority for $280,000,000 on a contractual authority basis, it is obligating the Government to appropriate in the future the funds required to pay for the aircraft, equipment, and so forth, procured under the authority exercised during the fiscal year 1948. The policy of granting contractual authority has not always been looked upon with favor as it may increase the cost of governmental operations and administration. This is especially true if the authorization includes numerous contracts. In the instant case, however, there should be relatively few contracts.

It has always given me pleasure to speak kindly of my fellowmen, and especially of those with whom I have worked in the performance of life's duties.

The clerks assigned to duty in the Appropriation Subcommittees of the House of Representatives have been men of highest character and outstanding intellect, and the responsibility placed upon them is rarely appraised as it should be.

Robert E. Lambert, the efficient clerk of the War Appropriations Subcommittee, deserves the highest meed of praise for the service he has rendered our subcommittee, and I know that each member joins with me in an expression of our deep appreciation for the splendid service he has rendered in the preparation of the bill now before the House. Mr. Lambert has the highest ideals in respect to his work, and there is always indescribable superiority added to the character and fiber of the man who, always and everywhere, puts quality and efficiency into his work—this Mr. Lambert does.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. KERR] has again expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 20 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, I will discuss the pending bill briefly, and I shall devote part of my remarks under general debate to the conference report of the conferees on the labor bill.

ARMY APPROPRIATIONS

First, however, I do want to say something about the Army appropriation bill. At the outset I should like to say that every member of the subcommittee who has worked under the chairmanship of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], will agree with me, I am sure, in saying that we think we have the hardest working chairman in the House of Representatives. We have a chairman who puts in more detailed study on the hard plugging work of the preparation of a bill than any chairman that I know anything about, at least. And he gets results.

Last fall I had the feeling that the Congress would be called upon to make some reductions in appropriations, perhaps for the armed services, both the Army and the Navy. I wrote the gentleman from New York [Mr. TABER] when it was apparent that he would be chairman of the Appropriations Committee following the election, and I said that I felt if it became possible for the subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations which dealt with budgets for the armed services to be merged or to coordinate their activities much as the Committees on Naval Affairs and Military Affairs are doing in the Armed Services Committee, this was a fitting time for the country to avail itself of the services of a man like AL ENGEL to take the leadership in coordinating expenditure for the two services. The Chairman has been diligent. We had longer hearings on the Army bill this year than we have had in the 8 years I have been a member of the subcommittee. We examined the estimates more in detail. The printed hearings, I think, are the longest we have ever had. Following the hearings on the bill itself we spent more days in actually marking up the bill and examining the individual items than has been done in the 8 years I have been on the committee. That is a sample of the thoroughness with which the bill has been prepared under the leadership of the gentleman from Michigan.

The country, I believe, wants to know that the Army bill and the Navy bill provide for security; at the same time they do want some reduction in the general expenditures of the Federal Government. I was interested in the way in which headlines told of the reporting of the Army appropriation bill the other day. They talked about the total of the bill and then said that the reductions proposed amounted to something over 8 percent. They said that was a modest precentage in comparison with the percentage cuts on many of the other bills. Whether they said it critically or approvingly varied with different papers; but it should be pointed out that in dealing with the Army first of all you must consider the size of the Army.

If the size of the Army is once determined then you have automatically fixed a certain amount of money required for pay and subsistence, and other allowances of the members of the Army. The pay of the Army is fixed by statute. Subsistence, of course, reflects the cost of living.

It is estimated that every enlisted man in the Army costs the Federal Government $3,150 for his pay, his clothing, his subsistence, and other allowances. The figures for officers are approximately $5,500; that is the average for the officers of various ranks. Both of these figures go higher if part of the Army is overseas, and about half of our Army is overseas. Taking these figures just as an average, if you have an Army of 1,070,000 men, with approximately 130,000 officers and warrant officers you can readily figure out what money is untouchable. Multiply the 130,000 by $5,000 for even figures and you have $650,000,000 required for the officers. Take the remaining number of men, 950,000 enlisted men and multiply that by $3,100, the average, you have something over $2,900,000,000.

If you add the $2,900,000,000 to the $650,000,000 you have $3,500,000,000 to start with as the amount required for pay, subsistence, and allowances in which no cuts can be made. The only way to reduce that would be to reduce the number of officers or men.

The military budget came to this subcommittee with budget estimates amounting to about $5,700,000,000. When you subtract the $3,500,000,000 required for, say, subsistence and allowance, you have left about $2,100,000,000 where you can operate for the purpose of making reductions. The reductions proposed by the committee total $475,000,000. It is obvious that $475,000,000 is more than 20 percent of the $2,100,000,000 that you have in the field where you can operate for the cuts.

Then, you add to that the principle that the committee took, namely, that we were not going to cut funds for research and development, and you take off another quarter of a billion dollars. You then have a 25-percent cut in items, exclusive of pay, subsistence, and allowances and funds for research and development.

This bill carries approximately $222,000,000 for research and development. It also carries approximately $23,000,000 for industrial mobilization, almost equally important.

The committee, and rightfully in my judgment, took the position that research and development should not be curtailed. We were aware of the fact that last year after we appropriated funds for research and development the President and the Bureau of the Budget proposed to impound around $100,000,000 that the Congress had appropriated for research and development. There apparently was some protest in Army circles on that figure, and as a result of a reexamination and a visit to Wright Field, where the Air Forces have their research division, the $100,000,000 that was to be cut back was reduced to $75,000,000. The $75,000,000 of the Air Forces' research and development money was frozen or impounded, and subsequently it was transferred to other purposes of the War Department. It was used in part to take care of the pay of the Army, the pay of the civilian employees; so that last year $75,000,000 that the Air Force should have had for research and development was used for other purposes.

Gen. Curtis Le May, who was head of the Twentieth Air Force, the B–29's in the Pacific, in response to questioning testified before our committee that that cut-back had delayed the research program anywhere from 8 months to a year and a half. He explained to us that a research program was not something that you could pick up now and accomplish in a few months' time but that research requires advance planning if you are going to carry it forward and use the different new devices in planes. You have to do your technical work on these devices, you have to put them on the planes. Sometimes you have to redesign the planes in order to accommodate the new instruments that you propose to put in them.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. PLOESER. Would it be the gentleman's judgment that such action on the part of the Executive was damaging to the national defense program?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. We did not think it helped at all and that is why the committee took the position we would not cut this $222,000,000 which was requested by the budget for research and development at this time. We wanted to give the Air Corps an opportunity to get caught up.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. I am in thorough accord with the committee's action in not cutting down the appropriation for research. Is there any way in which we can prevent similar action being taken next year by the Executive?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I wish I knew. We asked that question during the hearings. I do not know whether it shows on the record or not. It may have been asked off the record. There was some division of opinion as to how the Congress, if it wanted to prevent appropriated funds from being impounded by the executive branch of the Government, could accomplish it. That has been raised in connection with other appropriation bills.

I think I can say that we made it perfectly clear to those who were before us that we expected them to go ahead with the program for which we were appropriating funds. At the same time it must be recognized that the President is Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, and that as Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, if he directs officers in the Military or Naval Establishments to do certain things, as a matter of discipline and obedience they will follow his directives.

Mr. PLOESER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I think it is probably very clear that it would be impossible, certainly most difficult, for the Congress to compel the Army to spend a certain amount of this fund on research. At the same time, I think it is within our power and our province to prevent the transfer of this fund to any other purpose.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. And this bill, I may say, comes to you without a transfer clause in it. They are not going to transfer this money to some purpose other than that to which it is appropriated.

Mr. PLOESER. I think that is tremendously beneficial, in view of the fact that we have known that they transferred it to keep more unnecessary civilian employees cluttering up the War Department.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Perhaps we have taken care of that, too. On pages 5, 6, and 7 of the committee report you will find tables showing various divisions of the War Department, the number of requested positions for civilian employees, the reduction proposed by the committee, the percentage reduction, the number of the reductions, the estimated cost for the full number requested and the reduction in dollars applied.

Thus, the committee has made perfectly clear where the reductions in the number of civilian personnel are to take place, both in percentage as well as in dollars.

Now, there is one other branch of the War Department's activities where we proposed that no cuts be made, and that is in the National Guard. With some of the members of the committee I felt at different times that the National Guard had been overlooked. There is a little tendency, I think, on the part of some career men in the Army to look down a bit at the National Guard. Yet the fact remains that when we get into an emergency we always call upon the guard. Under any logical interpretation of the kind of attack that might come to this country, we can expect attacks at various parts of the country if war should come again. We cannot expect to escape attack here. We can expect that these attacks will come with suddenness; they will be surprise attacks. That to me, and I think to the members of the committee, means we should have in all parts of the country a good organized group of trained people who can be called together quickly, who will know how to respond to discipline to take charge of any situation that might arise. So, the committee proposed that no cuts should be made in the funds requested for the National Guard.

We also looked with a friendly eye toward the Organized Reserves. There was some slight cut of their civilian personnel, but for the Organized Reserves proper we did not propose any cut. If further cuts are to be made in the bill, or if cuts are to be made in military appropriations, I think you would have to turn to cutting the size of the Army itself. That involves a broad question of national policy which ought not really to be handled in this bill. If it could not be handled any other way, that question should be raised here, perhaps, but it is not the normal place to do it.

A very distinguished gentleman, a former President of the United States, who appeared before the subcommittee in connection with certain estimates which we considered, said to the members of the committee that he thinks that our Army in Germany is either too large or too little; too little to stop the advance of any enemy forces if they were to be attacked, and too large for a purely police job. That is a point of view which has some justification, I think. However, a decision as to whether or not we should reduce our armed forces overseas is a matter of broad policy.

I recall that the morning after General Marshall returned from Moscow, in a review article written by Frederick Kuhn, I believe, which appeared in the press services of the country, it was stated that the one tangible result of the Moscow Conference was an agreement that the several occupying powers should by the 1st of June report a proposed reduction of the number of troops in the occupying forces, to become effective not later than the 1st of September. On the 1st of June, or thereabouts, a report appeared in the press that the various representatives of the several occupying powers had been unable to get together on an agreement as to what that reduction should be.

I personally feel that if we are going to achieve further economies in our military budget, we must turn more and more of the job of military government and of preserving order in the occupied countries upon the native people themselves. Very substantial reductions can be made when we decide to do that. Whether or not the United States would want to do it in advance of an agreement with other powers is a question of policy that I hardly think can appropriately be determined in the consideration of the military bill. If I thought it could, I would be in favor of proposing, of course, to reduce the total number of the armed forces overseas.

So much for the military bill. If the Members of the Committee during this period of general debate will indulge me, I should like to turn now to a little discussion of the so-called Taft-Hartley bill, the labor bill, as it appears now in the form of this committee print of the conferees, which some of the Members have seen and on which the House will probably vote tomorrow.

It will be recalled that the House passed a labor bill by an overwhelming vote, about 3 to 1, or better; that it passed the other body; and the bill went to a conference committee. It will, of course, be recalled that last year we came to about the same position We passed in the House of Representatives a bill dealing with labor problems. It was changed somewhat in the other body. We did not send that bill to conference. Some of us who were interested in it were successful in working with Members of the other body so that amendments were incorporated in it so that when it came from the other body it was in about the same position as the bill had been when it passed the House. The House concurred in the Senate amendments, and the bill went to the White House and was vetoed.

The question arises now as to what is going to happen to the present labor bill. Having had some definite connection with the bill a year ago, I felt it at least a privilege if not a personal responsibility to form some opinion upon the content of the bill which will come from the conference committee today or tomorrow.

VETO OF LABOR BILL INCONCEIVABLE

As I have gone through that conference committee report I have come to the conclusion that it is inconceivable that President Truman will veto the Taft-Hartley labor bill as it has come from the conferees of the House and Senate. It is inconceivable that the President should veto the bill, that is, if he is to do it on the ground that this bill carries any wallop against organized labor.

The new labor bill as written by the conferees does many things, but it certainly does not destroy organized labor. On the contrary, it says that if a majority of the employees of a given employer eligible to vote authorize it, a union may bargain with the employer to require that every employee and all new employees shall join the union within 30 days. That is, by a simple majority vote, all workers may be required to pay initiation fees and dues.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 16 additional minutes.

If anything, this statutory recognition will strengthen organized labor and bring unions into many plants which heretofore have been open shops. In the face of that one provision alone, I do not see how organized labor can even ask the President to veto the bill.

The new labor bill as it comes from the conferees is weakest, in my personal opinion, in the approach it makes to the $64 question of the strikes that tie up the Nation, the strikes that affect the general welfare, health, and safety. All that the bill proposes is a 60-day cooling-off period, enforceable by power for the Attorney General to get an injunction while a committee of inquiry reports on the facts, but is forbidden even to make recommendations for settlement. At the end of 60 days, the Mediation Service reports to the President on the progress toward settlement, if any, and the injunction is dissolved.

The only affirmative step is that within 15 days after the board of inquiry reports, the National Labor Relations Board is required to take a secret ballot of the employees on the latest offer of settlement made by the employer. There is not the slightest compulsion in the bill upon either party to seek a settlement. I have been unable to find any device in the bill which would seek to bring the play of any persuasion, natural or legal, upon either party. In fact, the bill expressly says:

> Neither party shall be under any duty to accept, in whole or in part, any proposal of settlement made by the Service.

That is about the nearest to a feather-duster solution I have ever seen proposed for national paralysis strikes. Certainly the man who came before Congress and asked for a draft of the railway workers to end the railroad strike can never veto this bill on the ground that it is too tough. As a matter of fact, the bill bows itself away from even the feather-duster approach to final strikes in railway disputes by expressly providing that—

> The provisions of this title shall not be applicable with respect to any matter which is subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act.

In other words, if a situation develops again as developed with the railroads there will be nothing more to deal with the situation than we had the last time.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. If John L. Lewis were to call a strike in the coal industry, what remedy would there be under this bill other than the 60-day postponement?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not find any.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I do not either.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Under the provisions of this bill, John L. Lewis could not by his own act call a strike. Is that not true? In other words, there must be a vote by secret ballot. Is that not correct?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Well, it might be a secret ballot. If John L. Lewis continues as he has, I imagine he would be able to get the secret verdict he wants.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. That would depend on how the miners voted.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. In any event, when the strike is called, what does this bill offer? It offers a chance to ask the Attorney General to get a 60-day injunction and when those 60 days have expired and the report is made of whatever steps have been taken, and the report may not bring in recommendations, the injunction is dissolved. The bill says:

> The Attorney General shall move for a dissolution of the injunction.

There you are.

The bill offers only one further step in the matter of strikes which the President thinks affect the national health or safety. When the injunction is dissolved the President is required to submit to the Congress a report of the proceedings with recommendations if he has any to make. What is then to happen if Congress is not in session, the bill does not say.

So, it is my personal opinion that the bill does not come to grips with the problem of the national welfare strike in the way that problem must be faced and met.

Mr. HALE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HALE. Does not the gentleman think that ad hoc legislation offered in an emergency is almost certain to be bad?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The recommendation which the President asked in that certain emergency, I think, was bad. That is the kind of situation we are left with, even if the Congress were in session and the President came up with some emergency legislation which would be as the gentleman has described it, written hurriedly and poorly checked. The ad hoc bill which the President sent up in the railroad emergency last year, as I recall, proposed to give him the right to draft railroad workers by declaring an emergency which he alone could end. That was the form of the bill as it came up to Congress. So I do not like this feature of the conference bill which leaves an answer to general strikes to be found when the emergency arises.

On the other hand, the bill does provide many salutary improvements in existing law. None of these changes afford a ground for veto; on the contrary, they constitute the positive reasons why the Congress should send the bill to the White House and why the President should sign it into law.

First of all, the bill rewrites the Wagner Act in the light of the 12 years of experience we have had in its operation. Any law of a general character, pioneering in a field as temperamental as industrial relations, can well afford examination and revision in the light of its actual workings.

The Taft-Hartley bill establishes a list of unfair labor practices for labor organizations or their agents corresponding to the unfair labor practices established in the original Wagner Act for employers. In this respect, the bill is similar to the revised bill which I introduced at the opening of this session of Congress, H. R. 725.

Among the matters dealt with by this device are featherbedding, jurisdictional disputes and secondary boycotts, refusals to bargain with employers, coercion of workers, discrimination in employment, and freedom of speech for the employer. I may say, however, that the language on freedom of speech leaves much to be desired, in my opinion.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. When you go out and talk to your constituents you tell them if they elect you Congressman they will get benefits. They will get a good Congressman. If they elect the other fellow they will not get quite so good a Congressman.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not say much about the other fellow.

Mr. HOFFMAN. At least you lead them them to believe that if they elect you they will get a good Congressman. Otherwise you would not be a candidate. This provision about free speech provides that he can give a speech if he does not make any threats or offer any benefits. How can you make a speech unless your heart is in it and you can offer benefits?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman answers his own question.

Only time will tell how effectively these problems are treated, but at least a definite legal ground work is laid for dealing with these matters.

In my judgment, this is progress. The measure of the progress will rest to a large extent with the National Labor Relations Board which is to be enlarged from three to five members, and its functions made more clearly policy making and less administrative. This change in the composition of the Board, and its field, incidentally, is one which I endorse and was first proposed, I believe in the bill, H. R. 725, which I introduced early in January, as previously mentioned.

Also, in the first title of the bill, the procedural provisions of the old National Labor Relations Act have been improved and made to conform more nearly to approved equity practice. These are matters of detail, but important and worth while in any comprehensive approach to the field of labor legislation.

Certainly there is nothing in this general revision of the Wagner Act which would afford the President any consolation for a veto, much less justification. He might pick out a phrase here or there of a picayunish character that he would rewrite, but surely he would find many more objectionable phrases in the original Wagner Act as it now stands on the statute books.

Title II of the bill established a Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service as an independent agency of the Government, merging with it the Conciliation Service now located in the Department of Labor. Although the President objected to the provisions in the vetoed Case bill of last year which took the Conciliation Service out of the Department of Labor, there is good reason to believe that he would not veto a bill this year on that ground.

Certainly those who have followed the course of labor legislation will be impressed by the number of people, both those known as radical and as conservative, who believe the Conciliation or Mediation Service should be independent and utterly above suspicion of bias or control.

The bill introduces a new and generally well recommended device in the form of a National Labor-Management Panel to assist the Mediation Service in its efforts to avoid industrial controversies and to achieve voluntary adjustments of controversies that do arise.

The principle of mediation and conciliation is well established. It is recognized in the present Conciliation Service. The changes proposed here by statute correspond in a general way to procedures that have been more or less formalized by administrative orders in present practice. Certainly, nothing in this part of the bill affords any ground for a Presidential veto on that score. Indeed, this portion of the bill the President may welcome if grapevine rumors of his displeasure with some operations of the present Conciliation Service have any foundation.

The Taft-Hartley bill incorporates some other provisions which were in the Case bill of last year and which are pretty much accepted as proper subjects of legislation.

For instance, the bill establishes suability for and by labor organizations as entities. The bill last year did that. The objection to suits against labor organizations has stemmed from a proper resentment against the travesty that took place in the old Danbury Hatters case where individual members of a union were harried and their property attached to satisfy a judgment for action taken by officers whom they did not control. It was as bad as such action would be against minority and individual stockholders of a corporation for acts they could not control. Both ir the bill last year, and in this Taft-Hartley bill, the language while making labor organizations responsible under their contracts and for the acts of their agents, limits judgments to the assets of the organization itself.

The bill, as did the bill vetoed last year, requires that welfare funds be administered on a trust basis if the employer contributes to them. In this respect, the conference bill, in my opinion, is an improvement over the House bill which forbade welfare funds altogether and did not even permit employer payment or contribution to the mutual-aid or benefit-insurance funds many well-established and well-respected labor organizations and craft lodges have maintained for many years. Certainly this feature will not invite a Presidential veto. It should be welcomed by organized labor.

The bill incorporates other features which are generally accepted as appropriate items in any modern labor legislation.

The ban on political contributions which has been the law as a part of the Smith-Connally Act now expiring, is picked up and extended to primaries and conventions as well as general elections.

There is a ban on strikes by Government employees which is in keeping with stated governmental policy and certainly will not prompt a veto.

There is a provision to protect labor organizations from having officers who are members of the Communist Party. It relieves the National Labor Relations Board from investigating matters raised by labor organizations unless the organization has on file an affidavit that its officers are not members of the Communist Party and have not been within the preceding 12 months. Surely the rank and file of sturdy American workers will welcome that protection and the President will hardly deny it to them by vetoing the bill because that is offered.

There is one significant portion of the bill, title IV, which definitely bids for Presidential support. It proposes to create a joint committee from the Senate and House Committees on Labor to study basic problems affecting friendly labor relations and productivity and report by March 15, 1948, with recommendations. Since the President made such a recommendation on the subject in a special message to the Congress a year ago, he certainly will not veto the bill on the ground that it carries such a provision.

Taken in a broad way, then, the Taft-Hartley bill offers some improvements in existing law, writes into law some generally approved practices, and offers one method, gentle though it be, of recognizing that a national emergency may exist in case of a strike affecting national health or safety.

If political lieutenants or so-called leaders of labor brandish old, hackneyed phrases about vicious or drastic antilabor legislation, and browbeat the President into veto of this bill, America will have witnessed gangsters entering the White House and holding up the President with a wooden gun.

Mr. McDONOUGH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. McDONOUGH. In other words, summarizing the bill—and I appreciate the fine statement the gentleman has just made—is there anything, in the gentleman's opinion, in the bill that would do any harm to any legitimate organized labor union that is organized for the benefit of its membership?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Absolutely not.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. Is it the gentleman's opinion that the prosecutive and judicial functions of the National Labor Relations Board are separated far enough that they will be performed equitably?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think there is an improvement in the bill in that respect. I did not mention that feature. I do think that improves the present Wagner Act. The new National Labor Relations Board will become more of a policy-making board, more of a quasi-judicial board. The investigatory functions are separated from the duties of the individual board members. This is a change from the way they operated in the past.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. The gentleman has made a splendid analysis of the conference report. I wish to compliment him. Does not the gentleman believe that this bill can be designated as neither prolabor nor promanagement but as a middle of the road bill fair to both parties?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. It certainly is a fair bill. It is not either prolabor or promanagement. As I stated in the first part of my remarks I do not think it goes as far as it should in dealing with national welfare strikes. I think it goes farther than it should in encouraging the establishment of union shops with compulsory membership by a simple majority vote of the employees of a given employer. I think it should have done something more to regulate mass picketing activities. The gentleman is probably warranted in describing it as a middle-of-the-road bill.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. Speaking in generalities, may I ask the gentleman whether in his opinion this bill by its terms even approaches in severity the bill which the President stood in this House and advocated last year?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Certainly not.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, the members of the subcommittee have already been complimented, including our able and efficient clerk, Mr. Robert Lambert, who has been working with intelligence and energy on a day-and-night basis for weeks trying to whip this bill into shape for presentation to the House. The virtues of our chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], have not been overestimated. I have observed in my service here that occasionally a member will arise and extol the virtues of a colleague, his statesmanship, his capacity, but finally makes some reservations which take away the spirit of the compliment. Well, I have no reservations with respect to my chairman. I yield to no one in my admiration for his energy and effort. He is an able and diligent servant of the American people. Of course, I do not always agree with him, and I am sure he would not expect me to.

I want to say at the outset that this bill—the appropriation bill for the War Department for the fiscal year beginning July 1, 1947—is to me very unacceptable in some particulars and I want to make reference now to one particular in which it is most unacceptable from my standpoint. I shall offer an amendment, not as a token amendment, not merely for the record, but with the hope of getting results, an amendment which will restore the airplane-production program requested by General Spaatz, Chief of the Army Air Forces, who plead with this Committee almost on bended knees to give him this money for what he called an already greatly impoverished air force. I think that the money requested for aircraft procurement ought to be restored and I think when the President of the United States affixes his signature to this bill it will have been restored. I make that prediction now for the record.

The bill provides for a reduction below the estimates of the President's budget in the sum of $475,000,000. I am not now going to offer amendments to restore more than $40,000,000 of that sum. I do think that some of the cuts were too deep and that we cannot save the amounts that we undertook to save here. I think we can probably save several hundred million dollars but I feel that we should proceed with caution. It would be difficult to exaggerate the importance of a strong national defense program in these days of uncertainty.

Let no one mistake the position of the members of this committee. We are all favorable toward economy and good government. No one in America of either political party has a monopoly upon that virtue. When the able chairman of our committee early in the session stood athwart the path of Government spending he expressed the fervent hope that appropriations in this bill could be cut by $1,000,000,000. It has been my hope and belief that substantial savings could safely be made. In my opinion further study by the War Department of the present bill will reveal that additional changes will be in the public interest.

Now, we marked up this bill after several days of deliberation and we put our pencils down, and I, for one, thought that we had agreed in subcommittee on the final draft of the measure, having begun consideration of the bill on February 17. But, after we had marked up the bill the subcommittee was called back into session. That was about the time that the Navy bill was to be reported out, and it was then stated that an effort would be made to cut the funds in the bill for the aviation-procurement program. I protested then, as I protest now, the action of the committee in reducing the airplane-procurement program for the United States Army Air Forces.

In the committee report which was originally prepared I protested the fact that in the report as then written there was only one line in the whole report which made reference to the procurement of airplanes, and that was over in a table in the latter part of the document.

Following my protestations, which must have been considered valid, the chairman of our committee has written now on pages 8 and 9 of the report a statement in considerable detail regarding the aviation program. I thought that the committee should be forthright with the country and the Congress and say exactly what was being done by way of reducing the aircraft procurement program. If any justification existed for such action it should have been plainly set forth. But the original report did not give to the Congress and the press of the country an accurate statement as to that situation, and as a result, on Thursday, May 29, the Evening Star, of Washington, which is one of the most reputable papers in the Nation, came out with a three-column headline making reference to the Army military budget cut of 8 percent and in a subheadline the Evening Star said the following:

"$5,240,982,423 fund includes full plane, research requests."

Well, the bill did nothing of the kind, and of course, nobody now maintains that it did do anything of the kind. But it was unfortunate that this sort of information was at first accepted as the correct statement of the situation by the press.

Now, we do have 30,000 planes, but as I said earlier in the discussion today, some of them are little more than cracker boxes. Many of them, many thousands, in fact, are out in the open. It remains to be seen how well they will weather the ravages of time. Certainly by the thousands they are becoming unusable year by year. No one would say that we have more than 9,000 first line aircraft. I do not have the exact figures before me. No one would say that all of them would be readily usable.

Mr. REES. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. REES. With respect to the airplanes, what excuse is there for having destroyed quite a number of B–29 airplanes that were in the process of being built and almost completed at the close of hostilities? Quite a number of B–29 airplanes were in the process of construction at that time, a great many of them almost completed. They made junk out of them, destroyed them. In view of the gentleman's statement, what excuse could there be for that sort of policy?

Mr. MAHON. I think there could be no excuse any time for the destruction of first-rate B–29 aircraft. I have no information indicating that completed B–29 aircraft may have been destroyed. If the gentleman wishes to pursue that question, I wish he would get his own time, because I am not familiar with the facts about which he is now speaking. Undoubtedly there was a cut-back in plane production when the war ended and production stopped on B–29's just starting down the assembly line.

Mr. REES. I shall be glad to furnish the gentleman information on that subject.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. Does not the gentleman take the position that whatever may have been done in the past which was wrong or unjustified, the idea now is, as the possessor of atomic energy, and with the necessity for building up experimental planes to utilize jet propulsion, that the small number of planes, some 900, asked for by the War Department is certainly a minimum for us to proceed with experimentation on planes that would be essential in the event of another emergency?

Mr. MAHON. Yes, the gentleman makes a very fine point. I am not one who is willing to look backward when it comes to the matter of aviation, nor am I one who is willing to be other than very enthusiastic for the expansion of our aviation program. The fact that in the committee report as it was originally drafted there was only one line about the airplane procurement program, which looms as one of the large items in the bill, $440,000,000, would leave the implication that those who had written the report were not air-minded. I cannot feel that this is true, but that is the logical deduction.

The gentleman will remember that following World War I some of the nations tried to hold onto their old equipment, and looked to that equipment for security. That fact contributed somewhat to disastrous consequences later. If America today spends a lot of time looking for security to old, antiquated aircraft that we have on hand, America will be inviting trouble in the battle for postwar supremacy. I, for one, am not as much concerned about what we have or what we had, as I am with the possibilities for the future. It is in the future that the hope of our country lies.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Louisiana.

Mr. BROOKS. Would not the gentleman feel it would be only fair to say that when the war ended even the B–29 was not the latest, most efficient, and most effective type of heavy aircraft being produced?

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is correct. Of course, that would not justify the discarding of first-rate B–29 aircraft.

Mr. KILDAY. If the gentleman will yield further, I believe the gentleman would agree with me that neither of us would support an appropriation to build any large number of the conventional-type airplanes or the type that we used during the last war. Admitting that the B–29 is the best that any nation has at this time, still I would not be willing to go ahead and build a large number of B–29's certainly not B–17's, P–51's, or P–47's, but I would be willing to go along with experimentation and development so that we can properly utilize jet propulsion and perhaps atomic propulsion, and certainly the type of airplane that would be in a position to utilize the atomic bomb.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman is correct. Other nations of the world are interested in aircraft: Since I came on the floor the gentleman from Texas [Mr. WORLEY] has shown me a newspaper clipping to the effect that one of the great nations of the world is contemplating a 100,000-airplane-procurement program. I doubt that such a statement as that is entirely authentic, but to me it is unthinkable at this time before the peace has been written and when there are perils on every side and when the streamer headline of one of the papers in Washington, D. C., said yesterday, "The United States warned to get set for atomic warfare," I say it is unthinkable that we would refuse to give the Army Air Forces, the queen of the skies up to this day and forever the queen of the skies so far as I am concerned, that we would deny General Spaatz's plea and the earnest appeal of our President for 749 planes as carried in the budget.

I say, Mr. President, and I say, General Spaatz, and I know that the General would agree with me, "You have not asked for enough planes for the Army Air Forces." Certainly, I shall not take the responsibilty for reducing the number of the planes requested.

On all these controversial and complicated issues that come before the Congress, it is never quite possible to tell just how certain members feel about different questions. Here, however, the point is easily discernible, the point is well drawn and very simple. We will have a chance to vote on it, and every man can record his position and write it in the RECORD as to whether or not he is for a first-rate aircraft program as requested by the Chief of the Air Forces and the President of the United States. If Members vote for my amendment to restore 188 tactical aircraft—jet propulsion bombers and fighters and planes of that type—then they are voting for the kind of air force I believe we need. If Members want to record themselves as voting to the contrary, that is the privilege of a Member of the House of Representatives.

I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] who, in my opinion, will probably be willing to support this amendment before this bill goes to the White House.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. As the gentleman knows, because he was in the committee, I was not enthusiastic about this particular reduction at this time.

Mr. MAHON. That is right.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. But there is something to be said for the point of view which was expressed by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], and that was that the B–29 was more or less obsolete when we came through the war, and the viewpoint that finally prevailed with the majority of the committee was that we did not want to load the Air Force up with some obsolete planes. We wanted to say to the President that we want to save some money so that we would have it to spend on buying some modern aircraft after we get the benefit of the renewed reasearch and development program which he had set back to the tune of $75,000,000 last year.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. The research and development program is, of course, important, but, mind you, that nation is marked for trouble which waits until it has a perfect aircraft before it starts working on the production line. The gentleman from South Dakota knows, as I do, through long months of service on the committee, that every airplane that comes off the assembly line is at that moment to some degree obsolescent. We have appropriated and vouchsafed appropriations of money time and again for modification centers to take that new aircraft just off the assembly and put in the latest improvements that had been subsequently developed. So we cannot wait to get the last word in research before aircraft construction is begun. To do so would mean that no planes would ever be constructed.

If we did lose some time on research and development last year we cannot make it up now. We can only go on from here. It is like General Spaatz said on page 615 of the hearings:

> We are not trying to make up that loss in 1948 appropriation. But we have taken the loss in time, so instead of the 5-year research and development program that would be finished in 1952, that project will now end in 1953 or 1954.

Please note this fact as to research and development: You can spend a billion dollars in research and development and it may not get results. We might have spent $2,000,000,000 on the atomic bomb, as we did, and then it might not have worked. Research and development does not always work as planned, but I would not minimize the great importance of such activity.

So, what we will do with our future program is to use the best information we have in devising the best aircraft that can be produced.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. KILDAY. With reference to the remarks made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] does the gentleman feel we should be concerned, if the Army Air Force got the 932 planes it originally hoped to get from the money they asked for, or the 749 planes which it would actually buy because of the increase in price by the time the bill came here, or if it should get 561 which this bill would permit them to acquire, that there would be any danger of overloading the Army Air Force with antique types of planes?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON] has again expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman from Texas 10 additional minutes.

Mr. MAHON. It is unthinkable to me that any thoughtful person would say that with an air force of more than 300,000 men, 749 new planes would be too much for the air forces for training and for national security. At least we need a little nucleus of an air force of the most modern design if we are to train air personnel and if we are in the test tube of experience, to develop all the bugs and defects to the end that we may have better planes, more efficient, powerful, and safer for air force personnel.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is one other factor that I think the committee should be aware of in its consideration of this procurement proposition. Some commitee which has studied our airplane picture thinks that there should be about 3,000 planes a year produced, of a military character, for the Army and Navy.

Mr. MAHON. Yes. Will the gentleman permit me to say that the Army program as now written of 561 planes, plus the Navy program of 575 planes, would give us something less than 1,500 planes, and something like 1,500 planes short of what might be necessary for us to maintain the aircraft industry.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That is the picture as far as current funds are concerned. Of course, that is not quite the entire picture. I know there are many Members on the floor who are really and sincerely trying to get at the bottom of this situation. I would like to have the Members refer to page 8, where you will find a listing, not merely of the new funds carried in this bill but of the items that are on order, the money unobligated, that was available for this purpose, and the contract authority in the bill. You will note there is a little table there which shows that on February 8, 1947, we had on order for the Air Corps $616,523,000. There was also unobligated $50,417,564 on that date. The bill provides $396,000,000. Then the bill carries contract authority for $280,000,000, making a new procurement total of $1,342,940,571. It is a question on which experts could honestly disagree.

Mr. MAHON. But the experts in aviation do not disagree.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The question is how much you want to put into procurement until you have your research and development program brought up to date. I recall we had a somewhat similar occasion that arose before the war when General Arnold suggested to some members of the subcommittee that we ought not to go too strong on the purchase of certain planes because he thought they would be obsolete by the time he got them and he wanted to get the benefit of some new research incorporated into the planes and did not want to get loaded up.

We do not want to get some more cracker boxes. The gentleman referred to cracker boxes.

Mr. MAHON. Will the gentleman now let me proceed?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I will agree that men well may vary in their opinions as to how much we can appropriate to establish a certain policy. If we find that the domestic aircraft industry may not be able to turn out what we ought to have I will be inclined to go along with the gentleman if it comes to that point; but at the same time I do not think the country or the Congress ought to have an impression other than what is the truth, and that is that there is over $1,342,000,000 for Air Force procurement.

Mr. MAHON. That is correct. Mr. Chairman, I must decline to yield further until I have proceeded with my statement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I appreciate the gentleman's courtesy.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has quoted with approval the warning words of General Arnold as the yardstick which we should follow. Following out the same line of argument I have quoted the statement of General Spaatz, his successor; and I hope the gentleman will be willing, as I think he eventually will, to vote for my amendment. I think the Congress is for an adequate aircraft program and I know the people are for such a program. I think the Members of Congress will hesitate to say that they want fewer planes than the very minimum requested by the Chief of the Air Forces and the President of the United States.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. I am one of those who is not on this committee and who is not on the Military Affairs Committee. I do not know much of the details, but as the matter strikes me what we have here is a question of whether we are going to defend America with outmoded equipment, second-rate or obsolete equipment, or whether we are going to carry out the promise that has been made to the American people of keeping American aviation second to none in the world.

Mr. MAHON. I know what the people I represent want—what the people of the Nation want. They want an air force second to none. They want economy, but they do not want it taken out of the Army Air Forces. They do not want Congress to proclaim to the world that America is weakening in her aviation program, that America is slipping, that America is cutting down the number of aircraft required for national security. I do not want to send that word to the capitals of the world and I do not propose to do so; and I do not think the Congress ought to do it. That is the reason I propose to offer this amendment later in the proceedings on this bill.

I should like to make this statement: Commercial aircraft are different from military aircraft. Commercial aviation companies cannot very well make combat planes. Combat airplane factories are required. I want you to hear what General Spaatz says with respect to the airplane industry. You will find it at page 603 of the hearings. He says a number of important things with respect to that matter, which I now quote:

General SPAATZ. I am gravely concerned that we are today rapidly losing one of our principal elements of national security. Our aircraft industry increased to a size where it was able to turn out 80,000 planes in a year in the last year of the last Great War. It was not able to arrive at that status until more than 5 years had elapsed after initial mobilization. We will not be given 5 years in which to prepare and build up to maximum output the next time. In 1948 our aircraft industry faces a prospect of building less than 1,500 planes. That means that the industry will practically disappear. In this unhappy event, the Nation will lose one of its prime resources for defensive and offensive strength. One of the essential elements of its war-making potential will have disappeared. I urge the Congress to realize the gravity of this situation and work out sound measures for maintaining the aircraft industry at the minimum level which, in my opinion, requires an annual production of about 3,000 planes.

The aviation industry cannot produce a few planes this year, fewer next year, and a great number the third year. There must be an even flow.

As the gentleman has so well pointed out the Air Forces already have hundreds of millions of dollars for the construction of aircraft that are coming off the assembly lines now and will continue to come off the assembly lines for 2 years. The planes that we are providing for in this bill will come off the assembly lines in about 2 years. We must project that production line forward.

I am advised that the military aviation industry is threatened by reason of the following conditions:

There is not enough business to keep the industry at a high tempo. The aviation plants are too large for the small amount of business which they have, but we cannot permit the junking and dismemberment of plant capacity because this capacity will be of the greatest importance if trouble comes. We have to be ready for it in our industrial mobilization program.

Our combat plane industry had a lot of foreign orders prior to and during the war. They no longer have that business. So it is up to us to be watchful, alert, and ready if we are to meet the difficulties which may befall us in the future.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. THOMASON. Our colleague is making a very able argument in support of his position. The thing that is almost past understanding with me is that the very able gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] made a fine argument in behalf of the item for research and development, yet I do not know what we need with so much money for research and development if we are not going to put some of it into practical use. The committee seems to have done a good job in practicing economy in connection with a good many items. However, I belong to that school which believes that the very last thing we ought to cut in an appropriation bill such as this is the matter of airplanes and atomic energy. Forty million dollars, the amount that will be in the gentleman's amendment when he offers it, is not a drop in the bucket compared to the total in this appropriation bill. In view of present world conditions and also the advance in scientific development, there are two things that under no condition ought to be cut below what the experts tell us, experts such as, General Spaatz, General Arnold, and General Vandenberg, and I challenge anybody who is opposed to the gentleman's amendment to find a single man in a high place in the Air Corps who will not say that the last thing that ought to be cut in this bill is the matter of airplane production.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. NORRELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Texas for his timely comment. The argument is correct, it is unanswerable. It is in the heart of the American people to follow the philosophy which the gentleman has expressed and it is up to us in the Congress to follow it.

I should like to point out that we seem to have been conscious of the importance of aviation when we passed the Navy bill, because we did not reduce the procurement for the Navy. The Navy procurement program of 575 planes is greater in numbers than the procurement program in this bill for the Army. I have no jealousy as between the services, but if aviation was essential for national defense a week before last, why is it not a good thing now?

Mr. THOMASON. I am one of those who believes that under present world conditions we ought to have the best air force in the world. In view of this report and what the report says about the appropriation for air activities, I feel certain that we will soon be a second-rate power from an air force standpoint unless we take the necessary precautions. Drastic reduction in aircraft is a danger and a gamble we cannot afford to take under present world conditions.

Mr. MAHON. That is right, and it is up to us to furnish the leadership in this contest.

Mr. THOMASON. The very able chairman of this subcommittee who has contributed much, especially in the line of economy and economical government, could surely find some other places in this bill to dig out this $40,000,000 and let this item be restored. There are plenty of us who are going along and will join the gentleman in his fight to restore the item for aircraft procurement.

Mr. MAHON. Let me say for the gentleman from Michigan that it was only as a last resort and after the bill had been tentatively agreed to that this unwise reduction was made. One of the old-time hymns admonishes us to "yield not to temptation." At first the committee pushed aside the proposal to reduce the aircraft program but later yielded to the temptation to cut out the $40,000,000. Yielding in this matter endangers our future security.

Mr. POAGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. POAGE. Will it not have an adverse effect? If I understood the gentleman's argument correctly, it seems to me he makes a very logical case that if we do not appropriate this money and keep a constant stream of money going into the military aircraft program we are going to put the military aircraft business out of being. If we do that, then seek to bring it back, each time we bring it back we increase greatly the cost of each individual plane. The cost of these planes is going to increase if we do not build them at a more or less level rate.

Mr. MAHON. The gentleman has made a very fine point. The committee cut the procurement program from 749 planes to 561 planes. The cut in the funds was only 10 percent, but that cut is about 20 percent in aircraft. Going into the cost of the first planes is your engineering costs, and many such expenditures, but as you increase the number of units you bring down the per unit cost, and we can get so much more for our money if we will spend this additional $40,000,000 which my amendment provides. In other words, we will get more for the $40,000,000, which I include in my amendment, than we will probably get for much larger funds included in the bill, by reason of the fact so well pointed out by the gentleman from Texas.

Now, the bill does not cut research and development directly, except to this extent, that it reduces the number of officer personnel, some of whom are engaged in research and development. The Army of the future has got to be a smart Army. You cannot get men on low salaries to afford the leadership in research and development. You must have men of experience and capacity, and you must have top flight officers for much of that work, and this bill reduces rather drastically the officer personnel. The civilian personnel in the Department, having to do with research and development, has been to some extent reduced, if I understand correctly the implications of the bill before us as it applies to departmental personnel here in Washington.

I should like, if I have time, to make reference to the cut in the warrant officers. There are at present only about 5,200. The number is cut approximately in half. Now, a warrant officer position is something to which the enlisted man may look forward. He may become a warrant officer, and it has many advantages. It is something to stimulate his ambition for a life in the service. But, the bill reduces the warrant officers almost in half. It is like coming along and saying, "Reduce the number of master sergeants." I say we ought to do everything in our power to encourage the enlisted men, and those who favor more opportunity for incentive for the enlisted man, I think, should deplore the action of the committee in reducing the warrant officers to the extent they were reduced.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, can the gentleman tell us how many warrant officers we will have under this bill?

Mr. MAHON. I think we have about 5,200 now, and the committee cut out something like 2,600, which leaves about 2,600. It is a very disturbing bombshell in the laps of the warrant officers of the Nation and a deterrent to incentive among the enlisted men.

Mr. THOMASON. In that connection, can the gentleman also tell us how many majors there are now in the Army?

Mr. MAHON. There are some very interesting facts in the hearings in regard to the military officer personnel. Page 1591 of the hearings indicates that we probably have about 18,000 majors.

Mr. THOMASON. I agree with the gentleman that we ought to provide an incentive for the enlisted men, even though we have to cut the officer personnel in some branches.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman five additional minutes.

Mr. MAHON. I would like to say by way of further compliment to the able chairman of the committee, that this hearing is the most understandable and valuable hearing that this subcommittee has ever held in its entire history, in my judgment. It contains more than 1,600 pages. It gives the answers to a lot of our questions, and if Members are interested enough, as I know they are, to know more about this aviation problem, and the amendment I expect to offer, I hope they will avail themselves of the opportunity to read those hearings.

Before I conclude I want to say that General Richards, the budget officer of the War Department, who has worked day and night in his job, and who has an amazing capacity for an understanding of the War Department program, and whose integrity and capacity have never been questioned, has given us every assistance. I am sure that all the members of the committee will be glad for me to express the high esteem in which we hold the able budget officer of the War Department, General Richards.

Mr. THOMASON. I am sure every Member of this House is interested in efficient and honest Government, but during the course of this very interesting debate the chairman of the committee alluded to the fact that he had tried to get two competent auditors to audit the War Department. Can the gentleman tell us whether or not the hearings have disclosed anything that is irregular or illegal or out of line in the activities of General Richards or anybody else in high authority in the War Department?

Mr. MAHON. May I say to the gentleman that the committee has no information which would give any implication at all of irregularity in the War Department. As a member of the Government Corporations subcommittee, I may say that we find that many of the Government corporations have different bookkeeping systems and the various departments of the Government have different bookkeeping systems. The procedure used varies with the department. As the gentleman knows, the accounts of the War Department are kept by the Chief of Finance and the responsibility for the accounting system rests with the Chief of Finance. No doubt he would welcome a complete audit by the General Accounting Office if Congress should desire that such be done.

For one, I feel that General Richards and General Eisenhower and Secretary of War Patterson have been very faithful in undertaking to perform the duties assigned to them.

Mr. LYLE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. LYLE. Here is a matter that bothers me in the consideration of appropriation bills for both the Army and the Navy. Do you arrive at what the Army needs in the interest of the country by what gentlemen like General Spaatz and General Eisenhower and men of that nature tell you, or do you take what they tell you and fit it to the demands of, let us say, the chairman of the committee, who says, "We can spare only so much next year in the defense of our country, and we are going to take what you say and cut it down to fit that." Tell me how you arrive at these things. There seems to be some misunderstanding about how you arrive at them.

Mr. MAHON. If the gentleman will permit, my idea of proper procedure——

Mr. LYLE. Not "proper procedure"; how did you get at it? I know the gentleman's ideas of what is proper and I think they are right, but how did you get at it?

Mr. MAHON. Of course, there is and has been a great urgency to cut Government spending, and some suggestion had been made that a billion dollars could be cut off the War Department appropriation bill.

Mr. LYLE. Were you trying to fit it to the pattern, were you trying to fit it to the budget set out by Congress, or were you trying to fit it to the needs of defense of this Government in the face of its responsibilities, on the advice of men who know?

Mr. MAHON. I, myself, was trying to fit it to our American responsibility and our commitments of 1947 and 1948 and the years that are to come.

Mr. LYLE. I congratulate the gentleman. I believe that the principle he advocates is sound and is worth fighting for.

I can remember so well in 1944 on the beachhead of Anzio when we did not have enough airplanes, and men had to sit up 24 hours a day with their guns turned up into the air, cocked and ready to shoot because we did not have American planes to fly over and give those boys a moment to get any rest. I can remember too well when enemy air superiority gave us all sorts of bloodshed and white crosses. This Nation owes it to the people who fought and died and to unborn generations never to get caught like that again.

Mr. MAHON. I thank the gentleman for his fine contribution. I have taken the time of the House to discuss this matter because I feel deeply what I am sure the gentleman from Texas, who served so valiantly during the war, feels even more deeply, that we cannot take the risk entailed in diminishing the strength of our Air Forces in the light of present world conditions.

Under leave granted, I wish to insert the following letter from the Secretary of War, which was addressed to the ranking minority member of the Appropriations Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CANNON] in response to our request for information as to the effect of the committee action in reducing funds requested for the Air Forces:

OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF WAR,
June 2, 1947.

Hon. CLARENCE CANNON,
House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CANNON: This is in response to your inquiry as to the effect upon the program of the Army Air Forces of a possible reduction in the estimates of funds for fiscal year 1948, for the procurement of new complete aircraft.

The budget estimate for the Army Air Forces for fiscal year 1948, as presented to the Congress, contains an item of $440,000,000 which includes $400,000,000 for the procurement of complete aircraft and $40,000,000 for maintenance spare parts. This estimate, prepared in September 1946, contemplated the procurement of a total of 932 complete aircraft with related spare engines and spare parts based upon prices as of September 1, 1946. Since September 1, 1946, higher labor and material costs and essential equipment improvements have increased the total costs of aircraft to such an extent that, at current prices, the $400,000,000 contained in the estimate for complete aircraft would now enable the procurement of approximately 749 complete aircraft, a reduction of 183, or 20 percent from that originally contemplated.

A reduction of $40,000,000 in the budget estimate for this item would cause a further reduction in the number of aircraft which could be procured to approximately 561 aircraft or a total reduction of 371 aircraft, or 40 percent from that originally contemplated. This additional reduction of approximately 188 aircraft would eliminate the procurement of approximately 63 bomber and fighter aircraft and all of the scheduled 125 liaison aircraft. The application of the reduction would be made to those aircraft of lowest priority; the nonavailability of which would be least detrimental to the Air Forces.

Having in mind the need for utmost economy consistent with the minimum requirements of the Army Air Forces for our national defense, the estimate as submitted to the Congress did not provide for any training aircraft or other models of aircraft, the procurement of which could be deferred through the use of less modern and older aircraft. The estimate, except for 125 liaison aircraft of new design at a cost of approximately $5,500,000, was almost wholly for the procurement of the most modern bombers, and jet fighters in quantities barely sufficient to sustain a relatively small efficient modern air force. Any dollar reduction would necessarily have to be taken practically entirely in the procurement of the latest models of bomber and fighter aircraft. This would be extremely detrimental to an already impoverished air force, one that is already short of the essential modern equipment required to maintain an air force of the quality and efficiency which is critically essential in the event of an emergency.

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. TIBBOTT] be permitted to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Dakota?

There was no objection.

Mr. TIBBOTT. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to pay tribute to the chairman of our subcommittee, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], who for the past 4 months has worked hard, diligently, and accurately in holding hearings on this appropriation bill. At all times he was fair with and considerate of the witnesses appearing before us. I am greatly indebted to him personally for his many courtesies.

While the committee did not agree on everything, yet it is my opinion that the bill, as a whole, is for the best interest of the country today. I regret that illness prevented our very able colleague the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. NORRELL] from attending all our meetings.

The fiscal stability is a searching problem facing the American people now.

The huge Federal debt is of great concern to me. I presume it is of great concern to everyone here. As we know when a government cannot make both ends meet, it pays its bills by manufacturing the money needed. There are those who insist that it is all for good economy to place a back-breaking national mortgage on the children of the Nation yet unborn. Those of us who oppose that kind of reasoning are referred to as alarmists, even though we recite the facts and come in with the proof that our staggering national debt and continued large drains on the Federal Treasury mean bankruptcy. Very few individuals want to think that this great Nation of ours is headed for bankruptcy.

We, the representatives of the people, are charged with estimating as accurately as possible the revenue requirements. We are responsible for passing the controlling laws of expenditures. Our estimates of fiscal requirements for a fiscal year are based upon months and months of hearings and study. It is obvious that our estimates cannot be exact. There are too many factors entering into the plans and justifications of the Government departments to assume that our estimates could be exact.

What we think our fiscal requirements should be is one thing. What our judgment is on these requirements is another thing. For my part, and this is particularly true when considering the bill before us, I will follow the latter course.

I have reached this conclusion after sitting for weeks during our subcommittee hearings and helping to write the bill now under discussion. My decision has been reached as a result of careful consideration and deliberation. I propose to go into the estimates as to what is before us in a so-called general manner. I realize it would be irksome, if I were to analyze each item.

At this point I want to make it clear that I have never supported a measure which would weaken our national defense. I will not now become a party directly or indirectly whereby I could be charged with reducing the effects of our national defense. My position is that of helping the interests of the American people. I believe those interests are a demand for a moderate army here and abroad with extinction of waste, inefficiency, and duplication. These factors ought to receive the support of this Congress.

By reading the bill you will observe that nothing has been taken from the Medical Department, from the National Guard, and from the Reserve Corps. I also believe that these divisions deserve the strong support of Congress. Also, nothing has been deducted from research and development.

A reading of the hearings will convince anyone that a little less hedging is in order by the quartermaster service of the Army when testifying before the subcommittee on war appropriations.

The testimony before our committee shows that there has been great waste of food in the Army. This was admitted. Food which was wasted was deposited in the garbage can. The waste occurred here and abroad even while there was a great shortage of food.

On pages 295 and 296 of the hearings there is evidence that the Army is making every possible effort to remedy this situation. Food service schools, under the supervision of trained officers, have been set up, the purpose of which is to eliminate waste. We understand that the large turn-over in personnel has taken from the Army many good cooks and service officers, reasons which are somewhat accountable for the waste of food stuffs. Assurances were given us that trained men on food service would devote 100 percent of their time to work and study of this kind. This kind of training should promote food conservation.

On pages 321 to 325, inclusive, of the hearings there will be found testimony on the purchase of supplies and equipment for handling fuels and lubricants.

It is interesting to observe that 5-gallon drums and blitz cans are the same and not a new type can. There are 2 types of 5-gallon cans, some of which are used as water cans and others for lubricants. It seems that the Army had a surplus of these cans which were declared. After the surplus declaration was made to meet civilian demands the cans were advertised for as low as $1.78 a piece. The original cost of these cans was over $4 a piece.

We understand that the War Assets has 179,000 of these cans which the Army is trying to retrieve.

The testimony reveals that the surplus was declared on determination by a committee formed in the War Department, composed of War Department representatives and advisers who were members of the Civilian Production Administration and the Office of Production Administration.

The officers of the War Department were ordered to declare the cans in question as surplus under instructions to dispose of a quantity of these items to meet civilian demands. A total of 1,577,856 cans were declared surplus, of which number 168,516 were recovered. This kind of practice clearly shows that those responsible for it have no regard for economy.

The War Department came before us and requested appropriations to purchase 703,000 cans at $4.43 a piece. We could not be sold on their appeal of necessity in this case.

We reduced their over-all estimate for purchase of supplies and equipment for handling fuels and lubricants from seven million to five million.

On pages 326–328, inclusive, of the hearings there will be found testimony dealing with the purchase of fuels and lubricants. Estimated amount for fiscal year 1948 was $35,124,000. The committee reduced this amount by five million.

It seems that several methods are used by the Army in the purchase of gasoline. In the interior zone—for posts, camps, and stations—the Treasury Department procures on sealed bids and open-end contracts. Then each post is given so much money, after which it is paid to a local contractor who hauls the gas. The methods of overseas purchases are to buy the gasoline and oil here and ship overseas; and from the Navy. There is a joint supply system with the Navy in overseas theaters.

Of this item requested by the War Department about 15,000,000 gallons of oil are used annually. The tax on these purchases amounts to about $900,000, which flows from the War Department to the Treasury Department.

CLOTHING AND EQUIPAGE

On pages 292–294 of the hearings inclusive the testimony refers to the strength of Army and industrial mobilization. The 1948 estimated strength of the Army is 1,070,000. That means effectives and ineffectives. Ineffectives are those in hospitals, on terminal leave and so forth.

As to clothing and equipage one of the witnesses, General Middleswart, testified that the Quartermaster Service is going to get together with industry and determine where they will place the contracts. This scheme was used prior to the war when the Army actually placed tentative agreements with specific factories to purchase shoes, or clothing, or whatever else was contemplated in this line. It is their purpose to buy their requirements for the first year for 5,000,000 shoes from these factories and work in a specific manner, and beyond that they will go back into raw materials, and say this shoe program requires so many nails, thread and so forth. In other words, it is their position to work out a complete industrial plan. Better materials and more economy should be in the offing under this plan.

The committee in dealing with the estimated cost of $27,056,561 by the Army for clothing and equipage took into consideration a general increase in price of textiles, and clothing items. We reduced their estimates by $3,383,000.

Pages 361–364, inclusive, of the hearings deal almost exclusively with the proposed removal of research and development of the Quartermaster Service from Philadelphia to Boston. If the plans for a laboratory some 400 miles from the present site at Philadelphia are entertained then the taxpayers have an additional burden to think about. The testimony on the pages to which I have made reference does not in any particular show that it is in the interests of our National Defense and our economy to have the proposed laboratory in the East other than Philadelphia. Materials, equipment, colleges of great learning, and personnel are present in or easily accessible to Philadelphia, all of which are the means whereby the Quartermaster Service can and will make progress in their research and development by remaining where presently situated. The testimony before our committee on this subject clearly shows that a little more candor is the procedure for General Middleswart to follow if and when this subject is again approached and developed.

Taking into consideration all the facts and circumstances surrounding the hearings on the Quartermaster Service phase of appropriations on Military Establishment, it is my judgment that the committee has been careful and fair; careful of protecting our national defense in accord with the evidence presented to us by the mighty fine and conscientious high Army officials that testified before us. I have nothing but the highest praise for their alertness and their willingness to cooperate with us. And fair, with the American people who look to us to represent their interests according to the American way of doing things.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield 20 minutes to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. SCRIVNER].

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, at the outset may I say to the gentleman from Texas who just questioned Mr. MAHON about the committee activities that there was never any question in the mind of any member of the committee as to the attitude, the honest effort and endeavor, and the undying loyalty of every member of that committee as they pursued this particular problem. The Nation's future was our paramount thought; economy was secondary.

Mr. PLUMLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I yield.

Mr. PLUMLEY. I am getting somewhat sick and tired of the suggestion that somebody told your committee that there must be a certain percentage of cut made. Did you ever hear that?

Mr. SCRIVNER. No; I never heard that from the chairman of the subcommittee or the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations or any other Member of the House. Every man on this committee served diligently and according to the dictates of his conscience. As far as General Richards is concerned, I do not know him as well perhaps as the gentleman from Texas, but I will make this observation that any time you got information out of him you had to drag it out of him. I can show you in the hearings where the committee made requests for various pieces of information, and as far as I can find out, they still are not there. One particular report related to the President's stop-spend order and its effect on the Army. It is still not forthcoming. Perhaps by the time I get to know the general as well as the other gentlemen of the committee I will have as high a regard for him as they have. These hearings have been difficult and tedious. I wish some of those same gentlemen who have talked about the need for funds for the Army had been able to prevail upon the President that their position was right. If you will look over the report, you will find one thing that was cut by the President's freeze order was aviation and research. It seems more than passing strange that when a committee of Congress honestly and conscientiously scrutinizes the entire situation and tries to make some minor saving that a howl goes up to high heaven when we cut a few million dollars, whereas when the President does it there is nothing said, even when his cut is more drastic than the one proposed by the House. Read the hearings and learn what some of these men said when they appeared before us; how the President's cuts affected the plane program.

Where the gentleman from Texas gets this cut from 932 down to 700 planes is something that I cannot find out. I have read every page of the hearings, and I cannot find it.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I yield.

Mr. MAHON. I got that from a letter from the Secretary of War which I hope to place in my remarks.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I certainly have not seen any such letter from the Secretary of War.

Mr. MAHON. I also get that from the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], chairman of our subcommittee, who, in the full committee, as you may remember, said that the funds requested, even if they were all granted, would probably provide for no more than about 600 airplanes. The gentleman has asked for information. Will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I yield briefly to the gentleman. I was astonished to hear you make that statement because I have never seen the letter from the Secretary of War. If the gentleman has one, I think the other members should also have received a copy. If you look at the hearings on page 654 you will read the testimony of the War Department's own representatives.

I am not an aviation expert. I do not know about the cost of planes. But General Powers, who is supposed to be the authority so far as the Air Corps is concerned, said that $281,000,000 is for the procurement of 932 new airplanes. The total sum of $440,000,000 is not for the procurement of new plants, and everybody knows that. Not only that, but the newest type which the gentleman mentioned—your jet-propelled planes and supersonics which come as a result of research and development—is not in new procurement at all. They come from research money. And yet it was the taking of $75,000,000 out of research and development, General LeMay said, was the straw that broke the camel's back.

I am concerned about these things too. I have been for more years than I can remember. As a matter of fact, when I came to the House almost half of my adult life had been in or closely related to the military. It was almost a religion with me. It still is. I have advocated the two-ocean Navy, an Air Force second to none, and an Army of a million men, for almost a quarter of a century. It is not just a line with me. I believed it. I have lived it. I have breathed it. My greatest regret was that when this war came, a service-connected disability prevented me from service.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I yield.

Mr. BROOKS. I do not impugn the gentleman's sincerity or honesty or motive or desire to give this Nation what the Nation is entitled to in the way of an Air Force, but as a matter of fact, a reduction of $44,000,000 will give us less than 600 new airplanes. I am sure the gentleman, when he carefully investigates the matter, will find that that is the case.

Mr. SCRIVNER. I appreciate those words of approbation. However, there has been some suggestion that perhaps some other considerations entered into this; but here is what I am trying to get at. You talk about $44,000,000. After all these figures the chairman has given you, go back to what General Powers said in the hearings. He said this: "The $281,000,000 calls for 932 planes."

He did say that maybe this price per pound might be low—and that is the way they figure them—in other words, you build bigger planes and you get a fewer number; you build the smaller planes and you get more in number; but these are his figures. I have not seen anything yet to change the whole picture one single bit. They are his figures. They presented them—and ample time elapsed for them to submit any necessary changes.

Remember, as you sit here discussing this you are trying, as these men tried and we tried, to project yourselves into the future, not only 3 months or 6 months but a year or 2 years or 5 years, and if anyone can tell me what the costs are going to be then, he has certainly got a big job waiting for him, because there are a lot of questions I and many others would like to ask him.

Coming back to the new planes, look on page 13 and see what General Rawlings said about the $30,000,000 reduction in new aircraft production, because of the President's cut. Where the President gets the authority for such action I do not know. I am trying to get an answer to that question, where he can superimpose upon the Army and the Congress his opinions. Where he got his information as to the airplane program, which disagrees with the gentleman from Texas I just do not know. But I cannot help thinking how terrible some people think it is for us to do anything like this but when the President does it, it is perfectly all right. If he can do it I do not know why it is so terrifically outlandish for us to do it ourselves.

There was comment made about there being nothing in the report about aviation and the number of planes. I was not consulted, but right now in the bottom of my heart I think one of the things that causes much trouble is that we Americans like to brag too much. We like to tell what we are going to do and what we have. We would be far better off if we said less about it and then started doing it and let accomplished facts speak for themselves. The question was asked a while ago, What do we know about what is going on behind the iron curtain and how many of their agents are over here? Well, they do not have to have very many. All they need is one or two who can sit down and read the newspapers. They can find out with the greatest ease just exactly what we are doing every day in the year, from the latest bomber down to the Banshee, which is supposed to be the last thing in plane production. When it was presented to us it was absolutely hush hush. You could not talk about this at all. Yet before the hearings are over, before the bill has been passed, you have it on the pages of the newspapers and anybody who can read can find out with the greatest of ease just exactly what we have.

I want to join, too, in the tribute to the ability, the energy, the honesty, the integrity, and the loyalty of the chairman of this committee. That goes for the rest of them. In these few short weeks in which I have worked with this committee, I have come to know and respect and admire every member of the committee.

That includes not only Republicans like HARVE TIBBOTT, CASE, and ENGEL, but Democrats like Judge KERR, MAHON, and NORRELL, who has not been able to be with us as much as we would like to have had him.

The committee instead of being scolded, as it has been, should be commended on having done an exceptionally fine job under exceedingly difficult circumstances. This experience on this committee convinces me that one thing in the reorganization bill has great merit, and I hope we have an opportunity to exercise it before the hearings are over next year; that is, to give each of these committees a staff and corps of capable investigators who can go out and find out things that we of the committee do not have the opportunity to. If you sit there in these committees as we have you see generals in charge of each one of these operations of the War Department flanked and buttressed on each side with innumerable aides and experts ranking from generals down. Whenever any one of them needed any information at all he turned to one side or the other or to the rear and asked Jones, Smith, or Brown what the answer was. We had no one to whom we could turn. The committee needs that kind of help, and certain it is that if all of these hundreds can be provided for the other agencies of the Government, then these committees can be given a few men and it will be money very well spent.

Mr. SPRINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SCRIVNER. I yield.

Mr. SPRINGER. I desire to compliment the gentleman for the fine presentation he is making. I recall in particular the statement he just made regarding the publicity which was given in respect to what we are doing, the type of planes we are perfecting, the nature, the amount, and character. Do we get any such information from Russia so that we know just what she is doing at this particular time?

Mr. SCRIVNER. As far as I know we get no information of any kind from Russia that is reliable, or from many other parts of the world. As a matter of fact I will go even further, we are making it even easier than I stated before because the Army periodically gets out these summary sheets so that they do not even have to read the daily papers to know what we are doing in the field of aviation, they can just pick up this outline.

I spoke of the men who appear before our committee. I have known some of these men for many many years, fine gentlemen every one of them. Sometimes I feel just a little sorry for them; I think they would like to have been more helpful, yet they were faced with a limitation. The President—and you will find the letter on page 631—told them in substance that they could do nothing else but support the figures in the President's budget, and he said "only." This is not Webster's definition of "only" but the only definition I know of the word "only" is "nothing else but." That does not say "higher than" or "lower than" but "only those figures." And yet these men with all the help they have are not infallible. No human being is infallible. I want to call your attention to one situation in connection with the budget and the justifications. The work of preparing this budget began last May, June, July, and August, just as they are now working on the 1949 budget; but even so, when this budget came to us the justification for pay and allowances of officers bore the date of January 20, 1947—whether you were in the service in World War I, in peacetime, or in World War II—I do not think you have to have a great deal of explanation to understand just how absurd some of the figures were that were given to this committee. For instance, here is what we find in Pay and Allowances for other than air forces: 4,023 second lieutenants, 6,719 first lieutenants, 21,177 captains, 20,706 majors, 12,637 lieutenant-colonels and 6,000 colonels.

Ask any soldier, ask any man who was in the Navy how ridiculous that distribution is. Of course, they came in and at a later date made a change and said, as my recollection is, that they were going to have 11,000 second lieutenants, 16,000 first lieutenants, and 21,000 captains, that they were going to cut down the majors, the lieutenant-colonels, and the colonels.

Mr. SPRINGER. Of course, that distribution is out of step with their needs.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Yes. Finally they admitted that was out of step and that it was top heavy and undertook to submit the new table.

There were other things. I can understand the difficulty with which they labored and I hope, too, that the House, this committee and those officers can understand some of the difficulties under which we have to labor at times.

Mr. SPRINGER. Another question, and referring back to the investigations that have been made. We have had a large number of people traveling through Europe, especially in Russia. May I ask the gentleman to state if it is not a fact that of all the inquiry that has been made we have been unable to secure any definite or positive information with regard to what Russia is doing with reference to preparation for war?

Mr. SCRIVNER. As far as any inquiry is concerned we know practically nothing. There was one report that during the May Day celebration in Moscow on the 1st of May two or three planes which were possibly B-29's did fly over the parade. They may have been some of the B-29's which were interned by Russia when the crews had to land in Russia.

Inasmuch as General Richards has been mentioned I want to refer to one comment he made, and I think it was properly made. He said that we can always do without our cake. When you analyze this whole bill about all we have done is to take a little bit of cake away from our military forces. Whether or not more appropriation would do more good. I do not know. You have been shown that the President limited the amount that the Army could spend in 1947. He has also limited the amount which can be spent by the Army in 1948. That amount by Presidential order is $6,700,000,000. He says that is all the Army can spend in fiscal 1948. If that is so, it stands to reason we could probably appropriate many, many billions, and still it might not have a very salutary effect as far as the Army's procurement program is concerned, in view of the limit fixed by the President.

We tried as best we could in our limited way to find the facts. Many things, as I say, puzzled us. Remember this budget was in preparation in May, June, July and August of last year. We found, for instance, that as late as February 1946, only 5 or 6 months earlier, the War Department had declared as surplus 1,577,856 gallon blitz cans. You will also see in hearings that the top price received for blitz cans at surplus sale was 55 cents per can.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman 10 additional minutes.

Mr. SCRIVNER. The Army is now asking to buy 703,000 of these cans at $4.40. You will find that on page 324 of the hearings. It gives the whole story. So, as I say, they are prone to err just the same as the rest of us.

One thing that has been mentioned but not thoroughly discussed is the matter of the National Guard. If you read the hearings you will find a statement by Secretary Patterson in which he evaluates the National Guard. You will also find a statement there by General Eisenhower in which he praises the service of the National Guard most highly. But some place between the Secretary and General Eisenhower there seems to come a little barricade so that those good wishes and good feelings do not trickle down. A reading of the hearings will disclose statements made by the representatives of the National Guard from various States relating to the treatment that is now being accorded them as relates to equipment, and particularly as to uniforms. It is a tragic story. There has been complaint that the National Guard has not proceeded as rapidly as possible. Of course not, but as far back as last September the President took away from them $65,000,000 of the $110,000,000 that Congress said they should have to carry on the program.

The Reserve, too, is having some difficulty. There, too, the President took away $30,000,000 from the Reserve activities, and you will see in this bill that this committee—and I feel quite sure the House will go along with us on that whole thing—has given the National Guard and the Reserve the full amount of the suggested appropriations to give these civilian groups a chance to do their stuff.

For years we have talked about the necessity for an Army of a million men. Incidentally, if we had had such an Army in 1917 and in 1939, we might not have been in either one of these two great wars. But, we have talked about it. It probably cannot be a Regular Army of that size, because this is not the type of a Nation that anticipates a Regular Army that large, but we do anticipate that the great bulk, 50 to 60 percent, will be from civilian components with your National Guard as a part of your D-day program, ready to go whenever the emergency arises. They should be and must be prepared, and while we questioned many of the witnesses quite thoroughly as to the prospects for any immediate emergency arising, there seems to be no feeling of fear on the part of any of them that there is anything of that sort in the immediate offing. But, it might develop, and I think the public might as well realize that as the years go by, 2, 3, or 4 years hence, particularly as it relates to air, as more and more of these planes are worn out, the more we must appropriate to keep the air force up and that, I am sure, Congress will do.

I could go on and discuss many of these things, but you will find them all in the hearings. Take, for instance, the type of uniform. Even though $27,000,000 was in the hands of the quartermaster for uniforms for the National Guard, they were issued second-rate uniforms that the men were ashamed to put on and wear home. Any man that has ever been in any kind of military service knows that the first step toward making a good soldier or sailor is pride in himself and pride in his uniform, and when that pride is not there neither is the morale. When that man has to walk home through a back alley because he is ashamed to meet his friends, you are not going to have any morale, and all of your vast recruiting campaigns, spending millions upon millions of dollars, will never develop morale so that you will ever have a reserve force of civilian components that will be worthy of the word.

In these hearings you will find the report of the Judge Advocate General as to the effect of the Tort Claims Act as carried in the reorganization bill. I am not going into it in detail, but by reading that report—and I am sure their statements will be later supplemented—you will find that one of the most advisable things this Congress can do before it adjourns is to repeal that Tort Claims Act and restore the practice we have had in times past of equitably satisfying claims against the Government through your claims committee, and not through the tort actions in the courts.

Mr. Chairman, I have spoken longer than I had intended, and I close with this comment. I have made it in committee and I have made it out of committee. If I felt down in my heart that this reduction of approximately 10 percent in the aviation procurement program—in view of the fact that we have not decreased research and development, which is the building of brand-new and experimental models, and in view of the fact that there is $280,000,000 contract authorization over and above that of last year even with this decrease down to the budget figure of last year—if I thought for just 1 minute that that decrease would endanger the welfare and the future of this Nation in even the slightest degree, I would not hesitate to vote to restore the figure. If the gentleman from Texas has any other figures, even though the figures have not been presented to the committee—and I think, in all fairness, they should have been—I would like to study them. I have an open mind. I am open to conviction, if the gentleman from Texas can convince me this Nation's future is endangered by this reduction.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS].

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, may I say in starting that I do not impugn the motives of any member of the committee or, for that matter, Members of Congress at this hour. I have known the members of this subcommittee for many years, and I know them to be good, hard-working, conscientious men, eager and desirous of doing their duty by the country. Anybody who has obtained a copy of these hearings and gone through them in even a cursory manner is bound to realize that this committee spent many painstaking, long, weary hours in attempting to get to the bottom of the needed appropriations. On the contrary, rather than attempt to impugn the motives of anyone who has had anything to do with this bill, I have praise for the committee's work on it in presenting us a bill. But that does not mean, Mr. Chairman, that I am hog-tied to every figure and every appropriation in the bill. On the contrary, the Appropriations Committee has a monopoly of the appropriations in the House. You cannot get an appropriation of any sort unless you go to that committee. In all deference to the members of the committee, and recognizing their ability, their courage, and their leadership, I still at times differ with them on appropriations and sometimes fundamental figures in a bill. I think today that is the situation with reference to the figures on the Air Force. I am going to use the time allotted to me today in analyzing some of the figures in this bill in special reference to the Air Force.

Mr. Chairman, the comparative statement in the committee report is composed of huge items. It is difficult, to say the least, to get behind these items in an effort to find out just where the reductions in expenditures will cut heavily upon the War Department. It is apparent, however, that the expenditures for last year were $1,199,500,000 as against appropriations in the current bill of $733,332,508. It is apparent that the current appropriations as contained in this bill are $116,000,000 below Budget estimates and far below last year's expenditures. The report does not disclose just how this figure was arrived at; and I have given considerable thought and study in an effort to work out the figures and to apply the cuts where this committee evidently intended that they should be applied.

Mr. Chairman, I want to comment on certain items in this appropriations bill and, for the present at least, I want to confine my remarks to the Army Air Forces. To my mind, the needs of the Air Forces are particularly urgent. It is upon this branch of the service that we must rely for the repulse of a sudden and surprise attack from the enemy, in the event of another war. It is this branch of the service upon which the burden of the first blow will fall; and it is upon this branch of the service we must continue to depend until the country has had the opportunity to mobilize for war. It is therefore particularly important that needed moneys for these purposes shall be given without crippling economies and arbitrary reductions.

The appropriations for civilian personnel of the Air Forces have been drastically cut. This reduction will eliminate 17,573 employees who are now engaged largely in supplying the logistical support essential to air operations. This reduction will have a particularly damaging effect in the continuity of Headquarters, Army Air Forces, where strategical planning, mobilization plans and operational controls are carried on. Failure to replace these cuts will have a marked effect in undermining an already weakened Air Force.

Another item which concerns me very much is the reduction of $10,000,000 for fuel and oil for airplanes. This reduction will result, of course, in less training and less flying in the combat flights and problems. Required flying hours are necessary to keep our Air Forces in readiness as an effective combat force to meet an instant emergency.

The cut in the item for transportation is also very heavy. It will make it necessary to completely eliminate all commercial air lift now being furnished under contract by commercial carriers. The Air Transport Command will not have sufficient strength to supply the total overseas air lift required to maintain occupation garrisons in 1948. It is estimated that 50 percent of the present air lift to the Pacific theater will have to be eliminated, thereby further isolating our already isolated forces from their homeland.

The reduction of $44,000,000 in funds necessary for the purchase of new airplanes is something to consider in the long-range plans of the Air Forces. Initially, the Air Forces estimated that it needed 932 airplanes as the irreducible minimum for the proper maintenance and operation of its 55 manned combat groups. The cost estimates were drawn up last September 1946 and were based upon figures available and considered accurate at that time. By the time the requirements had run the gamut of the Department and the Budget and were submitted to the Appropriations Committee, the costs of building airplanes had risen to the point where funds requested would purchase only 838 airplanes instead of the minimum estimated as needed—932 airplanes. By the time the committee had reported, prices had increased further and the committee had taken $44,000,000 from Budget requirements. This means, therefore, fewer airplanes for the Army Air Forces. It means, in fact, less than 600 new planes and spare parts as against the original estimate of 932 with the $396,000,000 recommended by the Appropriations Committee. This reduction will be further aggravated by the serious situation existing in the airplane industry caused by lack of production orders. It will be further aggravated by the confusion and the lack of war-time efficiency in industry caused by the release of skilled workers and the breaking up of most efficient work teams. The outlook is, therefore, certainly not pleasing from the standpoint of national defense.

One of the other reductions which is most difficult to explain is the cut of $9,500,000 from which it was intended that electronic equipment be purchased. This cut will undoubtedly reduce the scope and delay the completion of proposed radar protective screen for the continental United States. This screen is considered vital for giving adequate warning of the approach of hostile aircraft or guided missiles, and it is deemed highly essential to the security of the entire country. You will recall that the radar screen had not been completed for Hawaii at the time of Pearl Harbor; and it has been warmly debated whether or not there would have been a Pearl Harbor had this work been completed at the time of the dastardly Jap attack. The amount of this appropriation is not large; but its importance to our people could easily be measured in the difference between success and failure, victory and defeat.

Mr. Chairman, the Army Air Forces have a mission which is closely akin to the destiny of this country. I do not think that the President's Advisory Commission on Universal Military Training added one whit when it referred to the mission of the Air Forces as follows:

> A striking air force: Spearhead of our professional armed services, this force would be charged with the crucial mission of defense by attack. Its job would be to stop the enemy's first onslaught and to hit back at him with crushing force. We believe that an aggressor's reluctance to start a war, and his handicap in prosecuting it successfully if he did start, would be in direct proportion to the power and readiness of our mobile striking force. Its personnel would have to be highly trained and its equipment would have to be the most advanced in the world.

The statement of the President's Advisory Commission as given above is entirely in harmony with the estimate which the Air Forces themselves place upon the immediate and primary task of this great organization. According to their own statements, the two immediate tasks are:

(a) To provide a long-range striking force in instant readiness and with the power and capacity to destroy the storehouse of enemy weapons and thereafter to reduce the enemy's industrial capacity and war-making potential.

(b) To provide in peacetime the minimum establishment for prompt and rapid expansion from peace to war.

Mr. Chairman, I agree fully with the estimate which has been made of the mission of our Army Air Forces. I frankly feel the reductions in appropriations made by this bill will impair and hurt the Air Forces to the extent that they cannot fulfill these two primary missions. I frankly feel that these heavy reductions in our Air Forces will reduce them to a state of impotence and inability to measure up to their full usefulness in the face of a sudden and surprise enemy attack. Those who urge these reductions in appropriations of our Air Forces assume a tremendous burden of responsibility should their insistence on these cuts bring about a reduction in the state of efficiency and power of the Air Forces. I certainly hope that this House will pause before it is too late and, in the light of the vital responsibility which falls upon the Army Air Forces in defending this country from sudden attack, restore the funds taken from the bill by these drastic reductions.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I think the reduction of $44,000,000 which reduces the number of new planes to be purchased and the number of parts needed to condition and maintain the airplanes presently in use, is vital. I feel that the time that has been given to this in debate on the floor is justified by the seriousness of the reduction of this appropriation. I hope the House will consider this long and well, and when it comes to a vote, with committee acceptance, we will be able to place back in the bill that item of some $40,000,000, the $9,500,000 for the radar defense of the Nation and the other items mentioned by me.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana has expired.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. PATMAN].

RFC WITH AID OF LOCAL BANKS PERFORMING WONDERFUL SERVICE FOR SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Chairman, it is important that Members of Congress realize the importance of the activities of the RFC in view of the fact that the Corporation's powers expire June 30 if not extended.

SMALL BUSINESS PRIORTY UNDER SECTION 18 (e) OF THE SURPLUS PROPERTY ACT AS FUNCTIONED BY RECONSTRUCTION FINANCE CORPORATION

Pursuant to Executive order, the Reconstruction Finance Corporation, on January 28, 1946, was made responsible for functioning the priority given small business under section 18 (e) of the Surplus Property Act. From that date until April 30, 1947, the Corporation received 82,131 inquiries for assistance in the acquisition of surplus property which resulted in its purchasing for small business $48,062,838 worth of such property. The Corporation discontinued this function by reason of a ruling by the Comptroller General.

TECHNICAL AND BUSINESS ADVISORY SERVICES AVAILABLE TO SMALL BUSINESS

The Reconstruction Finance Corporation's assistance to small business has not been limited to the making of loans or the securing of surplus property. For the 11-month period ended April 30, 1947, the Corporation received approximately 260,000 requests for assistance from business enterprises, of which 142,000, more than half, did not request loans nor surplus property assistance. Applicants requested the advice and counsel of the Corporation's trained staff in connection with a wide range of problems, including management, engineering, accounting, and financial. Small businesses seldom have among their personnel trained experts covering such a wide variety of problems but which nonetheless are often vital to successful operations. By using its trained personnel, the Corporation is often able to render valuable services to small businesses in the solution of their problems in locating an applicant's difficulties, suggesting various possible solutions, and indicating private sources from which expert technical and consulting assistance can be secured as may be needed for detailed application.

It frequently occurs that, after preliminary discussion, an applicant for a loan becomes convinced that the solution of his problem does not lie in securing a loan in the amount, kind, term, or for the purposes sought.

The following brief histories of actual cases are illustrative of what can be accomplished through these services:

A bank had been approached by a borrower seeking a loan, the proceeds of which were to be used in the construction of an alfalfa dehydration plant. The president of the bank called upon the local RFC office requesting advice and information concerning such a plant. It so happened that the local RFC office had considerable experience in this particular field, and those of the staff familiar with such an operation discussed in detail with the banker the many difficult problems surrounding such a plant, as well as production costs, profit possibilities, and prospects for present and future markets. A few days later, the banker called the local RFC office, expressed his appreciation, and reported that the promoters as well as the bank had abandoned the idea of seeking a loan for such a purpose.

A veteran, while discussing the possibilities of an RFC loan with which to purchase a truck, happened to indicate the trouble he was having in producing magnetic tack hammers at a cost which would permit their sale at a profit. Certain simple changes in design were suggested by an RFC engineer, who also indicated a probable better source of supply of castings necessary for the hammers. The suggestions were carried out with the result that the business was reestablished on a profitable basis.

The principal officer of a research laboratory, a veteran of World War II, called at his local RFC office requesting assistance in connection with certain difficulties he was having in manufacturing a small gas engine for use in flying model airplanes. He reported that his company had suffered a substantial loss resulting primarily from this difficulty. An RFC engineer considered his problem and suggested certain changes in the manufacturing process for one of the parts in the engine and recommended that he secure the services of an experienced designing engineer until the process could be corrected. The RFC engineer's recommendation was followed with the result that the difficulty was eliminated and the company operated profitably.

CASE HISTORIES ILLUSTRATIVE OF RFC LOAN ACTIVITIES IN CONNECTION WITH SMALL BUSINESS—RFC MAKES LOAN AFTER BANK DECLINES

The following is a typical illustration of how a direct loan by the RFC assisted in the creation of a successful small business after credit had been refused by banks: A native of an eastern State desired to establish a wool-combing plant in a Southwestern State. After a thorough survey a location was selected in a small town located in a wool-producing area in that State. The business was established in 1941 through the investment by the owner of a small amount of money in a minimum of necessary equipment. After a few months' operations, it became apparent that two additional pieces of machinery were necessary in order to meet the growing demand for washing, scouring, and combing wool. The owner applied to his bank of account for a loan of $7,500 for that purpose. The bank declined to make the loan. The local office of RFC was then contacted, an application filed, and loan granted. Subsequently additional loans were granted for further plant expansion. Today the plant is enjoying successful operations with a total value of facilities estimated at $400,000 and affords substantial employment to the community in which it is located.

BANK MAKES LOAN AFTER RFC INVESTIGATION INDICATES SOUNDNESS

In mid 1946 an applicant in a Southern State contacted the local RFC office and discussed plans for the organization and installation of a canning plant. Applicant, at RFC examiner's suggestion, discussed the possibilities of securing a loan from his local bank, which declined to make the loan. Further discussions between the applicant, RFC examiner and the local bank were conducted with the result that local financing was arranged without RFC assistance. The plant was opened and operated successfully and is serving an economic need in the small community in which it is located.

BANK PARTICIPATES WITH RFC AFTER FIRST DECLINING LOAN

A manufacturing plant located in a small community in a Southern State, with approximately 250 employees, was unable to meet its weekly pay roll of about $17,000. The day before the pay roll was to have been met the situation was called to the attention of the RFC office serving that territory. Within an hour after notice had reached the office an RFC examiner was on his way to the plant. Banks were contacted, refusing to make the loan for pay-roll purposes but after negotiations running well into the evening the banks made a loan in participation with the RFC and the pay roll was met the next day and the business saved. The loan was subsequently repaid in full.

GI GIRLS START HOSPITAL WITH RFC ASSISTANCE

Early in 1946 two GI girls were referred to the RFC by a bank located in a small town in a Western State. The girls wished a loan for the purpose of purchasing real property for the establishment of a hospital badly needed in that community. The loan was granted and, with the assistance of the RFC staff, property was secured, irregularities in titles were corrected, and the hospital opened and is being operated successfully. It has the complete backing of the community and is the only hospital there.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BECKWORTH].

Mr. BECKWORTH. Mr. Chairman, I am glad to say that in the time I have served in Congress I have supported all the appropriation measures which have been before the House to strengthen and keep strong our Nation. It pleases me to be able to say that I was not one of those Members who waited until after Pearl Harbor to support the legislation to strengthen and keep strong our country. We have sustained great loss of life and costly delays by not remaining strong at times in the past. Surely we should have learned our lesson in the past and should never again take a chance insofar as the strength of our country is concerned.

I say we should not weaken the influence of our Nation, particularly in a serious time like this, by weakening our Army or our Navy.

Although I recognize there has been some waste, great emphasis should be placed on the representations of those on whose shoulders rests the responsibility of being as sure as we can be that our country's welfare is secure and properly protected.

A few minutes ago I heard my able and distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], a member of the subcommittee which brought in the bill now before the House, discuss the provisions of the bill; I feel he is correct in what he says about the reductions which have been made in the funds of the Army Air Force. It is my purpose to support his amendment to provide additional funds for this division of the War Department.

As a member of the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, the committee which deals with civil aviation legislation, I personally feel civil aviation will gain much as a result of any progress and advancements made by our Army Air Force. Once we permit our Army and Navy to become weak we find the task of rebuilding them to be much more difficult. We have experienced this in the past. To be definitely sure that our Army and Navy will be strong tomorrow, we must be sure we have done those things necessary to keep them strong today. I strongly favor keeping both strong today.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. Ross].

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Chairman, the question of adequate national defense is the most important matter that will come before the Congress this session. Events preceding and subsequent to the termination of hostilities of World War II have forcibly projected the problem of adequate national defense and national security into the thinking of every citizen. Adequate national defense is paramount. It is a gigantic problem. It calls for the prompt integration of every factor and every part of our industrial potential. Adequate national defense means not alone the maintenance of sufficient military forces. It means the adoption of a well-defined program for the complete and timely mobilization of our civilian economy in the event of attack. Our war potential is only as strong as the moral fiber of our people and only as potent as our ability to quickly produce the instruments of war.

I was so impressed with the necessity and the urgency of this that on March 17 I introduced H. R. 2589, a bill to establish a Civilian Mobilization Commission. This bill would set up a Commission of 11 members: 7 to be appointed by the President, 1 of whom shall be chairman; 2 by the President pro tempore of the Senate and 2 by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, from the membership of their respective Houses.

Under the provisions of this bill, the Commission would not be a policy-making Commission, but rather a fact-finding Commission. I want to read section 1 of the bill and ask unanimous consent to insert the entire bill at this point, as part of the RECORD. Section 1 is as follows:

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc., That (a) in the interest of world peace and the national security it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to insure the right of the United States of America to continue their present way of life and to assure their ability to withstand atomic or other form of attack by preparing for ready use and immediate execution a plan or plans for the complete mobilization of the civilian economy and for the complete protection of the agencies of Government.

(b) It is the purpose of this act to effectuate the policies set out in section 1 (a) by providing, among others, for the following major programs relating to complete civilian mobilization of industries, including protection of the civilian population and the agencies of Government:

(1) A program of assisting and fostering a decentralization of essential industries;

(2) A program of assisting and fostering protective plans for essential industries and the agencies of Government;

(3) A program of assisting and fostering a plan for the conversion of civilian industries to war production;

(4) A program of administration which will be consistent with the foregoing policies, and which will enable the Congress to be informed annually as to the appropriate legislation needed to carry into execution any of the foregoing plans or other related plans, none of which shall be put in execution until specifically authorized by law.

All of the leading military authorities recognize and are giving voice to the necessity and urgency of such a program. On May 28, 1947, more than 2 months after introduction of H. R. 2589, Gen. Brehon B. Somervell and Maj. Gen. Leslie R. Groves, addressing the National Industrial Conference Board, came out in favor of a prewar planned program for industrial mobilization in the event of another war.

As reported in the New York Times, General Somervell stated that he was not predicting that war with Russia was inevitable, but was pointing out that it would be folly for us to ignore the fact that the United States would be a rich prize for an ambitious dictator. He said nobody knows whether a third world war would be a Buck Rogers affair using atomic bombs, bacteria rockets, and so forth, but that we would have to realize that dictators are ruthless realists and would have to prepare against the use of such weapons just as we prepared against the use of poison gas in the recent war.

According to the New York Times, General Somervell warned that industrial as well as manpower preparedness had lagged badly since VJ-day. He pointed out that we still lack even paper plans for industrial mobilization. He said:

Industry must be kept from year to year in the same state of semimobilization as our armed forces. In fact, the smaller our Army and Navy become, the greater degree of industrial mobilization we must maintain in time of peace.

To quote the New York Times, General Somervell stated:

The nucleus of civilian agencies to handle labor, civilian defense, civilian production, war materials, facilities, transportation, communication, power, war finance, foreign trade, and other aspects of the war economy must be in operation before the advent of war. The Nation could not afford * * * another long period of bungling and confusion during the next war, such as took place in the last war.

General Groves is quoted as saying that next time there will be no cushion of time, and, therefore, we must consider industrial mobilization a continuing process.

The report of the President's Commission on Universal Military Training, made public on June 1, in its program for a balanced security, stressed the need of a plan for industrial readiness. Point 4 of the program stated, and I quote:

Industrial mobilization: The development of new weapons will be of no value unless our scientific progress is matched by industrial readiness for the problems of war that may come without warning with supersonic speeds. Weapons that were not in being and in the possession of our troops when an aggressor struck would be worthless in inflicting swift retribution upon him or in preventing his approach to our shores. Because of the danger that production centers would be demolished in the first days of war, a start should be made now toward decentralizing the most vital plants and, in some cases, toward building underground or otherwise adequately protected facilities.

Mr. Chairman, during this atomic age, with our country admittedly vulnerable to attack by atomic and projectile bombs and bacteriological vapors, it is absolutely essential that we have on tap for instant use plans for the immediate and total conversion of our civilian economy to a wartime economy. When World War III arrives we will not have time to fumble and bungle our production machine into high gear. We will not have time to experiment with plans for the protection of our civilian population. The need for plans to meet the kind of emergency that may be anticipated in the event of a sudden attack is unquestionable. With all the warning we had of the impending war in 1941, we were not prepared to proceed either defensively or offensively with any semblance of a concerted program. Agencies by the score were created hastily by Executive orders, directives, and so forth, many of them having overlapping or conflicting jurisdiction and duties. This made inevitable a constant reshuffling of agencies and functions, the absorption of some of the agencies by others, and the ultimate liquidation of those which, after considerable delay, were found to be unsuitable or ill-advised. This resulted in the loss of precious time, untold millions of dollars in waste, and inefficiency in our production machine.

In World War II we were fortunate in that we had time. In World War III it is a foregone conclusion that we will not have time. In my bill, H. R. 2589, the Civilian Mobilization Commission will be authorized to conduct continuous studies and assemble pertinent, up-to-date data on the whole question of our national-defense problem as it pertains to the civilian economy. Some phases of our civilian economy and some questions which, to my mind, the Commission will study and make the subject of recommendations to the Congress are:

First. Decentralization or concentration of particular industries in relation to national defense. Example: Whether to provide additional plant facilities or to scatter existing facilities.

Second. The most suitable methods of decentralizing such industries where decentralization is indicated.

Third. Whether particular industries should be sheltered from atomic attack by underground installations or otherwise.

Fourth. Camouflaging of essential industries against aerial observation.

Fifth. Providing for the safety of the agencies and records of the Federal Government in case of atomic attack, including plans for the rapid decentralization or removal of particular agencies of the Government.

Sixth. Means and methods of governing the actions of the civilian population and for providing for their safety.

The creation of the proposed Civilian Mobilization Commission would, as stated by General Somervell, insure efficiency and guard the American free enterprise system against excessive Government controls. H. R. 2589 provides that the plans and programs formulated by the Commission shall be submitted direct to the Congress, so that the needed legislation may be enacted without delay.

There is too much at stake to justify delegation of this problem to some branch or agency of the executive department. If there is to be another war, its outcome may well hinge upon our ability to swing into action at once and to utilize our industrial and economic resources with a minimum of delay. We, as the representatives of the people, have the primary responsibility in this matter. That responsibility must remain here. The commission or body that is entrusted with this vital task should at all times be responsible to the Congress and the Congress should see to it that the job is being done adequately, diligently, and continuously. We cannot risk unpreparedness again.

H. R. 2589

A bill to establish a Civilian Mobilization Commission, and for other purposes

Be it enacted, etc., That (a) in the interest of world peace and the national security it is hereby declared to be the policy of Congress to insure the right of the United States of America to continue their present way of life and to assure their ability to withstand atomic or other form of attack by preparing for ready use and immediate execution a plan or plans for the complete mobilization of the civilian economy and for the complete protection of the agencies of government.

(b) It is the purpose of this act to effectuate the policies set out in section 1 (a) by providing, among others, for the following major programs relating to complete civilian mobilization of industries, including protection of the civilian population and the agencies of government:

(1) A program of assisting and fostering a decentralization of essential industries;

(2) A program of assisting and fostering protective plans for essential industries and the agencies of government;

(3) A program of assisting and fostering a plan for the conversion of civilian industries to war production;

(4) A program of administration which will be consistent with the foregoing policies, and which will enable the Congress to be informed annually as to the appropriate legislation needed to carry into execution any of the foregoing plans or other related plans, none of which shall be put in execution until specifically authorized by law.

SEC. 2. (a) There is hereby created a Civilian Mobilization Commission (hereinafter called the Commission) which shall be composed of 11 members, 7 appointed by the President (one of whom shall be Chairman) with the advice and consent of the Senate, 2 by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and 2 by the Speaker of the House from the membership of their respective Houses.

(b) Of the members of the Commission appointed by the President, two shall be appointed for a term of 2 years, two for a term of 4 years, two for a term of 6 years, and the Chairman for a term of 7 years, and at the expiration of each of said terms, the commissioners then appointed shall be appointed for a term of 7 years. Members appointed by the Speaker of the House and by the President pro tempore of the Senate shall serve until the end of the Congress in which they are appointed.

(c) Each member, except the Chairman and four members who are Members of the Congress, shall receive compensation at the rate of $ per annum; and the Chairman shall receive compensation at the rate of $ per annum.

(d) Any member of the Commission appointed by the President may be removed by the President for inefficiency, neglect of duty, or malfeasance in office.

(e) Members appointed by the President shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment than that of serving as a member of the Commission.

SEC. 3. The principal office of the Commission shall be in the District of Columbia, but the Commission or any duly authorized representative may exercise any or all of its power in any place. The Commission shall hold such meetings and receive such reports as may be necessary to enable it to carry out the provisions of this act.

SEC. 4. The Commission shall have authority to appoint and fix the compensation of such officers and employees as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Commission. Such officers and employees shall be appointed in accordance with the civil-service laws and their compensation shall be fixed in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, except that to the extent the Commission deems such action necessary to the discharge of its responsibility, personnel may be employed and their compensation be fixed without regard to such laws.

SEC. 5. The Commission is hereby authorized to utilize or employ (with the consent of the agency concerned) the services or personnel of any Government department or agencies, or the services or personnel of any State or local government, or voluntary or uncompensated services or personnel.

SEC. 6. The Commission is authorized to make such studies and investigations, obtain such information, and hold such hearings as the Commission may deem necessary or proper to assist it in exercising any authority provided in this act. For the purpose herein authorized the Commission may subpena a person to appear and testify or to appear and produce documents, or both, may administer such oaths and affirmations, at any designated place. No person shall be excused from complying with any requirements under this subsection because of his privilege against self-incrimination, but the immunity provisions of the Compulsory Testimony Act of February 11, 1893 (U. S. C. 49; 46), shall apply with respect to any individual who specifically claims such privilege. Witnesses subpenaed under this subsection shall be paid the same fees and mileage as are paid witnesses in the district courts of the United States.

SEC. 7. The Commission is authorized to establish advisory boards to advise and make recommendations with the Commission on legislation, policy, administration, research, and other matters.

SEC. 8. The Commission shall submit to the Congress, in January of each year, a report concerning the activities of the Commission. The Commission shall include in such report, and shall at such other times as it deems desirable submit to the Congress, such recommendations for additional legislation as the Commission deems necessary or desirable.

SEC. 9. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and purposes of this act.

SEC. 10. If any provision of this act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, is held invalid, the remainder of this act or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 11. This act may be cited as the "Civilian Mobilization Act of 1947."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSS. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. LODGE. I want to congratulate the gentleman from New York upon his able presentation of this thesis and on the vision that he has shown in the manner in which he has developed his ideas. No more vital problem confronts the Nation, and I know that we must have a readily expansible industry in order to back up our wartime needs. I commend the gentleman for his splendid address.

Mr. ROSS. I want to thank very much the distinguished gentleman from Connecticut for his kind remarks.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROSS. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. KEATING. It seems to me the gentleman has presented a very interesting suggestion here which is deserving of grave consideration by the Congress. I commend him very highly on the great study he has given this problem, resulting in this bill, which displays such unusual foresight and preknowledge of what is likely to confront us in the days to come.

Mr. ROSS. I thank the very able and distinguished gentleman from New York for his kind comments.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. JAVITS].

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to proceed out of order.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. Chairman, I am obliged to the chairman of the subcommittee for giving me this time. I intend to speak on the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947. On tomorrow when the matter is considered, the time will be short and I, therefore, appreciate so much this opportunity for stating my views on the conference report.

I voted against H. R. 3020, and it is my present view that I must vote against the conference report on the Labor-Management Relations Act of 1947. The subject is, however, bigger than the vote alone; for all of us know that labor-management peace will not be attained by this bill, but will rather depend on what men do under the law when enacted. This is no interim measure, either, for it is, and is well recognized to be, what the majority considers a basic change in domestic policy. Such a basic change, so early in the tenure of a new majority, certainly calls for awareness and analysis. This bill, I believe, creates the wrong pattern for labor-management relations; for, instead of putting them on an economic base, it puts them on a political base. For example, instead of seeking means by which the worker may produce more, through higher efficiency, and therefore earn more real wages, the bill takes a negative approach and is replete with prohibitions, limitations, and restrictions.

I favor labor legislation which would correct manifest abuses first, and inspire public confidence; then we could consider drastic regulation if events showed it to be necessary. There are three immediate problems requiring legislation: First, avoidance of national paralysis due to strikes resulting from labor-management deadlocks; second, democracy in some labor unions; and, third, jurisdictional and wildcat strikes, and boycotts, not in aid of labor disputes.

The bill tries to do something to cope with these problems—a good deal of it badly—but it also does other things which nullify its effectiveness as a step in a process of the growth of labor-management responsibility, and make the bill a measure of repression.

Title II deals with national emergencies and provides for injunctions against strikes imperiling the national health or safety for a limited time of approximately 80 days and certain other interim proceedings, but that does not relieve us of the fear of national paralysis due to a strike. The provision for an enforced waiting period in such cases may not in itself be objectionable, but it must be joined with the power of seizure by the Government and the right to operate to the minimal extent required for the public health and safety if it is to mean anything to the public. Injunctions will not run trains or keep electricity going. This basic fear of national paralysis due to labor-management strife is at the root of repressive labor legislation, yet the rank and file of labor does not want any such power and would welcome a constructive solution which does not amount, however, to involuntary servitude.

The provisions of the bill which relate to democracy in labor unions are perhaps its best. I have always insisted that when labor unions become great they become public-service organizations and should be subject to the same responsibilities in the public interest. They should give nondiscriminatory service, and at reasonable rates. But this bill, while imposing some measures of union democracy, fails to provide for grievance machinery for union members with respect to their own unions and union leaders; and also strips unions of the ability to defend themselves against labor spies, internal antiunion agitators, and other active wreckers. For example, a labor union under this bill cannot discipline a member except for nonpayment of dues. A member may, therefore, be a labor spy; he may be preaching constantly against the union and trying to break it up from the inside; he may be a saboteur starting wildcat strikes, and yet the union is helpless to get him fired from the union shop. Paradoxically enough, he may be a proven disciple of Communist revolution who aims to overthrow the Government by force, yet unless he is a union officer the union cannot discipline him. Coupled with the provision in the bill imposing financial liability for wildcat strikes which can break a union, the union is at the mercy of such destructive forces.

Under the extremely wide definition of boycotts in the bill, unions cannot protect themselves against strikebreaking within the same industry. The bill provides that workers may not refuse to handle or work on any goods for the purpose of forcing their employer to cease handling the goods of another producer; yet that other producer may be in the same line of business, his employees may be out on strike and he may be using the first establishment to work on his goods as a means of strikebreaking. This provision is not only bad, but summary power is vested in any regional attorney of the NLRB to get an immediate court injunction to restrain any such legitimate refusal to handle "hot goods," and the protection of the Norris-LaGuardia Anti-Injunction Act, for which labor fought for 50 years, is removed in such a case. This is not the kind of boycott which is contrary to the public interest, that other kind results from a misguided labor union's efforts to keep certain goods out of a market because the labor union fears the effect of new inventions or new methods. But while dealing with this legitimate abuse, the bill also has the effect of depriving labor of a right of self-preservation which has never been questioned before.

Supervisors are omitted from any protection under the bill—even when separately organized—though we know from industrial experience that they are in the main workers like all others and very numerous as indicated by the strike of foremen at the Ford Motor Co. Yet under this bill such employees may be at the mercy of labor spies, suffer from employer discrimination and employer coercion of all types—the whole tragic history of the labor movement in its "middle ages" may be repeated as to them, and their efforts to protect their own economic interests be defeated. They have become by this bill the "untouchables" of labor.

We are in grave danger now of going into an era of labor-management relations which will repeat almost exactly the bitter experience of American business with the New Deal. There had been excesses and unusual losses then in the stock market and in securities and real estate, due to inflated and unsound values, just as we found irresponsibility and exactions from the public in some labor-union circles more recently. Some regulation of securities and securities markets and of pyramided utility investments was obviously needed. So today some regulation of labor-management relations is needed. But let us see what happened then and is likely to happen now. In 1933 the New Deal thought it had a mandate to suspect every businessman, and especially every banker, as being crooked until proven innocent, just as we are now asked to suspect every labor union of indulging in tactics jeopardizing the economy and the public interest. And so in 1933, with the same mental attitude, there followed the sweeping regulation of business, banking, finance, and public-utility holding companies incorporated in the regulatory acts administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission. These acts almost froze the velocity of the United States economy for critical years and compelled us to finance with Government money at a time when enormous resources lay sterile in the hands of the public. These sweeping acts regulating business, as we now plan to regulate labor, were largely responsible for forcing the United States economy into a slump and maintaining excessive unemployment from 1937 to 1939 which would have become a major economic disaster if the war in Europe, with its enormous demands on our production, had not broken out in September 1939. Let us not forget that under the Public Utility Holding Company Act, due to its first drastic impact, hundreds of millions of dollars of values in the hands of American investors were lost—in the hands of almost as many millions of investors as the millions of union members we are now affecting—until inflation and the administrative moderation which came from experience restored some of the value. But who benefitted from this come-back—the investors who had sold out at the bottom or who were exchanged out by reorganizations? Of course not. It was largely speculators who bought in at the bottom who reaped the increment.

The mistake of suddenly swinging the pendulum way over in the other direction is being made in this bill, for it is heavily weighted in favor of the employer. For example, to get a union shop under this bill it is not enough that a union be elected by a majority of workers to be their collective-bargining agent, but another election must be held and another majority of all the workers—a tougher provision than for the election of Congressmen where only a plurality of those who vote is required—simultaneously, or very soon thereafter must be obtained in order to win the right to bargain for a union shop, specifically; and after a year, 30 percent of the employees can set in motion yet another election in which a 51 percent vote can rescind the union shop.

Or, to take another example, in the case of a threat of national strike in a critical industry the workers must vote particularly on the "final offer of settlement made by their employer as stated by him," before they may strike—not on the union's demands, or even on the findings of the President's impartial Board of Inquiry, as well, but on the employer's final offer—strangely reminiscent of an un-American one-ticket election.

The middle-of-the-road course to which I have set myself demands not only that I vote against this report, it demands also that I specify what I see to require correction in labor-management relations. This I have tried to do, in the firm conviction that laws are not solutions, and that good policies can create decent solutions in a democracy, despite bad laws.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. REDDEN].

Mr. REDDEN. Mr. Chairman, several days ago news reports were carried in the press to the effect that a mob in Northampton County, N. C., had gone to the jail and forcibly removed a Negro man who was being detained on a charge of assault on a white woman.

The story goes that the Negro escaped from the mob and later surrendered to the Federal Bureau of Investigation who delivered him to State authorities.

Indictments have been issued against those in the mob and they will be tried according to the laws of North Carolina, and I am sure a just decision upon the evidence will be rendered. That is what every true North Carolinian stands for.

In yesterday morning's news reports from that State a story is carried to the effect that another Negro man in the same county has attempted rape of a white girl, a young bride of 2 weeks, and that the community is very much upset over what appears to be a crime wave of rape in that section. The story describes how "upward of a hundred men, many of them armed, fanned out over the countryside after the girl, a recent high-school graduate and a bride of 2 weeks, reported the alleged attack." Two Negroes were taken under custody by the sheriff and promptly carried to an undisclosed jail for safekeeping. It is certainly regrettable that these attacks continue. They fan the flames of mob violence which tends to bring disrepute upon the good name of a great State.

The cry goes out that we need antilynching legislation. Members of the FBI are sent to investigate to determine if any civil rights of the assailant are violated. Peace officers of our State rise up as one in an effort to prevent the mob from executing its unlawful intentions.

It may be well to have some Federal antilynching legislation. If so, I shall certainly favor it, but I think it would also be well to have some Federal antirape legislation. I think also that these organizations and individuals which are so interested in protecting the criminal assailants who undertake to rape the white women of the South, should interest themselves in an organization that will promote good morals and stand for decency and respect. We need organizations and individuals who will not forget that the rights of women have been invaded, that they have been humiliated and embarrassed beyond expression and that a law has been violated in that respect. It seems to be the tendency of some groups to forget that a woman has been assaulted or raped; their whole cry is "Save the criminal from the mob." We need to save the woman from the criminal and a little teaching along that line may help to prevent mob violence.

There has been antilynching legislation offered in this House every session for many years, but I have not heard of anyone offering any law to aid in the prevention of these criminal attacks which are calculated to bring out the mobs. I welcome the day when this legislation comes before the House again, for I expect to attach some amendments that will send the FBI after the criminal in cases of this kind, as well as after the mob, and instead of allowing funds recovered by the estate of the criminal to enrich his next of kin, I expect to offer legislation that will allow the recovery to be paid to the estate of the woman attacked if she does not survive.

We need to let these criminals know, whether they be white or black, that they stand to gain nothing and that they shall be punished to the full extent of a just law, and in that way I believe we may discourage crime.

Mr. KERR. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. LANE].

Mr. LANE. Mr. Chairman, this is a bill to permit the Veterans' Administration to allot supplies of the new antituberculosis drug for the treatment of ex-service men and women, with nonservice-connected cases, who are patients in State, county, and municipal hospitals.

Present regulations do not allow the Veterans' Administration to send this expensive drug for treatment of veterans in hospitals which are not under Veterans' Administration jurisdiction. I have received complaints that officials in these outside hospitals are not giving their veteran patients this drug. Whether this policy is dictated by a desire to force them out of these hospitals and into facilities operated by the Veterans' Administration, or for some other obscure reason, I do not know. The fact is, such veterans are entitled to a share of such new treatment, and feel that they are being discriminated against.

The bill I propose will authorize the Veterans' Administration to send such reasonable supplies as are necessary to State, county, and municipal hospitals for the care of veterans who prefer to enter institutions which are near to their homes.

This bill does not interfere in the management or control of the hospitals described.

It merely provides that the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs shall inspect such hospitals at such times as he may consider necessary in order to satisfy himself with the character of care and treatment being rendered to eligible veterans in said hospitals. When the supplies are made available by this legislation, it will be the responsibility of the Veterans' Administration to see that this drug is being administered to those veterans for whom it is recommended by the medical authorities of the nonveteran hospitals.

I am sure that all of us, in our desire to be of service to the sick veteran, will not resort to penny-pinching economies in this matter.

There was a defect in the original legislation which must be corrected.

In doing this, we shall make supplies of streptomycin available to all veterans suffering from tuberculosis, no matter whether they are being treated in facilities operated by the Veterans' Administration or in State, county, or municipal hospitals.

Our veterans are also citizens.

The CHAIRMAN. There being no further requests for time, the Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read down to and including line 6, page 1, of the bill.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HALLECK, having assumed the Chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT, 1947

Mr. HARTLEY submitted a conference report and statement on the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. HERTER, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 230, Rept. No. 511), which was referred to the House calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, all points of order against title II of said bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks made in the Committee of the Whole and include certain tables and quotations.

Mr. DIRKSEN (at the request of Mr. CASE of South Dakota) was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an analysis of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

Mr. MILLER of Connecticut asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD on the subject of air accidents.

Mr. MAHON asked and was given permission to revise and extend the remarks he made in the Committee of the Whole, and include a letter from the Secretary of War, some excerpts from the hearings, and other matter.

LEASING OF PROPERTY BY VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 5 minutes and to revise and extend my remarks and include certain information from the Veterans' Administration.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON] wanted certain information regarding leasing of property by General Bradley, Administrator of Veterans' Affairs, and also certain information was requested by the gentleman from California [Mr. PHILLIPS] regarding leasing of property by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs.

Earlier in the day when I tried to secure the passage of the bill S. 1135 it was objected to by the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. WILSON], who did not seem to be sure that General Bradley had exhausted all the possibilities of securing federally owned space. I obtained certain information, and I should like to state the Administrator's policy in connection with the acquisition of administrative space for the Veterans' Administration. I am including in my remarks a statement showing the administrative space acquired and in use by the Veterans' Administration as of March 31, 1947:

It is the policy of the Veterans' Administration, before leasing space of any type, to contact the Public Buildings Administration, Post Office, and other Government Departments in an attempt to locate space which may be made available to the Veterans' Administration. More than 4,500,000 square feet of leased space has been obtained through or by the Public Buildings Administration for the Veterans' Administration. Much of this space was vacated by other Government agencies, such as the War Department, the Navy Department, Office of Price Administration, etc. While this statement does not show the quantity, many leases have been obtained by direct transfer from the War, Navy, and other departments, and are included in the figures shown as leased by the Veterans' Administration. It will be noted also, from the attached statement, that there is in use by field offices of the Veterans' Administration over 5,000,000 square feet of Federally owned spaced, much of which was obtained through the Public Buildings Administration and the Post Office Department.

Every effort is made to obtain, from universities, States, and municipalities, space for contact offices and guidance centers, without cost to the Federal Government. Over 274,000 square feet of space has been obtained by that means.

[2] This rental covers 2,145,259 square feet only. Balance is occupied on a nonreimbursable basis.

Prepared by Real Estate Service, Veterans' Administration.

I hope this statement will be satisfactory to the gentleman from Indiana. I feel very sure that all he wanted to do was to make certain that the administrator of veterans' affairs had exhausted every possible means of securing space so that there would be no additional cost.

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes, I am very glad to yield to the gentleman. I know of his interest in the veterans.

Mr. PHILBIN. Does the gentlewoman propose to insert the data which she has just given in the RECORD?

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. Yes, the table will be included.

Mr. PHILBIN. I am sure that the Members will be very much interested in having this report.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts. It seems advisable to extend the authority to General Bradley for one to make the 5-year leases because he can do it more economically now than if he waits until the time expires, and that is the necessity for immediate action. If General Bradley is not allowed to renew leases probably he will be obliged to vacate buildings almost at once.

Mr. PHILBIN. That would seem to be very sound practice. I want to thank the gentlewoman very much for preparing this data and submitting it for the benefit of the House.

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts The gentleman has always been helpful in veterans' matters and has been always very cooperative in other matters.

The report of the Committee on Veterans' Affairs to accompany H. R. 3060 is as follows:

EXTENDING FOR 1 YEAR CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF SECTION 100 OF THE SERVICEMEN'S READJUSTMENT ACT OF 1944, AS AMENDED, RELATING TO THE AUTHORITY OF THE ADMINISTRATOR OF VETERANS' AFFAIRS TO ENTER INTO LEASES FOR PERIODS NOT EXCEEDING 5 YEARS

Mrs. ROGERS of Massachusetts, from the Committee on Veterans' Affairs, submitted the following report:

The Committee on Veterans' Affairs, to whom was referred the bill (H. R. 3060) to extend for 1 year certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years, having considered the same, report favorably thereon, without amendment, and recommend that the bill do pass.

EXPLANATION OF THE BILL

The bill was recommended by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs in a letter addressed to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, dated April 9, 1947, and was approved by the Bureau of the Budget.

The purpose of the bill is to authorize the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs until June 30, 1948, to enter into leases for periods of not to exceed 5 years. In making such leases the Administrator is exempted from the provisions of the Economy Act of 1932, as amended (47 Stat. 412, as amended by 47 Stat. 1517). This exemption will permit making a lease where the first year's rental exceeds 15 percent of the fair market value of the premises and will allow alterations in excess of 25 percent of the first year's rental.

Today's real-estate market is such that it is nearly impossible to determine the exact fair market value of any property from day to day, and the present scarcity of materials and labor plus increased cost of both in today's market require the exemption of the 250 percent limitation.

Two other statutes are included in the exemption for technical reasons. Section 3679 of the Revised Statutes prohibits the expenditure in any one fiscal year in excess of the amount appropriated for that year, and also prohibits the making of a contract for future payments in excess of the amount of appropriations. Section 3732 of the Revised Statutes prohibits entering into any contract unless there is an appropriation adequate to its fulfillment. Since the leases will be for periods of 5 years, it is probable that the sums needed will be appropriated annually for each year of the lease rather than for the entire period. It is necessary to exempt these two provisions in order to make a lease entered into under the authority of this bill binding upon the Government where the period is more than 1 year. The Veterans' Administration, under its decentralization program, has established 1,468 branch, regional, subregional, contact, and guidance offices which are quartered in 1,685 separate buildings occupying approximately 13,500,000 square feet of office space as compared with an anticipated 15,000,000 square feet of office space. It would have been impossible to acquire much of this space under the conditions existing in the real-estate market of the country during the fiscal year 1947 had it not been for the authority contained in Public Law 424 of the Seventy-ninth Congress, which was favorably reported by this committee, giving this authority to the Administrator up to and including June 30, 1947.

During the coming fiscal year it is the intent of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to consolidate many of these offices under one roof, and to carry out this program of consolidation successfully it will be necessary to extend this law for one more year.

It has been the policy of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to exercise the leasing authority granted him only in cases in which it has been determined that the exercise of such authority was necessary in the public interest. It is believed this policy will remain in effect if the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to negotiate such leases is continued for the fiscal year 1948. Without such authority it doubtless would have been necessary in many cases either to accept undesirable space or to resort to condemnation or purchase to acquire suitable space.

The committee feels that failure to continue the provisions of Public Law 424, Seventy-ninth Congress, for another year would seriously hamper the activities of the Veterans' Administration, particularly those relating to the installation of out-patient treatment clinics. It would probably result in an increase in the expenditure of public funds.

The report of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs recommending the bill follows:

VETERANS' ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D. C., April 9, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: There is transmitted herewith draft of a bill to amend section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, with the request that the same be introduced and considered for enactment.

The purpose of the proposed bill is to extend for 1 year the provisions of the second paragraph of section 100 of the act, as added by Public Law 424, Seventy-ninth Congress, approved June 22, 1946, which authorizes the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into 5-year leases, notwithstanding the fact that appropriations are not presently available for the entire period and further to permit such leases to be made free from the restrictions of the so-called Economy Act of 1932 (47 Stat. 412) approved June 30, 1932, as amended (47 Stat. 1517), prohibiting entering into any lease where the annual rental rate, in cases of rentals above $2,000 per annum, exceeds 15 percent of the fair market value of the premises at date of the lease, or where the amount of alterations, repairs, and improvements to be made at Government expense exceeds 25 percent of the first year's rental. These provisions of section 100, supra, expire June 30, 1947.

No substantial change in the rental market is presently anticipated and the Veterans' Administration will have the same difficulty in securing rental space during the fiscal year 1948 as required by special authorizations contained in the act of June 22, 1946.

The Veterans' Administration, under its decentralization program, has established 1,468 branch, regional, subregional, contact, and guidance offices. These field offices are quartered in 1,685 separate buildings and occupy approximately 13,500,000 square feet of office space as compared with an anticipated maximum requirement of approximately 15,000,000 square feet of space. The Administrator of Veterans' Affairs would have been unable to acquire much of this space under the conditions which existed in the real-estate markets of this country during the fiscal year 1947 had it not been for the authority contained in section 100, supra.

During the coming fiscal year, in the interest of improved service for veterans and maximum economy of operation, many of these offices will be consolidated under one roof. The number that will be consolidated cannot be estimated with any degree of accuracy, but such consolidations will be made wherever practical. However, if the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is to successfully carry out this program of consolidation, it will be necessary for him to continue to exercise his present authority under section 100, supra.

The policy of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs during the fiscal year 1947 has been to exercise the leasing authority in question only in those instances in which it has been determined that the exercise of such authority was necessary in the public interest. This policy will remain in effect if the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to negotiate such leases is continued for the fiscal year 1948. In this connection, it should be noted that to date but approximately 50 leases have been entered into for a period exceeding 1 year. Without such authority, it doubtless would have been necessary in many cases either to accept undesirable space or to resort to condemnation or purchase to acquire suitable space.

Failure to continue the provisions of the second paragraph of section 100, supra, would seriously hamper the activities of the Veterans' Administration, particularly those relating to the installation of out-patient treatment clinics. It would also probably result in an increase in the expenditure of public funds.

The conclusions stated in the preceding paragraph are based upon the following considerations. The Veterans' Administration is now excepted by the provisions of section 100, supra, from the restrictions imposed by the terms of the act of June 30, 1932, as amended, supra, which limit expenditures for alterations, improvements, and repairs of leased space to 25 percent of the first year's rental. This restriction under present market conditions would make it difficult to obtain space at a reasonable price, since in the experience of the Veterans' Administration, cheaper space costing, for example, 50 cents per square foot per annum would generally require a greater expenditure for alterations than higher-priced space costing perhaps $3 per square foot per annum. Notwithstanding this fact, however, under the restrictions of the act of June 30, 1932, as amended, the Veterans' Administration could spend 75 cents per square foot for alterations on the more expensive space whereas on the cheaper space it could spend for alterations but 12½ cents per square foot. Consequently, when space is required for a long-term use, it would in many cases result in a substantial saving to the Government to acquire cheaper space and put it into condition for use. An estimate of gross savings which might be realized by the Government in this manner cannot be definitely determined but undoubtedly it would approximate many thousands of dollars. Further, in connection with the installation of medical clinics in leased premises, the Veterans' Administration is unable, because of the peculiar and extensive character of the alterations required, to make the necessary alterations for as little as 25 percent of the annual rental.

For the foregoing reasons, it is respectfully requested that the proposed legislation be introduced and given early consideration for enactment.

Advice has been received from the Bureau of the Budget that there would be no objection by that office to the submission of the proposed legislation to the Congress.

Sincerely yours,

OMAR N. BRADLEY,
General, United States Army, Administrator.

RAMSEYER RULE

In accordance with the provisions of clause 2a, rule XIII, House of Representatives, the changes made in existing law by the bill are shown as follows (existing law proposed to be omitted is in black brackets; new matter is in italics; existing law in which no changes are proposed is shown in roman):

Section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended:

SEC. 100. The Veterans' Administration is hereby declared to be an essential war agency and entitled to priority equal to the highest granted any department or agency of the Government in personnel, service, space, equipment, supplies, and material under any laws, Executive orders, and regulations pertaining to priorities. The Administrator is authorized, for the purpose of extending benefits to veterans and dependents, and to the extent he deems necessary, to procure the necessary space for administrative, clinical, medical, and out-patient treatment purposes by lease, purchase, or construction of buildings, or by condemnation or declaration of taking, pursuant to existing statutes.

Until [June 30, 1947] June 30, 1948, the Administrator is authorized to enter into leases or renewals of leases of property for any of the purposes specified in this section for periods not exceeding five years. The provisions of the Act of June 30, 1932 (47 Stat. 412), as amended by section 15 of the Act of March 3, 1933 (47 Stat. 1517; 40 U. S. C. 278a), the provisions of section 3679 of the Revised Statutes, as amended by the Act of March 3, 1905 (33 Stat. 1257), and the Act of February 27, 1906 (34 Stat. 48; 31 U. S. C. 665); and the provisions of section 3732 of the Revised Statutes (41 U. S. C. 11) shall not apply to any lease entered into by the Administrator under the authority of this section. Nothing in this section shall be construed to diminish, or in any way limit any rights, power, or authority granted to the Administrator under any other law.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON LABOR BILL

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MICHENER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time in order to announce that the conference report on the labor bill which we propose to call up tomorrow will be called after the final action on the pending War Department appropriation bill if it is disposed of before 3 o'clock. If, however, that bill is not disposed of by 3 o'clock we will have the committee rise in order to act on the conference report on the labor bill.

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. RAYBURN. Is the gentleman still of the opinion that he could not give us more time than that? I thank the gentleman for his courtesy in giving us 3 more hours, but, frankly, I still do not think the Members are going to have time to read and digest this conference report in such a short time because they will only be able to get it in the morning.

Mr. HALLECK. I appreciate the gentleman's attitude, but as matters now stand I find it necessary to proceed with the program as I have outlined it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HALLECK. I yield.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I was one of the conferees. The writing of the final bill shifted so rapidly over there that even I was not able to keep track of it. When will we get this report? Is it available now or is it just being printed now?

Mr. HALLECK. The report which has been filed will be in the RECORD in the morning. The bill as agreed upon was available to the extent of a few copies over the week-end and every Member had delivered to his office this morning a copy of this bill as agreed upon by the conferees, so they have had that in their possession available for study today.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I would say to the gentleman I had a copy of that yesterday and I read it very carefully; that is, the proposed bill. But I was greatly interested in reading this conference report to see if I could find something in the report that would justify supporting the bill.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, this morning I obtained unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include an address delivered by Bishop Charles B. Galloway of my State on the life and character of Jefferson Davis. I find that it exceeds the amount allowed, but I ask unanimous consent that it may be included regardless of the cost.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HALLECK). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted to Mr. KELLEY for 7 weeks, on account of appointment as substitute delegate and adviser to International Labor Organization Conference, Geneva, Switzerland.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED

A joint resolution of the Senate of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. J. Res. 117. Joint resolution providing for acceptance by the United States of America of the Constitution of the International Labor Organization Instrument of Amendment, and further authorizing an appropriation for payment of the United States share of the expenses of membership and for expenses of participation by the United States; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 51 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Wednesday, June 4, 1947, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

731. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Navy, transmitting a report of a proposed transfer of a motor launch to the Junior Militia, Inc., of the State of Maryland; to the Committee on Armed Services.

732. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to reimburse employees of the Department for expense of entertainment of representatives of other countries, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

733. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, recommending an amendment to section 17 (c) of the Federal Airport Act, Public Law 377, Seventy-ninth Congress; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

734. A letter from the Acting Administrator, Federal Security Agency, transmitting a draft of a proposed bill to amend the act of September 7, 1916, to authorize certain expenditures from the employees' compensation fund, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

735. A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of a proposed joint resolution providing for membership and participation by the United States in the Caribbean Commission and authorizing an appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

736. A letter from the Archivist of the United States, transmitting report on records proposed for disposal by various Government agencies; to the Committee on House Administration.

737. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of Engineers, United States Army, dated June 17, 1946, submitting a report, together with accompanying papers and illustrations, on a review of reports on and a preliminary examination and survey of Polecat Creek, Creek County, Okla., requested by a resolution of the Committee on Flood Control, House of Representatives, adopted on July 23, 1941, and also authorized by the Flood Control Act approved on August 18, 1941 (H. Doc. No. 290); to the Committee on Public Works and ordered to be printed, with three illustrations.

SENATE

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met, in executive session, at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Lord our God, as we seek Thy guidance this day, we do not ask to see the distant scene, knowing that we can take only one step at a time. Make that first step plain to us, that we may see where our duty lies, but give us a push, that we may start in the right direction.

Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHERRY, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the legislative proceedings of Tuesday, June 3, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, and withdrawing sundry nominations in the Army, which nominating messages were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

CONSULAR CONVENTION WITH THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES—REMOVAL OF INJUNCTION OF SECRECY

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair lays before the Senate Executive Q, Eightieth Congress, first session, a consular convention between the United States and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on March 14, 1947. Without objection, the injunction of secrecy will be removed from the convention, and it will be referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations and printed in the RECORD. The Chair hears no objection.

The convention is as follows:

To the Senate of the United States:

With a view to receiving the advice and consent of the Senate to ratification, I transmit herewith the consular convention between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on March 14, 1947.

I also transmit for the information of the Senate the report by the Secretary of State with respect to the convention.

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, June 4, 1947.

(Enclosures: 1. Report of the Secretary of State. 2. Consular Convention between the United States and the Republic of the Philippines, signed March 14, 1947.)

DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, June 2, 1947.

The PRESIDENT,
The White House:

The undersigned, the Secretary of State, has the honor to lay before the President, with a view to its transmission to the Senate to receive the advice and consent of that body to ratification, if his judgment approve thereof, a consular convention between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on March 14, 1947.

The convention establishes the rights, privileges, immunities, and exemptions of consular officers of the United States in the Philippines and of consular officers of the Philippines in the United States.

Article II of the treaty of general relations between the United States of America and the Republic of the Philippines, signed at Manila on July 4, 1946, contains provisions relating to consular representation as follows:

"The consular representatives of each country, duly provided with exequatur, will be permitted to reside in the territories of the other in the places wherein consular representatives are by local laws permitted to reside; they shall enjoy the honorary privileges and the immunities accorded to such officers by general international usage; and they shall not be treated in a manner less favorable than similar officers of any other foreign country."

By an exchange of notes dated July 10 and 12, 1946, between the Philippine Secretary of Foreign Affairs and the American Ambassador in Manila, the two Governments confirmed that they would observe the provisions of article II of the treaty of general relations "pending final ratification thereof." The treaty of general relations entered into force on October 22, 1946, upon the exchange of instruments of ratification thereof.

The consular convention signed on March 14, 1947, contains provisions, comprehensive in scope, similar in substance to provisions in consular conventions or to consular provisions in treaties of friendship, commerce, and consular rights in force between the United States and many foreign countries. For example, the provisions in articles I, II, IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, XIV, and XVI of this convention correspond, respectively, to the provisions in articles I, II, III (par. 1), IV, V, VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, and XIV of the most recently concluded consular convention between the United States and a foreign country, namely, the consular convention with Mexico, signed on August 12, 1942, which entered into force on June 1, 1943 (57 Stat., pt. 2, 800). Article III of the convention with the Republic of the Philippines corresponds to provisions in numerous existing treaties or conventions of the United States; for example, the second paragraph of article VI of the consular convention of April 22, 1926, with Cuba (44 Stat. 2471), the second and third paragraphs of article XXI of the treaty of friendship, commerce, and consular rights of February 13, 1934, with Finland (49 Stat. 2659), and the third and fourth paragraphs of article III of the consular convention of October 7, 1938, with Liberia (54 Stat. 1751). Article XV has no exact counterpart in existing treaties or conventions of the United States, but is consistent with the principles and purposes of standard consular provisions and its effect is simply to express an understanding which, for all practical purposes, would be given effect in any event.

Among the principal exemptions to be accorded under the convention to consular officers of each country in the other country, and to certain other persons, are the exemptions provided in article IV with respect to taxes levied on their persons or property and on salaries, allowances, fees, or wages received for consular services, and the exemptions provided in article V with respect to duties on the importation of baggage and other personal property.

It is provided in article XVI that the convention shall take effect upon the exchange of ratifications, shall continue in force for the term of 10 years, and shall continue in effect after that period subject to the right of either party to give 6 months' notice to the other party of an intention to terminate the convention.

Respectfully submitted.

G. C. MARSHALL.

CONSULAR CONVENTION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA AND THE REPUBLIC OF THE PHILIPPINES

The President of the United States of America, and the President of the Philippines, being desirous of defining the rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities of consular officers of each country in the territories of the other country, have decided to conclude a convention for that purpose and have appointed as their plenipotentiaries:

The President of the United States of America:

His Excellency Paul V. McNutt, Ambassador of the United States of America, and

The President of the Philippines:

His Excellency Elpidio Quirino, Vice President and concurrently Secretary of Foreign Affairs of the Republic of the Philippines.

Who, having communicated to each other their respective full powers, found to be in good and due form, have agreed on the following Articles:

ARTICLE I

1. The Government of each High Contracting Party shall, in respect of any consular officer duly commissioned by it to exercise consular functions in the territories of the other High Contracting Party, give written notice to the Government of such other High Contracting Party of the appointment of such consular officer and shall request that recognition be accorded to such consular officer. The Government of each High Contracting Party shall furnish free of charge the necessary exequatur of any consular officer of the other High Contracting Party who presents a regular commission signed by the Chief Executive of the appointing country and under its great seal, and shall issue to a subordinate or substitute consular officer who is duly appointed by an accepted superior consular officer or by any other competent officer of his Government, such documents as according to the laws of the respective High Contracting Parties shall be requisite for the exercise by the appointee of the consular function; provided in either case that the person applying for an exequatur or other document is found acceptable.

2. Consular officers of each High Contracting Party shall, after entering upon their duties, enjoy reciprocally in the territories of the other High Contracting Party rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities no less favorable in any respect than the rights, privileges, exemptions, and immunities which are enjoyed by consular officers of the same grade of any third country and in conformity with modern international usage. As official agents, such officers shall be entitled to the high consideration of all officials, national, state, provincial or municipal, with whom they have official intercourse in the territories of the High Contracting Party which receives them. It is understood that the term "consular officers", as used in the present Convention, includes consuls general, consuls and vice consuls who are not honorary.

3. Upon the death, incapacity, or absence of a consular officer having no subordinate consular officer at his post, any secretary, chancellor or assistant, whose official character as an employee in the consulate may previously have been made known to the Government of the High Contracting Party in whose territories the consular function was exercised, may temporarily exercise the consular functions of the deceased or incapacitated or absent consular officer; and while so acting shall enjoy all the rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities that were granted to the consular officer.

4. A consular officer or a diplomatic officer of either High Contracting Party, a national of the country by which he is appointed and duly commissioned or accredited, may, in the territories of the other High Contracting Party, have the rank also of a diplomatic officer or consular officer, as the case may be, it being understood that permission for him to exercise such dual functions shall have been duly granted by the Government of the High Contracting Party in the territories of which he exercises his functions.

ARTICLE II

1. Consular officers, nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they are appointed, and not engaged in any private occupations for gain within the territories of the country in which they exercise their functions, shall be exempt from arrest in such territories except when charged with the commission of an offense designated by local legislation as a crime other than a misdemeanor and subjecting the individual guilty thereof to punishment by imprisonment. Such officers shall be exempt from military billetings, and from service of any military or naval, administrative or police character whatsoever, and the exemptions provided for by this sentence shall apply equally to employees in a consulate who are nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they are employed, and not engaged in any private occupation for gain.

2. In criminal cases the attendance at court by a consular officer as witness may be demanded by the plaintiff, the defense or the court. The demand shall be made with all possible respect for the consular dignity and the duties of the office, and when so made there shall be compliance on the part of the consular officer.

3. In civil cases, consular officers shall be subject to the jurisdiction of the courts in the territories of the High Contracting Party which receives them. When the testimony of a consular officer who is a national of the High Contracting Party which appoints him and who is not engaged in any private occupation for gain is taken in civil cases, it shall be taken orally or in writing at his residence or office and with due regard for his convenience. The officer should, however, voluntarily give his testimony at court whenever it is possible to do so without serious interference with his official duties.

4. Consular officers and employees in a consulate shall not be required to testify in criminal or civil cases, regarding acts performed by them in their official capacity.

ARTICLE III

1. The Government of each High Contracting Party shall have the right to acquire and hold, lease and occupy land and buildings required for diplomatic or consular purposes in the territories of the other High Contracting Party, and shall have the right to erect buildings on land which is held by or on behalf of such Government in the territories of the other High Contracting Party for diplomatic or consular purposes, subject to local building regulations.

2. No tax of any kind, national, state, provincial or municipal, shall be levied in the territories of either High Contracting Party on the Government of the other High Contracting Party, or on any officer or employee of such other High Contracting Party, in respect of land or buildings acquired, leased, or occupied by such other High Contracting Party and used exclusively for the conduct of official business, except assessments levied for services or local public improvements by which the premises are benefited, provided the right of each High Contracting Party to tax the owner of property leased to the other High Contracting Party is not hereby abridged.

ARTICLE IV

Consular officers and employees in a consulate, nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they are appointed or employed, and not engaged in any private occupation for gain within the territories in which they exercise their functions, shall be exempt from all taxes, national, state, provincial and municipal, levied on their persons or property, except taxes levied on account of the possession or ownership of immovable property situated within the territories in which they exercise their functions or taxes levied on account of income derived from property of any kind situated within such territories. Consular officers and employees in a consulate, nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they are appointed or employed, shall be exempt from the payment of all taxes, national, state, provincial and municipal, on the salaries, allowances, fees or wages received by them in compensation for consular services.

ARTICLE V

1. All furniture, equipment and supplies intended for official use in the consular offices and official consular residences of either High Contracting Party in the territories of the other High Contracting Party shall be permitted entry into such territories free of all duty.

2. Consular officers of either High Contracting Party and members of their families and suites, including employees in a consulate and their families, shall be exempt from the payment of any duty in respect of the entry into the territories of the other High Contracting Party of their baggage and all other personal property, whether preceding or accompanying them to a consular post, either upon first arrival or upon subsequent arrivals, or imported at any time while assigned to or employed at such post.

3. It is understood, however,

(a) that the exemptions provided in paragraph 2 of this Article shall not be extended to consular officers and members of their suites, including employees in a consulate, who are not nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they are appointed or employed, or who are engaged in any private occupation for gain within the territories of the other High Contracting Party;

(b) that in the case of each consignment of articles imported for the personal use of consular officers or members of their families or suites, including employees in a consulate and their families, at any time during their official residence within the territories in which they exercise their functions, a request for entry free of duty shall be made through diplomatic channels; and

(c) that nothing herein shall be construed to permit the entry into the territory of either High Contracting Party of any article the importation of which is specifically prohibited by law.

ARTICLE VI

1. Consular officers of either High Contracting Party may place over the outer door of their respective offices the arms of their country with an appropriate inscription designating the nature of the office, and they may place the coat of arms and fly the flag of their country on automobiles employed by them in the exercise of their consular functions. Such officers may also fly the flag of their country on their offices, including those situated in the capitals of the respective countries. They may likewise fly such flag over any boat, vessel, or aircraft employed in the exercise of their consular functions.

2. The quarters where consular business is conducted, all consular correspondence in transit under official seal, and all papers, records, and correspondence comprising the consular archives shall at all times be inviolable and under no pretext shall any authorities of any character of the country in which such quarters or archives are located invade such premises or make any examination or seizure of papers or other property in such quarters or of such archives. When the consular officers are engaged in business within the territories in which they exercise their functions, the consular files and documents shall be kept in a place entirely separate from the place where private or business papers are kept. Consular offices shall not be used as places of asylum. No consular officer shall be required to produce official archives in court or to testify as to their contents.

ARTICLE VII

1. Consular officers of either High Contracting Party shall have the right, within their respective consular districts, to apply to or address the authorities, national, state, provincial, or municipal, for the purpose of protecting the nationals of the High Contracting Party by which they were appointed in the enjoyment of rights accruing by treaty or otherwise. Complaint may be made for the infraction of those rights. Failure upon the part of the proper authorities to grant redress or to accord protection shall justify interposition through the diplomatic channel, and in the absence of a diplomatic representative, a consul general or the consular officer stationed at the capital shall have the right to apply directly to the Government of the country.

2. Consular officers of either High Contracting Party shall, within their respective districts, have the right to interview, to communicate with, and to advise nationals of their country; to inquire into any incidents which have occurred affecting the interest of such nationals; and to assist such nationals in proceedings before or relations with authorities in the territories of the other High Contracting Party. Consular officers of either High Contracting Party shall be informed immediately whenever nationals of their country are under detention or arrest or in prison or are awaiting trial in their consular districts and they shall, upon notification to the appropriate authorities, be permitted without delay to visit and communicate with any such national.

3. Nationals of either High Contracting Party in the territories of the other High Contracting Party shall have the right at all times to communicate with the consular officers of their country. Communications to their consular officers from nationals of either High Contracting Party who are under detention or arrest or in prison or are awaiting trial in the territories of the other High Contracting Party shall be forwarded without delay to such consular officers by the local authorities.

ARTICLE VIII

1. Consular officers in pursuance of the laws of their respective countries shall have the right, within their respective consular districts:

(a) To take and attest the oaths, affirmations or depositions of any occupant of a vessel of their country, or of any national of their country, or of any person having permanent residence within the territories of their country:

(b) To authenticate signatures;

(c) To draw up, attest, certify and authenticate unilateral acts, translations, deeds, testamentary dispositions and contracts of the nationals of the High Contracting Party by which the consular officers are appointed; and

(d) To draw up, attest, certify, and authenticate unilateral acts, deeds, contracts, testamentary dispositions and written instruments of any kind, which are intended to have application, execution and legal effect principally in the territories of the High Contracting Party by which the consular officers are appointed.

2. Instruments and documents thus executed and copies and translations thereof, when duly authenticated by the consular officer, under his official seal, shall be received as evidence in the territories of either High Contracting Party as original documents or authenticated copies, as the case may be, and shall have the same force and effect as if drawn by or executed before a notary or other public officer duly authorized in the territories of the High Contracting Party by which the consular officer was appointed; provided, always, that such documents shall have been drawn and executed in conformity with the laws and regulations of the country where they are designed to take effect.

ARTICLE IX

1. In case of the death of a national of either High Contracting Party in the territories of the other High Contracting Party, without having in the locality of his decease any known heirs or testamentary executors by him appointed, the competent local authorities shall at once inform the nearest consular officer of the High Contracting Party of which the deceased was a national of the fact of his death, in order that necessary information may be forwarded to the persons concerned.

2. In case of the death of a national of either High Contracting Party in the territories of the other High Contracting Party, without will or testament whereby he has appointed a testamentary executor, the consular officer of the High Contracting Party of which the deceased was a national and within whose district the deceased made his home at the time of death, shall, so far as the laws of the country permit and pending the appointment of an administrator and until letters of administration have been granted, be deemed qualified to take charge of the property left by the decedent for the preservation and protection of such property. Such consular officer shall have the right to be appointed as administrator within the discretion of a court or other agency controlling the administration of estates, provided the laws governing administration of the estate so permit.

3. Whenever a consular officer accepts the office of administrator of the estate of a deceased countryman, he subjects himself in that capacity to the jurisdiction of the court or other agency making the appointment for all necessary purposes to the same extent as if he were a national of the High Contracting Party by which he has been received.

ARTICLE X

1. A consular officer of either High Contracting Party shall within his district have the right to appear personally or by authorized representative in all matters concerning the administration and distribution of the estate of a deceased person under the jurisdiction of the local authorities, for all such heirs or legatees in the estate, either minors or adults, as may be nonresidents of the country and nationals of the High Contracting Party by which the consular officer was appointed, unless such heirs or legatees have appeared, either in person or by duly authorized representatives.

2. A consular officer of either High Contracting Party shall have the right, on behalf of the nonresident nationals of the High Contracting Party by which he was appointed, to collect and receipt for their distributive shares derived from estates in process of probate or accruing under the provisions of workmen's compensation laws or other like statutes, for transmission through channels prescribed by his Government to the proper distributees, provided that the court or other agency making distribution through him may require him to furnish reasonable evidence of the remission of the funds to the distributees, it being understood that his responsibility with respect to remission of such funds shall cease when such evidence has been furnished by him to and accepted by such court or other agency.

ARTICLE XI

1. A consular officer of either High Contracting Party shall have exclusive jurisdiction over controversies arising out of the internal order of private vessels of his country and shall alone exercise jurisdiction in situations, wherever arising, between officers and crews, pertaining to the enforcement of discipline on board, provided the vessel and the persons charged with wrong-doing shall have entered the territorial waters or territories within his consular district. Consular officers shall also have jurisdiction over issues concerning the adjustment of wages of the crews and the execution of contracts relating to their wages or conditions of employment, provided the local laws so permit.

2. When acts committed on board private vessels of the country by which the consular officer has been appointed and within the territories or the territorial waters of the High Contracting Party by which he has been received, constitute crimes according to the laws of the receiving country, subjecting the persons guilty thereof to punishment by a sentence of death or of imprisonment for a period of at least one year, the consular officer shall not exercise jurisdiction except in so far as he is permitted to do so by the laws of the receiving country.

3. A consular officer shall have the right freely to invoke the assistance of the local police authorities in all matters pertaining to the maintenance of internal order on board vessels of his country within the territories or the territorial waters of the country by which he has been received, and upon such request the requisite assistance shall be given promptly.

4. A consular officer shall have the right to appear with the officers and crews of vessels of his country before the judicial authorities of the country by which he has been received for the purpose of observing proceedings or of rendering assistance as an interpreter or agent.

ARTICLE XII

1. A consular officer of either High Contracting Party shall have the right to inspect within the ports of the other High Contracting Party within his consular district, the private vessels of any flag destined to and about to clear for the ports of his country, for the sole purpose of observing the sanitary conditions and measures taken on board such vessels, in order that he may be enabled thereby to execute intelligently bills of health and other documents required by the laws of his country, and to inform his Government concerning the extent to which its sanitary regulations have been observed at ports of departure by vessels destined to its ports, with a view to facilitating entry of such vessels.

2. In exercising the right conferred upon them by this Article, consular officers shall act with all possible dispatch and without unnecessary delay.

ARTICLE XIII

1. All proceedings relative to the salvage of vessels of either High Contracting Party wrecked upon the coasts of the other High Contracting Party shall be directed by the consular officer of the country to which the vessel belongs and within whose district the wreck may have occurred, or by some other person authorized for such purpose by the law of such country and whose identity and authority shall be made known to the local authorities by the consular officer.

2. The local authorities of the country where the wreck has occurred shall immediately inform the consular officer, or such other authorized person, of the occurrence. Pending the arrival of the consular officer or such other authorized person, the local authorities shall take all necessary measures for the protection of persons and the preservation of the wrecked property. The local authorities shall intervene only to maintain order, to protect the interests of the salvors, if the salvors do not belong to the crew of the wrecked vessel, and to ensure the execution of the arrangements which shall be made for the entry and exportation of the salvaged merchandise and equipment. It is understood that such merchandise and equipment shall not be subjected to any customs or customhouse charges unless intended for consumption in the country where the wreck has occurred.

3. When the wreck occurs within a port, there shall be observed also those arrangement which may be ordered by the local authorities with a view to avoiding any damage that might otherwise be caused thereby to the port and to other ships.

4. The intervention of the local authorities shall occasion no expense of any kind to the owners or operators of the wrecked vessels, except such expenses as may be caused by the operations of salvage and the preservation of the merchandise and equipment saved, together with expenses that would be incurred under similar circumstances by vessels of the country.

ARTICLE XIV

Honorary consuls or vice consuls of either High Contracting Party, as the case may be, shall enjoy those rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities provided for in Article I, paragraph 1, Article II, paragraph 1, Articles VI, VII, VIII, IX, X, XI, XII, XIII, and XIV of the present Convention, for which they have received authority in conformity with the laws of the High Contracting Party by which they are appointed; and they shall enjoy in any case all the rights, privileges, exemptions and immunities enjoyed by honorary consular officers of the same rank of any third country.

ARTICLE XV

A consular officer shall cease to discharge his functions (1) by virtue of an official communication from the Government of the High Contracting Party by which appointed addressed to the Government of the High Contracting Party by which he has been received advising that his functions have ceased, or (2) by virtue of a request from the Government of the High Contracting Party by which appointed that an exequatur be issued to a successor, or (3) by withdrawal of the exequatur granted him by the Government of the High Contracting Party in whose territory he has been discharging his duties.

ARTICLE XVI

1. The present Convention shall be ratified and the ratification thereof shall be exchanged at Manila. The Convention shall take effect in all its provisions immediately upon the exchange of ratifications and shall continue in force for the term of ten years.

2. If, six months before the expiration of the aforesaid period of ten years, the Government of neither High Contracting Party shall have given notice to the Government of the other High Contracting Party of an intention to terminate the Convention upon the expiration of the aforesaid period of ten years, the Convention shall continue in effect after the aforesaid period and until six months from the date on which the Government of either High Contracting Party shall have notified to the Government of the other High Contracting Party an intention to terminate the Convention.

In faith whereof the above named plenipotentiaries have signed the present Convention and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in duplicate at Manila, this fourteenth day of March in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and forty-seven and of the Independence of the Republic of the Philippines the first.

Tampa Townsend Club, No. 35, all in the State of Florida, praying for the enactment of the so-called Townsend plan to provide old-age assistance; to the Committee on Finance.

The petition of A. Goad, of Carroll County, Va., praying for the enactment of legislation to continue the Agricultural Adjustment Administration; to the Committee on Appropriations.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from the New Jersey League of Women Shoppers, Newark, N. J., signed by Mae K. Rubin, president, praying for the enactment of the so-called Murray-Wagner bill, being the bill S. 528, to continue rent control until June 30, 1948; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. BROOKS:

A joint resolution of the Legislature of the State of Illinois; to the Committee on Finance:

"Senate Joint Resolution 16

"Whereas there was imposed by the Revenue Act of 1932, enacted by the Seventy-second Congress, a tax of 1 cent upon every gallon of gasoline sold in the United States; and

"Whereas this excise, although originally imposed upon the people of the United States as a measure to endure only for the period of the depression, has not only been continued until the present day but was actually increased by 50 percent in 1941; and

"Whereas both the economic depression, which was cited as justification for the original levy, and the war emergency under pressure of which the tax was increased, have, for all practical purposes, ceased to exist; and

"Whereas it is an accepted principle of political economy that funds obtained from taxation of gasoline and lubricating oils are to be used only for improvement of roads and motoring conditions; and

"Whereas the receipts from this tax are not allocated to a special fund, appropriation from which is restricted to the purposes mentioned above; and

"Whereas by its action the Federal Government has tapped a source of revenue which has always been regarded as a State prerogative and has usurped powers which the Constitution reserves to the States and the people: Therefore be it

"Resolved by the Senate of the Sixty-fifth General Assembly of the State of Illinois (the house of representatives concurring herein), That we hereby petition and memorialize the Eightieth Congress of the United States to repeal immediately those provisions of the Revenue Act of 1932, as amended, which impose a tax upon the production and distribution of gasoline; and be it further

"Resolved, That copies of this resolution be prepared by the secretary of state and forwarded to every Member of Congress from the State of Illinois.

"Adopted by the senate March 12, 1947.

"Concurred in by the house of representatives May 22, 1947."

By Mr. PEPPER:

A memorial of the Legislature of the State of Florida; to the Committee on Public Lands:

"Senate Memorial 1

"Memorial to petition the President and the Congress of the United States to take appropriate measures to assist in the restoration and preservation of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., and other historic missions, forts, and landmarks of the State of Florida

"Whereas the city of St. Augustine was founded in the year 1565 and is the oldest city in the United States; and

"Whereas as the oldest city in the United States it is of vital importance as a national historic shrine; and

"Whereas the State of Florida contains many other forts, missions, and other places of great historic interest which should be restored and preserved; and

"Whereas by appropriate action, the President and the Congress of the United States have aided and assisted in the restoration and preservation of historic missions, forts, and landmarks throughout the United States of America: Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Legislature of the State of Florida:

"(1) That the President and the Congress of the United States are hereby petitioned to adopt and carry out appropriate measures to aid and assist in the restoration and preservation of the historic city of St. Augustine, Fla., and to aid and assist in the restoration and preservation of other historic missions, forts, and landmarks throughout the State of Florida.

"(2) The President and the Congress of the United States are hereby petitioned to cause to be minted a memorial half-dollar coin with appropriate design to commemorate the program of the restoration and preservation of the city of St. Augustine, Fla., and other historic missions, forts, and landmarks of the State of Florida.

"(3) That copies of this memorial be transmitted to the President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and President of the Senate in Congress and to each of Florida's representatives in both the House and Senate in Congress.

"(4) That a copy of this memorial be spread upon the journal of both the Senate and House of Representatives of the State of Florida and sufficient copies thereof be furnished to the press.

"Became a law without the Governor's approval.

"Filed in office of secretary of state, May 26, 1947."

PROHIBITION AGAINST LIQUOR ADVERTISING

Mr. CAPPER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to present for reference to the Senate Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, a petition signed by 1,445 residents of Nashville, Tenn., praying for the enactment of my anti-liquor-advertising bill, S. 265.

This is indicative of the whole-hearted response coming from all sections of the country urging adoption of the measure.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the petition, without signatures attached, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the petition was received, referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, without the signatures attached, as follows:

To our Senators and Representatives in Congress:

We respectfully request that you use your influence and vote for the passage of S. 265, a bill to prohibit the transportation of alcoholic beverage advertising in interstate commerce and the broadcasting of alcoholic beverage advertising over the radio. The most pernicious effect of this advertising is the constant invitation and enticement to drink. The American people spent $7,770,000,000 for alcoholic beverages in 1946 as compared with $3,700,000,000 in 1942. During the same period there was a corresponding increase each year in crime. There is every reason why this expenditure should not be increased, but decreased.

RECOGNITION OF GOD AS FOUNTAIN OF RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES—RESOLUTION OF GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a most significant resolution which was unanimously adopted by the One Hundred and Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church. The resolution was presented by Mr. Chauncey McCormick, of Chicago, who was a commissioner to this significant assembly. I commend its reading to the Members of Congress.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

The One Hundred and Fifty-ninth General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church in the United States of America in session at Grand Rapids, Mich., recalls with pride and gratitude the fact that the Reverend John Witherspoon of our church was the only ordained minister who signed the Declaration of Independence wherein we recognized the Creator as the source of our inalienable rights and the Author of our liberties.

It also recalls that the same John Witherspoon assembled the supreme ruling body of our Presbyterian Church in Philadelphia in 1787 in coincidence with the meeting there of the national convention held in Independence Hall under the Presidency of George Washington for the purpose of writing the Constitution of the United States.

Many Presbyterians, including John Witherspoon, were members of this national convention and with their influence, our National Government was founded which later adopted as the motto on its coinage "In God We Trust."

In violation of tradition and of our customs as a God-fearing people, our Government caused to be called together an international congress to meet in San Francisco in 1945, without making reference to the Deity, and furthermore our Government, as host to that congress, failed to recognize God in any manner.

Now, therefore, this assembly respectfully requests our Government constantly to be mindful of its avowed faith in Almighty God as the fountainhead of our rights and liberties, and on every public occasion to give due and proper recognition of this faith.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

H. R. 360. A bill for the relief of the legal guardian of Francis Eugene Hardin, a minor; without amendment (Rept. No. 236).

By Mr. ECTON, from the Committee on Public Lands:

S. 484. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to issue to Joseph J. Pickett a patent in fee to certain land; without amendment (Rept. No. 237).

CLAIM OF J. B. McCRARY CO., INC.—REFERENCE OF BILL TO COURT OF CLAIMS

Mr. WILEY, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported an original resolution (S. Res. 122), which was ordered to be placed on the calendar, as follows:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 708) entitled "A bill for the relief of the J. B. McCrary Co., Inc.," now pending in the Senate, together with all the accompanying papers, is hereby referred to the Court of Claims pursuant to section 151 of the Judicial Code, as amended; and the said court shall proceed expeditiously with the same in accordance with the provisions of such section and report to the Senate, at the earliest practicable date, giving such findings of fact and conclusions thereon as shall be sufficient to inform Congress of the nature and character of the demand, as a claim, legal or equitable, against the United States, and the amount, if any, legally or equitably due from the United States to the claimant.

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, June 4, 1947, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 565. An act to amend section 3539 of the Revised Statutes, relating to taking trial pieces of coins;

S. 566. An act to amend sections 3533 and 3536 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins;

S. 583. An act to authorize the exchange of lands acquired by the United States for the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, Oregon, for the purpose of consolidating holdings therein and for other purposes;

S. 993. An act to provide for the reincorporation of Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes;

S. 1022. An act to authorize an adequate White House Police force; and

S. 1073. An act to extend until June 30, 1949, the period of time during which persons may serve in certain executive departments and agencies without being prohibited from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting claims against the United States by reason of having so served.

BILLS INTRODUCED

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

H. R. 1497. An act for the relief of the estate of George W. Coombs;

H. R. 1531. An act for the relief of William P. Gillingham;

H. R. 1658. An act for the relief of Norman Thoreson;

H. R. 1742. An act for the relief of Mary Lomas;

H. R. 1799. An act for the relief of Eva L. Dudley, Grace M. Collins, and Guy B. Slater;

H. R. 1851. An act for the relief of A. J. Davis, Mrs. Lorene Griffin, Earle Griffin, and Harry Musgrove;

H. R. 2302. An act for the relief of New Jersey, Indiana & Illinois Railroad;

H. R. 3170. An act for the relief of R. W. Wood; and

H. R. 3387. An act for the relief of Bruce Bros. Grain Co.; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

H. J. Res. 96. Joint resolution authorizing the President to issue posthumously to the late Roy Stanley Geiger, lieutenant general, United States Marine Corps, a commission as general, United States Marine Corps, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

REPORT OF ADVISORY COMMISSION ON UNIVERSAL TRAINING

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following communication from the President of the United States, which was read, and, with the accompanying report, referred to the Committee on Armed Services:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, June 4, 1947.

Hon. ARTHUR H. VANDENBERG,
President of the Senate pro tempore,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. PRESIDENT: On October 23, 1945, I recommended to the Congress the enactment of a system of universal training. From the extensive discussion which followed, it was obvious that there was great disparity of viewpoint on the subject.

In an effort to clarify the situation, I appointed, on November 20, 1946, an Advisory Commission on Universal Training. I asked the Commission to determine whether the security of this Nation and the preservation of world peace required the establishment of a system of universal training. I asked further, that if such a system were deemed necessary, how it should be carried out to give this country the largest measure of protection, make maximum allowance for the spiritual, mental, and physical development of the young men in training, and keep costs at the lowest level consistent with attainment of its security goal.

The Commission has made an exhaustive investigation and has submitted an excellent report. It is significant to note that the members of the Commission, consisting of outstanding Americans in various fields of endeavor, unanimously recommend the adoption of universal training.

Copies of the report of the Commission are transmitted herewith for the information of the Congress and I urge that the Congress give early consideration to the subject of universal training which is, in the words of the Commission, "an essential element in an integrated program of national security designed to protect the United States against possible aggression, to perpetuate the freedoms for which millions shed their blood, and to hasten the advent of universal disarmament and peace through the United Nations."

Very sincerely yours,

HARRY S. TRUMAN.

COMMITTEE MEETINGS DURING SENATE SESSIONS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations dealing with the Interior Department appropriation bill may be permitted to hold hearings while the Senate is in session today, and during the remainder of the week while the Senate is in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Surplus Property Subcommittee of the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments be authorized to hold a meeting while the Senate is in session today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Veterans' Affairs Subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare be authorized to hold a meeting at 2 o'clock today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. FERGUSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that tomorrow and Friday the subcommittee of the Committee on the Judiciary investigating the Attorney General's office in connection with the primary election of a Representative in Kansas City, Mo., may sit while the Senate is in session.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] to postpone until January 25, 1948, the further consideration of the pending treaty of peace with Italy.

Mr. WHERRY. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Pepper
Bricker	Holland	Reed

Ellender	McMahon	Watkins
Ferguson	Malone	Wherry
Flanders	Martin	White
George	Millikin	Wiley
Green	Moore	Williams
Gurney	Morse	Wilson
Hatch	Murray	Young

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] is absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON], the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. MAYBANK], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a delegate to the thirtieth session of the International Labor Conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

NOMINATION OF MEMBER OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, on May 27 the Senate Committee on Banking and Currency considered the nomination by the President of Mr. Edmond M. Hanrahan, of New York, to succeed himself as a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission. His term expires tomorrow. Due to the legislative situation in the Senate, the Executive Calendar has not been called for some days, and in view of the proximity of the date of expiration, and of the unanimous approval of the gentleman from New York to succeed himself as a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, I ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the Senate may confirm the nomination of Mr. Hanrahan to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, and that the President may be notified of such confirmation.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I should like to propound a parliamentary inquiry. If unanimous consent is granted for the purpose requested by the Senator from New Hampshire, does that open up the Executive Calendar for consideration of every nomination on the calendar?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, it is within the authority and jurisdiction of the Senate by unanimous consent to make any order it pleases in respect to restrictions. However, it is the Chair's understanding that that is a subject of controversy, and the Chair can give the Senator no assurances as to what the Senate's ultimate decision will be.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I merely rise to propound a parliamentary inquiry. Is not the Senate in executive session?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate is in executive session under a unanimous consent agreement for the limited purpose, according to the RECORD, of considering the four pending treaties.

Mr. GEORGE. And for no other purpose?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. And for no other purpose.

Mr. GEORGE. Then, Mr. President, I shall have to object, I will say to my distinguished friend from New Hampshire, because I do not think that is the way to do business. I am perfectly willing to enter into a gentleman's agreement that I will not bring up anything else on the Executive Calendar now or at any other time, but I shall have to object to the confirmation of the nomination if we are under a limited agreement.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard to the request.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before the objection is entered I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Georgia that I have no objection in any way whatsoever to bringing up for consideration the nomination in question.

Mr. GEORGE. I have none.

Mr. WHERRY. But in view of the colloquies in connection with parliamentary inquiries heretofore made, it is my understanding that the majority leader feels that the Senate is in executive session for the specific purpose of acting upon the Italian peace treaty. I do not want to become involved in any controversy respecting the matter. I should like the RECORD to show that I have no objection whatever to the request of the Senator from New Hampshire, except that I do not want to violate the specific agreement under which the majority leader feels the Senate is now operating.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I simply wish to add, before the matter is concluded, that my only thought in making the request—and there is nothing personal in the request whatever—was that, in view of the fact that the term of the incumbent, who was reappointed by the President as a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission, expires tomorrow, it is a matter of some urgency that the Senate act upon the nomination. I felt that it was advisable that the nomination be confirmed before Mr. Hanrahan's term expires. Only divine power knows how long the Senate will continue to consider the pending matter—it will be at least until tomorrow—and I made the request so that action might be taken before the expiration of the term. Of course, I understand and concede the right of any Senator to object to the request. I pay my tribute to the Senator from Georgia and take my seat.

Mr. GEORGE. I will say to the Senator from New Hampshire that I have no objection whatever to the confirmation of the nomination, but I think there could be no worse practice than for any party in power so to control the executive sessions as to limit consideration only to those things that a majority of the Senate wish to have them limited to at a particular time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the able Senator from Georgia is addressing that observation to the ruling of the Chair, the Chair would like to call the attention of the Senator to the fact that it is not the majority party which made the order, but that it was the unanimous consent of the entire Senate that made the order.

Mr. GEORGE. That is the reason why I am compelled to object, Mr. President. I am perfectly willing to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this particular nomination, if the Senator from New Hampshire should desire me to make such a motion.

Mr. TOBEY. I would appreciate the Senator doing so.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of this particular nomination.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. WHERRY. Does that displace the pending business?

Mr. GEORGE. No.

Mr. WHERRY. That is, the consideration of the peace treaty in executive session?

Mr. GEORGE. No; it does not displace it nor alter its status.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair would say that without unanimous consent along the line just indicated, in the Chair's opinion the proposed action would displace the unfinished business, and would not be in order under the existing unanimous-consent agreement.

Mr. GEORGE. Very well. Then I withdraw the motion.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, later in the day I shall speak in support of the Fulbright motion. At the request of the Senator from Arkansas I expect to call that motion up for a vote tomorrow, the Senator from Arkansas being absent on official business.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. On that point, if the debate on the Italian peace treaty comes to a conclusion prior to the hour of 2 o'clock tomorrow, will it be in order to vote on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas prior to that hour, or is it the understanding of the Senator from Mississippi that the motion will not be brought up until the peace treaty and any motions, amendments, or reservations thereto, shall be voted on at 2 o'clock tomorrow afternoon?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. In the opinion of the Chair, the unanimous-consent agreement requires that at 2 o'clock tomorrow, without further debate, the Senate shall proceed to vote upon any motion, amendment, or reservation that may be pending at that time with respect to the treaties. In the Chair's opinion that does not preclude the Senate voting on any motions, amendments, or reservations prior to 2 o'clock tomorrow, and in the Chair's opinion, whenever the debate is exhausted on the pending motion, the motion will be put to the Senate for a vote.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, I desire to align myself with the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] when he takes the position that the Hungarian coup by Russia should be referred to the United Nations organization. We have read in the public press in the past few days how a Communist coup inspired, directed, and imposed by the Russian Army has taken over the Hungarian Government and made that country another Russian satellite.

The Hungarian Government was a legal government, elected by the qualified voters of Hungary in a fairly conducted election. This government expressed the will of the Hungarian people. In the past few days, the Russians have forced the resignation of the Hungarian premier, the reorganization of the government along Communist lines, and the adoption of policies which are not created by the desires and the express will of the Hungarian people, acting through their duly constituted authorities. Mr. President, the Hungarian people are opposed to communism, and are opposed to the establishment in Hungary of a Communist police state. Communism is imposed on them against their will. In fact, the new Premier of Hungary was placed in office by the Russian military commander.

I have noted in the public press statements given anonymously by officials of the State Department to the effect that the United States will send a strong note of protest to the Soviet Government, and that this, with the suspension of credits, was the only action this country would take in the premises.

Mr. President, in an occurrence such as this, if our action is merely to send a note of protest, this is appeasement. In fact, this is the action which the Soviet Government hopes and expects that we will take. To merely send a note of protest is weak and futile. Let me repeat, it in itself is appeasement. It is plain that Russia, weak as she is as a result of the war, would not force her course of aggression, and would not attempt to impose her will upon other peoples, if she were not confident that her acts of aggression would be protested, appeased, and then condoned by the United States.

I submit that since 1945 that has largely been the foreign policy of this country—to protest, appease, and then to condone acts of aggression by a tyrant greater than Adolf Hitler. In the present Hungarian incident we are merely acting as Russia hopes and desires. This has been the history so far; and it appears that when the test comes, we have not changed our policies of weakness and vacillation.

Mr. President, we have a United Nations organization especially designed to handle situations such as these. It is the proper forum. Chapter I, article 1, paragraph 2, of the Charter of the United Nations provides:

> To develop friendly relations among nations based on respect of the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples and to take other appropriate measures to strengthen universal peace.

Article II, paragraph 4, of the same chapter provides:

> All members shall refrain in their international relations from the threat of the use of force against the territorial integrity or political independence of any state, or in any other manner inconsistent with the purposes of the United Nations.

Mr. President, we certainly have in the Hungarian instance a violation of the principles of equal rights and self-determination of peoples. Hungary is slated to be a Russian vassal, and she is deprived of her independence. The Charter of the United Nations provides, in chapter 6, article 34:

> The Security Council may investigate any dispute or any situation which might lead to international friction or give rise to a dispute in order to determine whether the continuance of the dispute or situation is likely to endanger the maintenance of international peace and security.

It is plain, Mr. President, that the United States, in conjunction with Great Britain, if the British desire, but without Britain if Britain will not act, should refer this matter to the Security Council of the United Nations for investigation and appropriate action. In addition, the Soviet Union has violated the Yalta agreement, which provides as follows:

> To foster the conditions in which the liberated peoples may exercise these rights, the three Governments will jointly assist the people in any European liberated state or former Axis satellite state in Europe where, in their judgment, conditions require (a) to establish conditions of internal peace; (b) to carry out emergency measures for the relief of distressed peoples; (c) to form interim governmental authorities broadly representative of all democratic elements in the population and pledged to the earliest possible establishment through free elections of governments responsive to the will of the people—

I emphasize that language—

> pledged to the earliest possible establishment through free elections of governments responsive to the will of the people—> and (d) to facilitate where necessary the holdings of such election.

I continue—

Free elections were held in Hungary in 1945, and a government responsive to the will of the people was set up as a result of these elections. Now Russia has deposed this government, which is merely aggression against the independence of Hungary. It is the same kind of aggression which Hitler practiced against Czechoslovakia and other countries. As a result of the Russian violation of the Yalta agreement, there is a dispute between Russia on one hand and the United States and Great Britain on the other hand. This is such a dispute as will endanger international peace and security. It is a dispute over which the U. N. has jurisdiction. I insert that, unless we are again in fact condoning Russian aggression, this question must be referred to the U. N. That is the proper forum.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. Is it the Senator's judgment that this question should be referred to the United Nations with the idea that the Italian peace treaty be held in abeyance until we see what the decision is to be?

Mr. EASTLAND. I am coming to that. I think the Italian peace treaty should be held in abeyance; but whether it is held in abeyance or not, I think the Hungarian question should be referred to the Security Council for investigation and appropriate action. I believe that unless that is done the United Nations is dead.

Mr. WHERRY. The reason I submitted the question was that I wanted to get the judgment of the Senator as to the ratification of the Italian peace treaty. In other words, what has happened in Hungary might happen in Italy, might it not?

Mr. EASTLAND. I think it will happen in Italy unless Italy is occupied by this country until the Italian economy is rehabilitated and the people of Italy placed on such an economic footing that they can resist communism. That is just what we are doing in Germany.

Mr. WHERRY. In view of that statement, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. What is the opinion of the Senator as to the amount of force needed to occupy Italy until the desired result is accomplished?

Mr. EASTLAND. A token force.

Mr. WHERRY. How many do we have there now? Does the Senator know?

Mr. EASTLAND. I have no idea.

Mr. WHERRY. I think it was stated yesterday on the floor that there are approximately 25,000 troops there.

Mr. EASTLAND. There is going to be no communistic aggression against the American flag so long as the flag flies on the Italian Peninsula.

Mr. WHERRY. Does the Senator feel that the presence of our troops there will help to stabilize the economy of Italy, even though a peace treaty be not signed?

Mr. EASTLAND. I do not think the fact of the troops being there would help the economy of Italy.

Mr. WHERRY. I mean, the political and social situation.

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes; it would stabilize the political and social situation. It has stabilized the political situation, and it will prevent a communistic dictatorship in Italy.

Mr. WHERRY. The point which I should like again to stress and ask the Senator's judgment about is this: The plea for immediate ratification is that it will permit Italy to start out with a government which will enable Italy to function, and that that is the quickest and surest way to stop the infiltration of communism.

Mr. EASTLAND. We can build up the Italian economy without that. In fact, the safe thing to do is to remain there while we build it up. We intend to build up the German economy before there is a peace treaty. We intend to build it up while our Army is still there.

Mr. WHERRY. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. EASTLAND. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. If we do not continue to build the Italian economy, whether or not we ratify this peace treaty, is it the Senator's opinion that unless we keep a token force in Italy we will jeopardize the effect of the money we have appropriated?

Mr. EASTLAND. I think so; and it will cause Communist control of the Mediterranean.

Mr. KEM. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. EASTLAND. I yield to the Senator from Missouri.

Mr. KEM. Does the Senator from Mississippi feel that we should suggest that the Hungarian question be referred to the United Nations when our proposed intervention in Greece and Turkey was not so referred?

Mr. EASTLAND. The Greek-Turkish program was not an invasion of Greek sovereignty or of Turkish sovereignty. They are still sovereign states. The Hungarian incident is destructive of the freedom of the Hungarian people. The Hungarian people must be protected. The Hungarian people must be given justice. The organized might of civilization must be brought to bear to preserve the peace and protect the liberty of the Hungarian people.

It matters not, Mr. President, that Hungary is taken over by the Soviet Union's forcing the selection of puppet officials in the Government. This is still aggression. It is aggression that endangers the peace, and the United States Government, Mr. President, should immediately turn this matter over to the U. N.

We have just passed through the greatest war in history. We watched Hitler's aggressions against small countries. We realized then that aggression such as this finally light the flames of war throughout the whole world. We realized then, Mr. President, that aggression should be stopped when it began. We realized then that these acts of aggression lead to world war. Time and time again when the United Nations organization was being created at San Francisco, and during the debate which preceded its ratification in the United States Senate, I heard the leaders of our Government state that aggression must be stopped when it began. I agree that this is essential. We are obligated to take our stand behind the U. N. in this matter. If the United Nations organization is to function to prevent aggression and preserve the peace, if it is worth anything, then it must act to save Hungary in this case. I know Russia has the veto, but if Russia should veto action by the Security Council, it would be up to that organization to take whatever steps it is deemed wise to protect its dignity and the purposes of its creation. The civilized world cannot permit any nation to use the veto or remain in the U. N. as a shield to prevent action to stop aggression and to prevent action to protect the integrity of legal governments and the liberty of free peoples. The civilized world cannot permit any nation bent upon aggression and conquest to use the U. N. to stop action by peace-loving peoples to prevent war and maintain the peace. The integrity of the organization is at stake. Peace-loving nations must have a showdown with Russia within the United Nations organization. If Russia desires to get out, well and good. Her departure would not weaken the organization. It would strengthen it, because the nations who desire peace could then act in concert to protect the peace, free from delaying tactics and free from disintegrating influences. Mr. President, without the Soviet Union the United Nations organization would be much stronger and more effective than it is today. Without the Soviet Union it would be a world military alliance of free peoples against all aggression. If the organization cannot take an effective stand and prevent aggression, then its claims to promote the peace are fraudulent.

If Russia is not proceeded against, if the U. N. does not take action to protect the sovereignty and independence of Hungary, then the organization is dead. It has been destroyed by the Soviet Union. I can see no purpose in appropriating more moneys for its maintenance. If it is futile and ineffective, if it does not possess the power to prevent aggression and to maintain peace, then it is a fraud and we should no longer hold it out as an organization to preserve the peace and thereby create false hopes among the peoples of the world.

The question is asked as to what else the United States can do. Mr. President, the Senate of the United States has now under debate for ratification a treaty of peace with Italy, by virtue of which Russia is given $100,000,000 reparations out of current Italian production. In addition, Tito is given some of the territory and much of the scant Italian natural resources. In fact, by virtue of this treaty Yugoslavia gets 90 percent of Italy's hard coal and 65 percent of all her coal, including lignite.

Mr. President, at this time, in the face of the Hungarian aggression, in the face of the Communist threat to world peace, it would certainly be a humiliating act for the Senate to ratify the Italian Treaty. Why should we fatten aggressors? Why should we make them strong and better able to wage war? Most people realize, Mr. President, that if Communist aggression continues then war between Russia and the United States is inevitable. There must be a show-down, and that show-down should be in the United Nations. In the present state of world affairs, I think the Senate of the United States would be derelict in its duty if it strengthened the resources of Communist governments or if it ratifies the Italian Treaty in advance of a general European settlement.

We have just made effective the Truman doctrine and advanced $300,000,000 to Greece to protect herself because of the acts of aggression against her by Tito. These aggressions are all part and parcel of a common pattern of conquest. Why should we give the resources of Italy to strengthen the hands of Tito? Why should we give the resources of Italy to strengthen the hands of world communism? In the light of the Hungarian aggression, in the light of Tito's act of aggression against Greece, we are certainly not protecting the welfare of the United States by ratifying the Italian Treaty in advance of a general European and Asiatic settlement for peace.

Mr. President, the United Nations must mean something or nothing. There is no middle ground. It can either stop aggression and be a great factor for peace, or it can fold against the impact of an aggressor nation and accomplish nothing. The value of the United Nations is determined entirely by the integrity, the sincerity, the will, and the determination for peace and order of the great nations who compose the Security Council. The time has come for the United States to take a decisive stand against Russian aggression. The method of action is outlined in the charter of the United Nations organization. We must initiate the action, even if it means the ejection of Russia from the organization. This is the road to peace. Any other course is Russian world control or war.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3203) relative to maximum rents on housing accommodations; to repeal certain provisions of Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. KUNKEL, Mr. TALLE, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, and Mr. PATMAN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The message also anounced that the Speaker had affixed his signature to the enrolled bill (S. 135) to legalize the admission into the United States of Frank Schindler, and it was signed by the President pro tempore.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, the following message was received 3 months ago from the Italian Constituent Assembly under date of March 2, 1947. It was presented to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee at the time. It does not appear to be in the printed committee record. It expressly asserts the opposition of the Constituent Assembly of Italy to the terms of the pending treaty. It was given to the press when originally received. I ask that the message be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the message was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

By a solemn deliberation, the Italian Constituent Assembly, elected by the vote of the Italian Nation restored to liberty and democracy by the heroism of the Allied peoples and by the sacrifices of her own sons, has entrusted to me the mandate to address an appeal to the representatives of the American people.

The Italian people who were compelled to war against their will, have given to the victory against fascism a contribution in men and belief the extent of which is openly and unanimously recognized. They claim today the right to be enabled—in the framework of a just peace—to repair their ruins, reconstruct their lives, and cooperate to world progress.

The Italian people ask that they may not be prevented by a treaty—some clauses of which are harsh beyond justice—to work out such rebirth which would be impossible if their dignity as a sovereign state and their national integrity were not respected.

They ask therefore that arbitrary territorial mutilations, humiliations to their army, aviation, and navy—which proved heroic in the struggle for the common victory—and unbearable economic and financial burdens, be avoided.

The ancient blood ties, the manifestations of sympathy always shown toward Italy and those given lately to the Italian Prime Minister make the Italian Constituent Assembly feel certain that the American people, champions of justice and freedom among nations, who entered the war for the triumph of these principles, will heed its appeal and stand at Italy's side so that she may, within the framework of the United Nations and by means of peaceful agreements among the countries concerned, succeed in obtaining the revision of the peace terms.

TERRACINI,
President of the Constituent Assembly.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, I wish to address myself briefly to the motion offered by the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] to postpone further consideration of the pending treaties until next January; and also, while opposing that motion, I wish to express my views in regard to the pending treaties, as well.

Mr. President, I would not deign to attempt to add anything to the very able speech delivered yesterday by the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee [Mr. VANDENBERG], and his analysis of the situation surrounding the consideration of these treaties. It is a hard matter to enter into a treaty between two nations, where controversies have arisen and may become chronic; but it is infinitely more difficult to negotiate and to formulate treaties among 21 nations or among all the nations of the world. I recall, as a young man, that at the end of the Russo-Japanese War the peace conference met in Portsmouth, N. H., upon the invitation of President Theodore Roosevelt. That was a conference between two nations, Russia and Japan. The negotiation of that treaty, with respect to which it was a common expression at the time that Japan won the war, while Russia won the peace, required many weeks, if not months. At the end of our war with Spain, weeks upon weeks were required to negotiate a treaty with the Spanish Government. But the problems which faced those conferences were infinitesimal by comparison with the problems which face all the nations at the end of this great war.

At the end of World War I, although there were no more nations, numerically, involved in the Peace Conference at Versailles than were involved in the Peace Conference at Paris and all the negotiations preliminary and incident thereto, nevertheless the negotiations at Versailles required the constant attendance of the representatives of the various governments involved, from December 1918 to the middle of the summer of 1919.

So, Mr. President, it is a difficult thing, with all the cross currents of opinion and desire and ambition, for 21 nations to get together and try to adjust the issues growing out of a great war in which all of them have been engaged on either one side or the other.

The three chief nations involved in the recent war to defend democracy against Hitler and all that he stood for—the United States, Great Britain, and Russia—agreed long before the war was terminated that none of them would enter into a separate treaty with any of the Axis nations. That obligation is as binding now as it was at the time when it was made. There has been no circumstance or change or condition which either literally or morally would justify our engaging in a separate negotiation with Italy, as has been suggested by some of those who oppose the ratification of the pending treaty, or with Rumania or with Bulgaria or with Hungary. So if we have any regard for our plighted word as a nation in the midst of war, we cannot now undertake to negotiate separate treaties with the nations involved against us in the great war out of which in a sense we have emerged, but which in many respects is still in existence.

So, Mr. President, in reply to those who urge that we reject this treaty, and then negotiate another one with Italy or with any of the other countries involved, I say that it would be a direct violation of our word, of our agreement, in the midst of war that neither we nor any of our allies would enter into a separate treaty with Germany or Italy or any other Axis power, Italy at that time being associated with Germany in the war against us.

Mr. President, the history of these negotiations convinces me that not only is this treaty the best one that could have been obtained under the circumstances, but that no other treaty could be obtained in the future, under the conditions which then would prevail, which would be so favorable as the one we are now considering. After the agreement was made by these great powers not to enter into separate treaties, and after we had invaded Italy, Italy surrendered, and became in a sense an associate of the Allied Powers against Germany. I am convinced, and have been all along, that the Italian people really never desired to engage in war against the Allied Nations. I have read an account of a visitor in Milan, in the very midst of the war, finding all over that great city signs written on the sides of buildings—"Vive la France."

So, when the time came for negotiations, when it became apparent that negotiations must be entered into in the near future, representatives of Russia, the United Kingdom, and the United States met in Potsdam. They agreed to set up a Council of Foreign Ministers which should enter into the preliminary negotiations respecting treaties with the satellite nations first, before negotiations for treaties with Germany and Japan, our chief enemies, were begun.

That agreement was made in July 1945, nearly two years ago, and pursuant to the agreement the Council of Foreign Ministers was created.

Following that, in September, the Council of Foreign Ministers met; they met again in December, and met from time to time thereafter, undertaking to work out the details of a preliminary treaty, to fashion in a way the groundwork of peace in all the nations outside Germany and Japan, and especially the outside nations in Europe. When I say "outside," I mean nations independent of Germany and Austria, the latter having been included as a part of Germany by the invasion of Hitler. The Council of Foreign Ministers and the governments which they represented believed that before a treaty could be made with Germany and with Austria the groundwork of adjustment and settlement in the rest of Europe should be undertaken, that the underbrush should be cleared out of forests before an attempt could be made to negotiate treaties with Germany and Austria.

The chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], the distinguished President pro tempore of the Senate, is more familiar with all that than I am, and it is unnecessary to reiterate it. But I want the Senate to keep in mind the series of steps which were taken in the beginning, and all through the negotiations, which resulted in the pending treaty being brought to our doors for action.

First the Council of Foreign Ministers was set up, and they met, in pursuance of their organization, to begin to negotiate the treaties. Up to that time the Council was made up of the Foreign Ministers of the United States, Great Britain, Russia, and France.

When the negotiations had proceeded to a certain stage our Secretary of State, former Senator Byrnes, and our delegation, consisting in part of the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], insisted that, inasmuch as all of Europe was involved in the settlement between the Allied nations and Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, Hungary, and Finland—although we were not at war with Finland, and were not a party to the treaty with Finland—that inasmuch as these nations were interested and involved in the peace settlement, all of them should be called together for a general peace conference, not a world peace conference, but a general peace conference involving the welfare of Europe.

There was opposition to that suggestion for a long time, but finally it was agreed to. As a consequence of that agreement the 21 nations which signed the pending treaty met in conference. They considered every step taken by the Council of Foreign Ministers. They weighed every provision in the tentative arrangements which had been made. They took into consideration all the interest expressed by every nation involved, and out of their deliberations they made 53 recommendations, in which they united, to the Council of Foreign Ministers, who were to meet again to work out finally the terms of the treaty.

Of the 53 recommendations made by the 21 nations in this general peace conference, 47 were adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers when they met later, and the other 5 recommendations, as I now recall, were considered and modified, so that it can be said that, on the whole, the recommendations of the 21 nations which met in Paris at the insistence of the delegation for the United States were accepted and adopted by the Council of Foreign Ministers, and are incorporated in the treaty which is now before us for consideration.

In the conference of 21 nations Italy was given every effort to make her claims known. Bulgaria was heard, Rumania was heard, Hungary was heard, Finland was heard, and out of that general peace conference came the treaty which we are now asked to postpone until next January, and which we are asked to reject, notwithstanding the fact that it was signed by all the nations involved, including the nations most affected by the terms of the four treaties to be voted on tomorrow.

Mr. President, it has been well said that no treaty ever satisfied every country that may have been a party to it, any more than the verdict of any jury that ever tried a case in court satisfied both sides. It is impossible to obtain unanimity among a number of nations with respect to the claims of any one nation. There had to be compromises, there had to be yieldings, there had to be adjustments. No nation had its own way among the 21. No nation could have its own way among the 21. We ourselves could not have our own way, Russia could not, Bulgaria could not, Italy could not, Great Britain could not, France could not. But it is my considered judgment, Mr. President, that if we reject these treaties, there will never be another opportunity for the same identical nations to meet together to write another peace treaty that will deal as fairly with the nations involved as the one which we are now considering; and it might well be that no such conference would again be held. It was upon our initiation and our demand, Mr. President, that the 21 nations met. All the 21 nations signed the treaty; and if, after having insisted upon the 21 nations meeting with ourselves, who made the demand, we reject the very treaty that came out of that conference, what attention would the other nations pay to us again if we invited them to hold another conference to write another treaty dealing with the same countries? If, Mr. President, after having initiated the demand, which was unanimously made by our delegation, and, after it had been agreed to, upon our initiation and our demand, we should reject this treaty and then undertake to call another conference for the same purpose, the nations of the world would laugh in our faces. They would have a right to laugh in our faces. They would have a right to say, "Of what use is it for the United States to invite another conference to write another treaty? You have rejected the one that we wrote in response to your invitation."

So, Mr. President, it seems to me incredible that the Senate should reject these treaties. I believe it is not only in the interest of the peace in Europe that they should be ratified, but it is in the interest of the peace of the world that they should be ratified—with all their inequities, whatever they may be, with whatever dissatisfaction there may be in regard to the terms of the treaties with respect to any of the countries involved.

The Senator from Michigan yesterday very forcefully referred to the fact that when the representatives of the Allied Nations met, there were demands made upon Italy by the various nations for reparations in the sum, I believe, of $20,000,000,000. The treaty carries reparations to all the nations, from Italy, of $360,000,000. If we should reject this treaty and the matter should go again before a conference, in view of the uncertainty, in view of our own vacillation, in view of the lack of dependence upon us to go through with our own contract, I should like to ask our friends who are requesting us on behalf of Italy to reject this treaty, What assurance would there be that the demand for reparations could again be shaved down to $360,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I have not made up my mind as yet as to how I am going to vote on the final question of the ratification or rejection of the treaty. I have not made up my mind as yet on the Fulbright motion to postpone action. The point that is bothering me is the talk that is heard about the likelihood of a separate treaty with Germany and Austria. If we are to make a separate treaty—and the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee yesterday did not rule out that possibility—if we are to make a separate treaty, then why should we not make a separate treaty with Italy? The advocates of the Italian treaty say very frankly that the terms do not entirely meet with their approval. Of course, that is understandable, but if we are to make separate treaties with anyone, why should we not make a separate treaty with Italy, and why should we not postpone action until we find out whether or not it is going to be necessary to make the separate treaties which have been proposed, and which the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee yesterday, as I say, did not rule on as a possibility?

Mr. BARKLEY. I might say to my friend from Colorado, that I do not think the time has arrived when anybody can say that it will ever be necessary to make separate treaties with Germany or Japan.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; but so long as there is such a possibility——

Mr. BARKLEY. Oh, well, I might say in that connection, one can always presuppose a possibility and imagine a situation that may never develop; but the foreign ministers are to meet again in September to try to write a treaty with Austria and with Germany, and they are to meet again in November, in order to do that. So that while there has been no final progress made in negotiating a treaty with Germany and with Austria, and we have not even started negotiations on a treaty with Japan, yet the fact that the foreign ministers are still meeting, that they cleared away a lot of underbrush in the conference in Moscow, although failing to reach a final agreement—the fact that they are meeting in September and again in November, and, no doubt, will meet again in an effort to bring about a treaty with Germany and Austria that would be agreeable to all the nations that will participate in drafting it, it seems to me premature, so far as I am personally concerned, to talk seriously about having to negotiate a separate treaty with Germany. Of course, it is possible—and I think the chairman of the committee had it in mind—that if the time should come when a reasonable and a just treaty, based upon the principles for which we stand, could not ever be negotiated with Russia, we might be forced, not as a nation by ourselves but in association with other Allied nations, to undertake the negotiation of a treaty with Germany, and maybe with Japan; but that time has not yet been reached, and certainly it will not be facilitated in any way by postponing the consideration of the Italian treaty, in my humble judgment.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. No; but the point I am trying to make is that should that situation arise, and we should make a separate treaty with Germany and with Austria, then I contend we ought to make the same kind of treaty with Italy at that very same moment.

Mr. BARKLEY. Even if we were ever forced to the point where we had to make a separate treaty with each one of these countries, assuming that we could not ever get together on all of them, it would not necessarily follow that it would be the same treaty with each country. They must be dealt with according to the conditions.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I understand; but I am trying to arrive at a solution of my own problem.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. And I am trying to have the Senator from Kentucky help me.

Mr. BARKLEY. I hope I may.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. But, as I feel now, I should like to vote for the Italian treaty, if I were convinced we were not going to have a separate treaty with Germany and Austria.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HOLLAND in the chair). Does the Senator from Kentucky yield to the senior Senator from Michigan?

Mr. BARKLEY. I shall yield in a moment. I certainly am not convinced, by anything that has been said by anybody, that we cannot ultimately arrive at a general agreement with Russia and all the other nations involved, with respect to Germany and Austria; and I am not willing yet to forego that possibility. I am not willing to say that by postponing consideration of the Italian treaty, or by rejecting it, we make it any easier, but, on the contrary, I think we make it more difficult to arrive at a general agreement with respect to Germany and Austria. That is my own feeling about it. I may not be able to convince the Senator from Colorado on that matter, and I appreciate the sincerity of his inquiry in regard to it.

I now yield to the Senator from Michigan.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to answer the able Senator from Colorado with respect to the very great difference between the situations which would be involved in Germany and Austria, on the one hand, and in Italy and other satellite countries, on the other; and I understand that is the basis of his question.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. That is correct.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The question is, Why, if you do it in one instance, could you not do it in the other?

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Yes. Why could we not follow a consistent policy, and why would we not be in an advantageous position, so far as Italy is concerned? I realize, as I know the Senator does, that whenever we commence to make separate peace treaties we are lining up folks in our sphere of influence. That is what it amounts to.

Mr. VANDENBERG. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit me——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I should like to show the Senator very specifically why there is a profound difference, which could not possibly be reconciled. In the first place, the Senator from Kentucky is totally correct, in that the discussion of separate treaties with Austria and Germany is still an entirely remote contingency, which is contemplated only as the last and unavoidable resort, and, as the Senator from Kentucky indicated, is not in present contemplation. But if a separate peace were made in the German and Austrian situation in respect to any plans that have even been remotely discussed, I call the attention of the Senator from Colorado to the fact that it would involve the American zone, the French zone, and the British zone, in all probability, in Germany as an entity by itself; areas in which we assume that like-minded people would be in control of the entire situation, and there would be no fundamental clash.

Now I call the Senator's attention to what a totally different situation is involved if the Allied Nations try to make separate peace treaties with Italy. There would be undefined boundaries that must be liquidated; there would be the undefined status of Trieste which must be liquidated. How can we write a separate treaty with Italy and say, "The boundary is here," if Russia then says, "No, the boundary is here"? How can we write a separate treaty of peace with Italy and say, "Trieste shall be thus and so," if Russia says, "No, Trieste must be thus and so"? If we are going to write a separate treaty of peace in respect to those areas where the fundamental status of things has not been established and can only be established in one of two ways, either by multilateral agreement or by force, then it is necessary to choose between the two. But, I submit to the Senator, that is an utterly different contemplation from the one involved in the consolidation of the American, the British and the French zones in Germany and Austria.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. If the Senator from Kentucky will permit——

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I should like to know how that differs from the Austrian and German situations? Are the boundaries all prescribed?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Are all these questions determined?

Mr. VANDENBERG. These zones are all very definitely bounded by mutual consent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Oh, the zones.

Mr. VANDENBERG. There is no mutual consent, of course, to a separation of Germany for the purpose of a divided future, but the point I am making to the Senator is that at that point these basic physical facts are not in controversy, and it is purely a metaphysical question regarding what we do within these fixed limitations, whereas when we come to Italy, when we come to Yugoslavia, we enter a totally unliquidated situation which can only be settled on a fundamental question, for instance, like a boundary line, in one of two ways, either by multilateral agreement, or by sending armies in and fighting it out.

Mr. BARKLEY. In other words, the agreement must be made among all the nations where the boundaries are involved.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. And those countries have all agreed to the boundaries.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes.

Mr. BARKLEY. Or we would have to enter into a separate treaty with Italy in which we would say, "You shall have Trieste, or you shall have these other strips, just between the two of us," and if Russia or Yugoslavia does not agree to that, and they are not parties to the treaty, then they would either have to yield to an outside treaty as to which they were not parties, or there would be fighting on the border to determine who should be in control.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; certainly.

Mr. BARKLEY. But here we have a treaty adjusting the boundaries between Italy and Yugoslavia, and between Italy and France in which there is involved a little strip of territory on the border of France and Italy which has been a bone of contention for a long time, and restoring the Dodecanese Islands to Greece. These adjustments have been agreed upon; and while the settlement with respect to Trieste does not satisfy everybody, it was the only one that could have been made in order to get a treaty at all. We would not agree that Trieste should go to Yugoslavia, Russia would not agree that it should go to Italy, and therefore finally the French delegation, I believe, made the proposal that it be internationalized, and that it be governed as a free city under the jurisdiction of the United Nations.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I may suggest to the Senator that while the French nominally offered the resolution respecting Trieste, the solution respecting Trieste originated in the American delegation.

Mr. BARKLEY. I appreciate that fact. The Senator from Texas, of course, knows what happened in the secret councils there, but the motion was made——

Mr. CONNALLY. By France.

Mr. BARKLEY. By France, and in a sense France received credit for it so far as publicity was concerned, and no one wants to take it away from her.

Mr. CONNALLY. Not at all.

Mr. BARKLEY. No one wants to take away from her the credit for moving that Trieste be internationalized. Certainly the fate of Trieste could not be determined by Italy and the United States alone, or by Russia and Italy alone. It could not be determined without consulting Yugoslavia. The only way Yugoslavia can have a voice is to sign a treaty, which they have done, and that is now before us. So I do not see how we can enter into a separate treaty with Italy, even if we could do it morally, without violating our obligations to the other nations. I do not see how we could enter into a separate treaty with Italy which would in any way involve territory claimed by Yugoslavia and Greece.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not see how it differs in that respect from the problem of a separate peace with Austria. The point I am trying to make is that if we are going to indulge in separate peace treaties with other nations we ought to reserve our peace treaty with Italy until such time as those treaties are determined. Of course, if the Senator can give assurances that what we have spoken of is merely a rumor, that it does not go to the realm of a possibility, that is a different matter entirely.

Mr. BARKLEY. Of course, frankness compels me to say that I cannot give any assurance along that line.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I do not ask the Senator to do so.

Mr. BARKLEY. The talk of a separate peace has arisen because of widespread impatience with Russia and her method of negotiation, because she has obstructed here and there, objected here and there, and has exercised the veto here and there. Growing out of that impatience a great many people are saying, and have said, "Very well, if Russia does not want to enter in and agree to a reasonable treaty we will all get together and negotiate one without her." I do not know whether that will ever occur. Personally I hope and I believe that it will be possible ultimately to enter into a treaty which all nations will be able to sign. The problem now between Austria and Russia and all the Allied nations is no more difficult than appeared at the beginning of the negotiations with respect to the treaty we now have before the Senate. I ask the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Texas if that is an accurate statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BARKLEY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think it is a totally accurate statement.

I should like to make one more comment to the Senator from Colorado, because I know he is honestly seeking light on the question he submitted. I think we should not confuse ourselves by using the phrase "separate peace" in connection with the present discussion regarding Austria and Germany. I think what is being considered as an alternative program at the moment, so far as Austria and Germany are concerned, should not be described as a separate peace at all.

It should be described as the successful culmination of our plan to unify the French and the British and the American zones as one reciprocal unit of economic life, as required by the Potsdam Agreement. That is the unification which is discussed at the moment as a separate action, rather than what the Senator might broadly have in mind when he uses the phrase "separate peace," and as I indicated before, when the Senator was good enough to yield to me, I think the phrase "separate peace" in respect to Germany and Austria is very intangible, and is in no sense involved in any considerations which are now being given any attention whatever. I think it is the separate unification which undoubtedly the Senator has in mind, and, of course, he would recognize a total difference between that and a separate peace with Italy.

Mr. BARKLEY. I think that the separate unification in Germany has already progressed to the extent that the British and American zones have in a measure, if not totally, been unified for economic purposes. I do not think that as yet the French zone has quite come into that unification.

Mr. VANDENBERG. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. So the sort of unification, the sort of action which the Senator from Michigan has discussed and described, and which is in contemplation, has already progressed to a certain extent between Great Britain and the United States, and we hope between Great Britain, the United States, and France. We naturally hope that Russia will also enter the sphere of that four-cornered unification, which was the agreement at Potsdam, as I recall it.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Although the Russians have not yet done so, it is not beyond hope that they will.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator is entirely correct. The invitation is always open.

Mr. BARKLEY. I wish to call attention to the testimony of former Secretary Byrnes and the present Secretary of State, General Marshall, with respect to the effect of a postponement of these treaties. Before doing so, I desire to refer to the reasons for ratification stated by the committee in its report. They seem to me to be very cogent and entitled to earnest consideration. The reasons given by the committee for the ratification of these treaties are as follows:

1. The treaties appear to be the best that could be secured under the circumstances.

That is, under the circumstances which existed in connection with these negotiations. I do not believe that any of us can have any doubt about that, because if we entertain any doubt about it, in a sense we impugn the efforts of our own delegation, upon whose insistence, as I have already said, and as the Senator from Michigan so eloquently said yesterday, a treaty more favorable to Italy was consummated than could have been possible without the insistence of the delegation from the United States. So I think the treaty is as favorable as could have been obtained under circumstances which are now in the past.

2. There seems to be little reason to believe that better terms could be secured with respect to any of the treaties if attempts were made to reopen negotiations now or at any later date.

That applies to the conditions which may prevail in the future. If the Italian treaty is the best that could have been obtained under the circumstances which existed in 1946, how can any of us indulge the hope that under future conditions a renegotiation would result in a treaty any more favorable than that which we have before us today?

3. The uncertainty that would come from our refusal to ratify would only add to the many difficulties and the unsettled conditions already existing in Europe.

Can anyone doubt that? How could our refusal to ratify these treaties, our repudiation of the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, and the American delegation, possibly contribute to any settlement of the affairs of Europe, or the negotiation of better treaties?

4. If the treaties are suspended or rejected, it would seriously endanger the prospects for completing a satisfactory treaty with Austria and Germany.

Secretary Marshall stated, in effect, that if we were to reject these treaties now, after this long and laborious effort to write them, after they have been signed by all the nations involved, it would well-nigh be futile to have another meeting of the Big Four in September or November to try to write a treaty for Austria and Germany. That is not an exaggerated statement. That statement is supported by the testimony of former Secretary Byrnes, as a result of his experiences in the long negotiations which took place beginning in September 1945 and terminating in December 1946, resulting in these treaties being submitted to us on the 10th of February.

When the Conference meets again I can very well imagine the scorn with which Mr. Molotov will point to the American delegation if the treaties are not ratified. I can well imagine the scorn with which he will say, "What use is it to write a treaty which is signed by all the nations involved, and what hope is there that the Senate of the United States will approve it?" What hope would there be that the Senate would approve such a treaty if, in spite of the recommendation of the President and the Secretary of State, in spite of our nonpartisan, able, patriotic, and unselfish delegation which helped to write these treaties, we should reject them? I concede, as the Senator from Michigan did yesterday, that the Senate has a perfect right to reject them. Every Senator has a perfect right to vote against ratification.

Reading further from the reasons stated in the report of the committee:

5. Since the United States took the leadership in framing the treaties other nations would have reason to question our integrity and to criticize our unwillingness to go through with our commitments if we failed to ratify.

Can anyone doubt the truthfulness of that statement?

6. Bilateral negotiations between the United States and the ex-satellite states would fail to bring about the results that either the United States or these other nations desire.

In view of the history of these negotiations, there can be no question whatever about that.

7. The many advantages that would come from putting an end to the state of war that exists, such as the removal of occupation troops, the termination of the armistice regimes in the ex-satellite states, the resumption of normal peacetime relations, and the later admission of these states into the United Nations, should far outweigh any advantages that might result from our failure to ratify.

These nations are not eligible to membership in the United Nations until the treaties have been ratified. Our armies are in their territory. Russian and British Armies are in their territory. Ninety days after these treaties go into effect those armies are to be withdrawn. That includes the Russian Army in Bulgaria, except to the extent necessary to keep up the line of communications between her army in Poland and her army in Russia. Can anyone doubt that the admission of these nations into the United Nations, where they would be accepted as honorable members to take their share of the responsibility for world peace, would be a very composing, a very settling, and a very advantageous situation in Europe? These nations are in the very heart of Europe. They touch the border of the Mediterranean Sea. Can anyone doubt that if these nations, upon ratification of these treaties and with withdrawal of alien soldiers from other countries, were to enter the United Nations organization, such action would have a salutary effect upon the peace of Europe?

The last reason given by the committee is as follows:

Approval of the treaties would constitute an important step forward in the development of the total peace settlement which is so necessary if a regime of law, order, and stability is to prevail in the world.

During the month of April I happened to be in Egypt, Turkey, Greece, and Italy. One of the questions which confronted me everywhere was, Will the United States ratify these treaties? If not, what will be the result of their refusal?

Even nations which are not parties to the treaties, which are not directly affected by their terms, but are directly and indirectly affected by the conditions of peace which exist in the Mediterranean and throughout southern Europe, are interested and concerned about our action with respect to these treaties. I would not assume that in a brief visit to Italy I could obtain a very comprehensive picture of the feeling of the Italian people, but from what observations I was able to make and the inquiries I was able to make, I discovered very definitely that although the Italian people would have preferred a more favorable treaty, they prefer this treaty to chaos and no treaty at all.

We talk about communism. There are now two and a quarter million Communists in Italy. Notwithstanding that fact, the new Italian Government has organized a cabinet without a Communist in it.

But suppose we reject this treaty; suppose that, as a result, chaos and disorder ensue in Italy. That is the very atmosphere in which communism moves in; it takes advantage of any disorder, any want, any despair that may exist among the people. I understand that in Greece there is a total of only approximately 15 percent of Communists among the Greek people. But suppose we give evidence of our lack of responsibility by a rejection of the treaties. In spite of our assistance to Greece, if we reject these treaties, and uncertainty, chaos, and fear shall prevail in the Mediterranean Basin, how much stronger would the Communists become in Greece if they moved in as the result of our unwillingness to accept a responsible treaty negotiated and signed by the Government of the United States?

While we are talking about the communistic situation and its threat, we might as well be frank. We all know that our conception of communism is that it is based on hunger, want, distrust, the despair of the people that their economic situation may not be maintained by the government in power.

Two or three weeks ago Premier Ramadier of France called for a vote of confidence. He received a vote of more than 2 to 1; whereupon he reorganized his cabinet without any Communists, notwithstanding the fact that he had had 5 of them prior to the vote of confidence. In my judgment, Mr. Ramadier is stronger today than he was before he took that action.

Mr. de Gasperi has reorganized the Italian Cabinet without a Communist. How long would that Government stand if we failed to ratify the treaty and chaos should come to Italy? If they are compelled indefinitely to bear the burden of maintaining foreign troops upon their soil, and if the Communists by any chance should gain control of the Italian Government, how long are we assured that the French would be free from the menace and the danger? The situation in Europe might be multiplied by the number of European nations, and the same condition would prevail.

The things that Europe needs to stabilize her economy and her democracy are peace and an understanding of what they can rely upon in the future. What Europe needs beyond all other things are order and confidence, not despair, lack of confidence, and chaos. The rejection of these treaties will bring despair; it will bring uncertainty; it will multiply chaos; it will multiply the dangers that beset Europe and the entire world from the menace of which we hear so much, and which I in no degree discount, because I think it is a menace.

So, Mr. President, it seems to me that we cannot repudiate these treaties without repudiating the Government of the United States. We cannot repudiate these treaties without repudiating the State Department, the Secretary of State now in office, and his able and distinguished predecessor, former Senator Byrnes. We cannot repudiate these treaties without repudiating our own delegation at the peace conference, including the able Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the able Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY]. I rejoice at the outstanding service rendered by both those Senators in a spirit of nonpartisanship, in a spirit of cooperation, and the service rendered by their associates, including Mr. John Foster Dulles, who was an adviser there and later at Moscow.

I myself appreciate greatly the fact that the President sent these two colleagues of ours to the conference in order that they might be in a position to give the Senate the value of their experience, their observation, and their intimate knowledge of what went on in the writing of these treaties. To reject these treaties would be a repudiation not only of our President, our State Department, and our delegation, including our own Senators, but it would be a repudiation of our own allies who joined with us in undertaking to make these treaties. Such a repudiation, Mr. President, would create an impression that I do not want the American Government to give to the nations of the world.

Therefore, I shall vote with great satisfaction, I will say, for these treaties. I shall vote for them because I think they are in the interest of peace and economic stability, in the interest of the fundamental democracy for which our Nation has always stood. I shall vote for them because I believe that, as was testified to by the Senator from Michigan, including the statement of a distinguished Italian journalist, the Italian people want this treaty and the Italian Government wants it; and I think they are better able to speak for the people of Italy than anyone here or anywhere else in the United States, without regard to national origin.

Mr. President, feeling that way about it, I am opposed, of course, to the motion to postpone action. To postpone action on these treaties would give evidence of our vacillation, of our own lack of conviction, of our own lack of determination. It would indicate that we would be willing to suspend these treaties until January, while the world moved in chaos, uncertainty, distrust, and doubt. Are we willing to do that? If we postpone action on these treaties until January, in my judgment there will be no progress made in September, November, or December in the writing of a German treaty or an Austrian treaty.

So I am opposed to the motion. I hope it will be defeated. I hope that when we vote tomorrow at 2 o'clock all these treaties, regardless of any circumstances extraneous or internal, will be ratified by such an overwhelming majority of more than two-thirds that we can give hope to the world that we will ratify a treaty made under circumstances as favorable as can possibly be hoped for, and that we stand ready to honor our obligations and our commitments to our allies and to all the world in the treaty-making which lies before us, in the hope that ultimately all the nations of the earth may become members of the United Nations and that it may be possible to use that organization as the instrument of settlement and adjustment all over the world, so that the fear of another war may be dissipated and proved groundless.

EXTENSION OF CIVIL-SERVICE-RETIREMENT PRIVILEGES

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, as I listened the other day to the remarks of the junior Senator from Delaware [Mr. WILLIAMS] on the pending civil-service retirement bill, Senate bill 637, I heard a number of statements made at that time which should be answered in the name of accuracy, and particularly because of the fact that the Senator from Delaware appeared to be attacking the motives of the Committee on Civil Service, of which I have the privilege of being a member.

I want to be numbered among those who believe that old age is deserving of a better reward than the fiery furnace of Nazi internment camps in order to save food and the expense of feeding such persons. Nor do I believe in returning to the good old days before this Nation had a social-security system which would enable us to remove from the active rolls of employment those persons who might still be semi-independent economically through a return upon the investment from their wages while still in active service. The Eskimo has been described as having a direct approach in ridding himself of aged relatives by casting them out into the bleak northland to shift for themselves or to die. We, with our higher civilization, have found more decent methods of dealing with such problems.

In 1920 the Congress of the United States had come to realize that there were many indigent persons on the Government's civilian employment rolls, some of whom were well past the age of 90, who were far more expensive to maintain in the so-called active status than if they were given, in common decency, some form of annuity.

So the Congress passed the original Civil Service Retirement Act. It was necessary at that time to recognize the services of persons who would be eligible under that act, whose service had been performed prior to enactment of the Retirement Act. Thus, full credit for service was given to those who then automatically become eligible. They were retired as a straight business proposition, and perhaps in some measure as a humane and economic step.

In 1920, no statistics were available to show the prospective cost of a retirement system. Until sufficient time had elapsed to enable the experts to give fair estimates of such cost, an arbitrary rate of 2.5 percent was arrived at by the Congress as the rate for the premium to be deducted from the salaries of all persons covered by the act.

At the time when Congress passed the act, many persons believed the act would cost the Government at least as much as it would cost the employees, and that the cost to the Government would be immediate in order to get the system established. Thus, the Government, at least impliedly, assumed the responsibility for the difference between the 2.5 percent and the total actual cost of the system.

Mr. President, I am giving these basic statements for the information of those who have become Members of the Senate in recent years and who have not had an opportunity to learn the purposes and the origin of the Civil Service Retirement Act.

It was not until 1926 that Congress reduced the basis of liability of the Government to the fund from approximately ⅜ to ⅛ of the cost, by increasing the amount of contributions or premiums deducted from salaries from 2.5 percent to 3.5 percent. There, again, there was an implied, assumed responsibility on the part of the Government for the difference between the 3.5 percent and the actual cost.

As early as 1929, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor in Bulletin No. 477, entitled "Public Service Retirement System," made the following statement:

> Whether the Government will follow this tendency to increase the share of the employees and eventually to relieve itself of all liability by placing the fund on a self-supporting basis or whether it will contribute something as its share to the benefit it receives under the act is for the future action of Congress to decide.

The Congress did not quibble over whether all the beneficiaries or even a large portion of them or even a fraction were Democratic or Republican. In the eyes of the Congress they were human beings, fit for better fate than to be sent to the soap factory to render what little fat may have remained in their bodies.

In 1920, those who were automatically eligible for retirement received what actually constituted a pension, since it was not contributory and the Government charged the overhead to good administration and actual cost of operations. Since that time, the system has been known rightfully as the retirement system. It is contributory both on the part of the employee and the Government; and while we still have actuaries periodically making reports on the condition of the retirement fund and what is actuarily sound and what is not, it is evident that even from the inception of the act itself, in 1920, there was no intention to have an actuarial system.

As the years passed and as the Government became more in arrears in contributing its part to the fund, the deductions from employees' salaries have become such that to date all benefits have not equaled the amount contributed to the fund by the employees themselves.

It has been on a trial-and-error basis that the deduction rate has been adjusted from the original 1920 act, as one benefit or another has been added and as the cost of meeting such benefits has been apparent. Thus it was that there was an increase in payroll deductions from the original 2.5 percent to 3.5 percent, in 1926. At the expiration of the next 16 years, in 1942, Congress increased the deduction rate on the part of the employees to the present 5 percent.

The subject of widows' and dependents' benefits for Government employees is nothing new. Years before the enactment of the social-security system and the railroad retirement system, there was discussion of the need for making provision for dependents under the civil-service retirement system. It was recognized by students of retirement matters, who summed up their statement in the same Bulletin 477 I have mentioned previously, that "on the whole, the tendency among the newer systems is to include more benefits than are found in the early systems and especially to make provisions for dependents. The return of contributions, commonly with interest, and sometimes with compound interest, is frequent among the newer systems."

Since that time, in 1929 the Congress has placed a restriction upon the return of contributions in the form of refunds by stipulating that only employees who have served less than 5 years may receive such refunds. So we see that the system is both compulsory and restrictive. With rare exceptions, noted in Executive orders, all persons not holding temporary jobs are automatically under the retirement system. Although these Government employees pay 5 percent, and although it is now proposed that they shall pay 6 percent, yet they receive fewer benefits than do persons who are under the social-security system, and who pay only 1 percent.

It is worthy of comment at this point, Mr. President, that whenever the Congress hears a discussion of the Foreign Service retirement system, which has many features not now granted to persons under the civil-service retirement system, we find no resistance to effecting reforms. The benefits in the Foreign Service can be listed as:

First. Widows' benefits with respect to an employee dying in service.

Second. Retirement of an annuitant at age 50, after 20 years of service.

Third. A more generous retirement formula.

Fourth. A more liberal retirement for disability.

In the case of the Foreign Service retirement system, though officers and employees pay only 5 percent, I have not heard the Senator from Delaware complain about that. I can only assume he finds New Dealers only in other branches which are under the Civil Service Retirement Act.

The Senate has passed without a dissenting vote S. 715, to liberalize retirement for special agents in the Federal Bureau of Investigation. The House committee has followed suit, and has reported the bill unanimously. Certain increased costs are involved. Yet I did not hear the junior Senator from Delaware complain about that bill, which provides no increase in employee contribution.

The Congress has approved these provisions without quibbling. The Congress has been generous with military pensions and has not quibbled. The Congress has set up the machinery for features under the Railroad Retirement System and under the Social Security System which are not now being enjoyed by the Federal employee himself. Yet, when we bring up the general subject of civil-service retirement, and attempt to do something to liberalize the sections of the Retirement Act, we are promptly confronted by the opposition of some who apparently are poorly informed as to the origin, the purpose, the development, and the general over-all growth of the civil-service retirement system.

Mr. President, I now start my references to the statements made by the junior Senator from Delaware, and proceed to discuss what he had to say:

First. The Senator says the civil-service retirement fund "is not and was never intended to be classified as a welfare fund." Such vague language is not easily understood. But I assume the Senator is saying it is necessary to assume that old-age and survivorship provisions have no relation to welfare—apparently the welfare of the individual or the welfare of the Government's business.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Am I correct in understanding the Senator from South Carolina to say that he interprets the civil-service retirement fund as a welfare fund?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is a welfare fund, and also is a fund into which the employees have paid in order that they may have some income to take care of them after they become old.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the eyes of the Senator, in which field does it act?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it acts in both fields.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, the Senator thinks it is a welfare fund?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Certainly it is a welfare fund, in that it promotes the welfare of the general public, and keeps them from having to contribute to the support of some aged persons when they become too old to work.

Mr. WILLIAMS. My interpretation of a welfare fund is that it is something given to assist a person in his old age, but when we speak of a civil-service retirement fund, or any other retirement fund, whether it is in the Government or in private industry, we refer to a fund which the employees themselves have built up. It is theirs, the fund is built up by their contributions, and when they retire, in my opinion they are receiving only those benefits which they themselves have built up and paid for. There is a distinct difference between a welfare fund and a retirement fund, in my opinion.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it is both an insurance fund and a welfare fund, and I shall explain that.

First. The Senator has said that "the primary purpose of this retirement fund when established by Congress was to act as an insurance fund." He still makes that statement, here in the Senate.

Mr. President, I wonder if any Senator would even try to state the difference between an "insurance fund" and a "welfare fund," since we have been told that the retirement fund was never intended to be called "welfare fund," and at the same time are told that Congress was establishing an "insurance fund." Such confused thinking contributes nothing toward clarification of the purposes of the Civil Service Retirement System.

Second. The Senator says the Civil Service Retirement Fund has been built up over the "past several years until today it has an evaluation in excess of $2,000,000,000." The Senator's figures are inaccurate by at least one-half billion dollars. The fund actually has $2,500,000,000 in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from South Carolina tell me which is the greater, $2,500,000,000 or $2,000,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Two billion five hundred million dollars is the greater, of course, but the fund has been built up because money has not been taken out of it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think my statement was that it was in excess of $2,000,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator's statement was "in excess of $2,000,000,000." That is all right, so far as the statement is concerned, but it is shown that there is in the fund at the present time approximately $2,500,000,000.

Third. The Senator states that the civil-service fund "belongs to the Federal employees and should not be considered as the property of the Federal Government, and as Members of the Congress we have no moral right to pass legislation appropriating any of the accumulated moneys of this trust fund to any other purpose than that for which it was originally established." I am forced to assume the Senator is saying that if we pass Senate bill 637 we would be guilty of misappropriation, that at least we would be exercising some immoral right.

Mr. President, the representatives of employees in the United States Government are fully on record as giving wholehearted support to the idea of establishing widows' and dependents' benefits, even now, at long last. I submit that the Members of Congress are not immoral in trying to add to the benefit of Government employees, while at the same time those employees are paying for such increased benefits. I find nothing immoral or unmoral in any of this.

Fourth. The Senator talks of legislation and Presidential directives which blanketed Government employees into the classified service, and he refers to them as "The New Deal employees who have previously never made any contributions toward the building up of this fund." The same can be said of those in the early 1920's who had paid nothing toward the building up of the fund, even before the days of the New Deal, in the days when one's political faith was not impugned as something abhorrent in the nostrils of good citizens.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator from South Carolina dispute the statement I made in reference to that matter?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I dispute the Senator when he says New Deal employees were blanketed in. The civil-service employees are supposed to be employed on their civil-service records.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What classification was given the million employees who were blanketed in?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Government employees, Democrats and Republicans.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There are some Republicans among them, too.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. And perhaps some of other party affiliations.

As a matter of fact, none of the so-called New Dealers got anything free. Each was required to pay into the retirement fund an amount equal to the deduction which would have prevailed during the time he was not under the retirement system, if he desired to have such service counted as total Government service for purposes of computing retirement benefits. The junior Senator from Delaware was not in Washington at that time, as was true as to myself and some others, but the facts are the same, even though he was not here to know what the actual transaction really was.

Fifth. The Senator is attacking actions of a majority of the Congress which were taken prior to his tenure in the Senate. He questions the right of Congress to blanket in these additional employees without, at the same time, appropriating to the general retirement fund a sum of money sufficient to take care of the obligations being imposed upon the fund. It is difficult for me to reconcile such views as the Senator has set forth when we realize that in industry many employers established retirement systems, yet required no contributions of employees at all, after they have come under the system, though previously they might not have been under it but actually were employed.

The Senator appears not to realize the Government is already $360,000,000 in arrears in its contributions issued to the fund, if we assume the fair arrangement is that the Government should contribute in proportion to the employee. Still, employees do not grumble. Nor are they fearful that the good faith of the United States is not as solid today as it was in 1920 when the fund was established. A good part of what we do is based on faith; even in the commercial world credit goes far toward instilling confidence. Our main concern is whether the money will be available at the time the obligation is to be met, not whether there shall be large reserves of idle capital stock piled against some imaginary date or emergency.

Sixth. Again the Senator states that in 1942 when the last major provision of the Retirement Act was enacted that the report of the House committee on hearings held in connection with the impending bill was "not an actuarial report but it was accepted by the Members of the Congress and that proof that this—$14,000,000 as the estimated cost—figure was misleading is contained in the Budget report of the General Accounting Office which shows that the Government contributions to the fund in 1941 were $91,559,110, whereas 3 years later, in 1944, this figure had increased to $175,993,037, or an additional cost to the Government of over $80,000,000 more than the 1941 figure."

The comment on this statement, Mr. President, is simply that it is a fact that as of June 30, 1940, 18 months prior to enactment of the January 24, 1942, legislation, there were only 675,000 persons under the Retirement Act. By 1944, a scant 2 years after the act was approved, there were 3,000,000 under the act.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Can the Senator from South Carolina tell me how the other two and a half million of the 3,000,000 came under the act?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. What does the Senator mean by that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator said that in 1940 some 600,000-odd employees were under the retirement act. I think that was the figure quoted, was it not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That was in 1940.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And then there was an increase of around 2,000,000 during the next 2 years?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How did those employees get into the civil service?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They got into the civil service, some under civil-service examinations; some were blanketed in under an Executive order. All of that was done because we were in a war, and it was necessary to employ people immediately in order to carry on the war and win the war as soon as possible. If that is wrong, I will take the blame, although I was not here at that time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not say it was wrong. I merely wanted to bring out the point that between one and a half million and two million employees were blanketed into the civil-service system during that period.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Some of them were blanketed into the civil service, not all of them. Many were already on the civil-service list and were called into service. As the Senator knows, a group appeared at our last meeting that were blanketed in, but they were on the waiting list.

At the same time the total coverage was extended there was an increase of 1½ percent, from 3.5 percent to 5 percent, of contributions on the part of employees. I am not certain why the Senator from Delaware stresses his statement that there was no actuarial report. The fact is that this is not an actuarial system and never has been, yet the retirement fund continues to meet all obligations, even in the face of the increase from 675,000 to 3,000,000 persons so covered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that the Civil Service Commission carry on their pay roll a board of actuaries?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Certainly. They carry not merely one actuary but perhaps several.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And it would have been possible to have had a report from that board of actuaries as to the cost?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So far as the actuarial cost is concerned, the Senator will have that. I want to inform him that that is being made up now, and that it will contain a report on the pending bill, showing that it will not cost the Government a single cent more than it is costing at the present time. That information is now being prepared in connection with the pending bill, since the Senator wants it, although this is not an actuarial system.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If they are now preparing an actuarial report—and since it has been stated in the committee that it would take 4 months for a board of actuaries to make a reasonable estimate on the cost of the bill, and the chairman thought we did not have time to wait for it—I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina how he knows in advance that the board of actuaries are going to submit to the Senate a report showing that there will be no additional cost under the pending bill when the board of actuaries have not yet made the report?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator from Delaware and the other members of the Committee on Civil Service have heard the actuaries talk on this particular bill before the committee, and every time they have made a statement it has been to the effect that there would be practically no additional cost to the Government if the pending bill should be passed. Is that not true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir; it is not true. It has been contradicted. We have had reports to that effect, and we have had reports that there will be an additional cost, as has been pointed out in the report.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Where is it pointed out in the report? We have the report.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is not in the report as submitted to the Senate. That was the charge I made on the floor of the Senate last Thursday. The report found on the desks of Senators did not contain a complete report of all hearings that were held before the Civil Service Committee on the pending bill. There were many reports submitted and many statements made before the committee, that are not included in the report on the desks of Senators.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But the Senator will acknowledge that the actuaries testified there would be no additional cost—at least some of them so advised us?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Some of them did; yes.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They certainly so advised us.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator will certainly admit that there have been actuaries before the committee who said the costs would be increased?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They have said there would be practically no increased cost; that if there should be any increased cost, it would not be over two or three million dollars annually; which is nothing; very, very little.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I do not understand is how the Senator from South Carolina knows what the report will be, before the actuaries submit it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am going by what they told us in the committee at various times in discussing the matter. In other words, the committee has a number of actuaries who are preparing a report for presentation to the Senate which will show that there will be no cost to the Government under the bill. I have no actuaries, I am sorry to say, because the Republicans have them all. The Republicans appointed all the various experts working for the committee, and we Democrats appointed none. But those who reported to the committee, the Republicans' own men, will tell the committee that there will be no cost involved.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to read a part of the letter from the actuary of the Senate Civil Service Committee, dated April 30. It is in the RECORD. It is signed by Mr. J. D. Phenix, the actuary and statistician for the Senate Civil Service Committee. The letter is dated April 30, five days later than the report of the Civil Service Committee, which was sent out to the Members of the Senate, which stated that there would be no extra cost involved. He says in his letter:

> No reliable estimates of costs can be made until the following data are available.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Read on further.

Mr. WILLIAMS. First, he would have to know the "number of covered employees who will normally be employed by the Government after the effects of the war have disappeared"——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Just a minute. The more employees we get rid of the less the bill will cost.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct. But it is necessary to know the number who are to be gotten rid of.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is necessary to know how many are going to be fired; that is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Again he would have to know with respect to—

> (a) Age, sex, salary, length of service.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They have the age of every employee, the sex, the salary, and length of service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; but he said it would take 4 months to prepare the report, and yet apparently the Senator knows that when the report is made it will disclose that the bill will cost nothing.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Go ahead.

Mr. WILLIAMS. He would have to know:

> (b) In the case of married males, age of wife, and age of each child under 18.

We have not received that information yet.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We have been given the estimate made by an employee of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; and one of those estimates that was filed showed a cost of $20,000,000 for 1950. Is that not true? I had printed in the RECORD the chart from which the Senator is reading. I filed a chart showing that in 1950 the cost would be between twenty million and twenty-two million dollars, I forget the exact figure. The Senator has the figure. That estimate was prepared by the actuary and statistician of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Irons.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. How much more are the employees to pay into the fund on their salaries? It is 1 percent, is it not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. For the year in question they would pay in $44,000,000, but that was deducted from the cost, and there would be $20,000,000 or $22,000,000 more required for the year 1950. That estimate was filed with the committee and was not included in the report made by the committee. I ask the Senator from South Carolina, why was not that estimate included in the report of the committee when it reported the bill to the Senate? Why was that particular item left out?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator will have to ask someone else. I was not one of those who had control of the committee. The Republicans were in control.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, the Republicans did not have control, because six Democrats and six Republicans voted to report the bill. I voted against it.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The vote on the bill was what?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say the members of the committee were divided six Republicans to six Democrats.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. What was the vote on reporting the bill?

Mr. WILLIAMS. All the Republicans but one plus the Democrats voted to report the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Who was that one?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I was the one.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is what I thought.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator said the Republicans voted to report the bill from the committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Members of both parties voted to report the bill. But so far as the report itself is concerned, it was prepared by the staff which the Republicans had appointed. Is that not true? Did not the staff appointed by the Republicans prepare the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senator from South Carolina vote for the employment of the staff?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I voted to report the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I mean when the staff was chosen in the beginning, did the Senator vote for the employment of that staff?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. My vote for the employment of an accountant or other experts did not count, and the Senator knows that. The Senator from Delaware might just as well acknowledge that fact. There is no use getting off into party politics.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am not getting off into party politics.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Republicans appointed all the members of the committee staff. Since the Senator has mentioned that situation, why does not the committee report the postmasters whose nominations are now in the committee? The committee will not report any of them. Tell me, a Democrat, why not?

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as I know, Mr. President, if the Senator will yield——

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator knows that to be a fact.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Carolina yield further to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let me go a step further. Does the Senator know of a single complaint filed in the committee against any of the nominees for postmasters?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield so I may answer that question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. So far as I know the question of reporting the postmaster nominations has never been brought up in the Civil Service Committee at any of its meetings. I do not think the Senator from South Carolina has ever made a motion to the effect that the committee report the nominations of postmasters. Has the Senator done so?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. What good would it do? The Senator knows exactly the condition in the committee. Why quibble over that situation? We could never get a sufficient number of votes in the committee to have the committee report the nominations. We cannot even have a record made of the executive sessions. Let us face the fact.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We are really getting away from the point at issue.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I want to pin the Senator down. If I should move that the nominees for postmasterships in my State be reported, would the Senator vote with me?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know who the nominees in the Senator's State are.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Nothing has been filed against them. No complaint has been made respecting any of them.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can say that there are only two nominations for postmasterships in the State of Delaware before the committee, pending, and I recommend the confirmation of both of them. They are both Democrats. I say that—if it will be of any comfort to the Senator from South Carolina. But I think it is unfair for the Senator from South Caroline to say that the Civil Service Committee will not report the nominations for postmasters until he has at least made an effort in the committee to have them reported. Then if his motion is rejected he has a perfect right to come on the floor of the Senate and make complaint. But so far he has made no effort at all to bring up the name of any postmaster nominated from South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That question has not been brought up. We have not voted on it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. But certainly every member of the committee knows how every other member stands, and every member knows that if a Democratic member were to move that any of the nominations be reported, it would result in nothing but taking up the time of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to suggest that perhaps the Senator from South Carolina is going on the same assumption when he speaks about postmasters that he is when he says that he has a board of actuaries working on the cost of the Senate bill and that he knows it is not going to cost the Government anything, and that a report to that effect will be prepared. I think he is jumping at a conclusion before he has read the text of what he is working on.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am glad to hear the remark made by the Senator from Delaware. I believe I have obtained all the information possible to obtain from him. From what he has stated I am led to believe that probably if we move to have the nominations reported he will vote with us. I understand from what he said that he wants the nominations from his State reported.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. LUCAS. I am extremely happy to hear what the distinguished Senator from Delaware has said about the two postmasters in his State. That gives me considerable hope that he will support the position of the Democratic members of the Civil Service Committee. I would suggest to the Senator that at the next meeting of the committee, if the motion has not been made to report the nominations, that such a motion be made, and that a roll-call vote be taken upon the motion. I was under the impression when I made a statement a few days ago, based on a statement made by the Senator from South Carolina, that a vote had been taken in the committee respecting postmasters. But apparently, from what I have now heard, that has not been done.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. If the Senator from Illinois will recall, when that discussion was had, I said I thought the subject had been taken up, but I was not present at the meeting. A vote was not had. The subject was only discussed in committee. A roll-call vote was not had in committee. I did not ask that the nomination of any individual postmaster be reported.

Mr. LUCAS. Can the Senator give me any assurance that at the next meeting of the Civil Service Committee such a motion will be made?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So far as I am concerned, I am ready to make a motion that the nominations of my "boys" in South Carolina be reported.

Mr. LUCAS. Only the Senator's "boys"?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I shall take care of them. I am in favor of all the nominations against which there are no complaints pending being reported. Even those who have complaints against them should have a hearing.

Mr. LUCAS. I again want to compliment the Senator from Delaware on the position he takes with respect to the postmasters from his State. He says there are two nominations of Democrats for postmasters in his State, and he favors confirmation of both. I assume that is because he has made some investigation and knows that they are good men. He probably knows them personally, and they are perhaps No. 1 on the list, and have proper civil-service status. The Senator's stand is very encouraging to us. I think he has taken a very statesmanlike position in the statement he has made, and I want to congratulate him upon it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for one comment?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield to the Senator from Delaware.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When I stated they were both Democrats, I might have been inaccurate. I assumed that they were both Democrats. I cannot say that I have checked their political standing. I do know that I have checked the character of both men, and so far as I am concerned they are approved. It was merely an assumption on my part when I stated that they were Democrats. I might have been mistaken, but I do not think I was.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I can almost swear that those in South Carolina are Democrats. I do not believe that we could find any Republicans down there to fill the offices. I will say to the Senator from Delaware that when the nominations from his State are taken up, I will vote for them if they meet with his approval. That is the only question. I am not going to enter into his State and try to interfere with the affairs of that State. I leave other people's business alone so far as other States are concerned; and I want South Carolina let alone. That has been my politics all the time. When an attempt is made to interfere with South Carolina, I will complain loudly.

Once more the Senator makes the statement that "the obligations of the Retirement Act were further increased during the past 2 years when the salaries of the Government employees were raised an average of approximately 30 percent over the period." But, the Senator continued by saying there would be an increase in annuities of those employees who were retired after having served during the 5-year war period, approximately 30 percent or in the same proportion as their salaries were increased. Salaries were not increased 30 percent during the war years. In July 1945, there was one increase and in July 1946, there was another increase. There was provision for payment for overtime which overtime was abolished shortly after July 1, 1945. Such overtime payments were not subject to the retirement deductions because they were not considered basic pay. The 1945 and 1946 basic salary increases will not be fully reflected in the form of increased annuities until later than the middle of 1951, or 5 years after July 1, 1946. This is because of the fact that one may select the highest five consecutive years as the basis for computation of his annuity, and such 5 years will not have elapsed until June 30, 1951. The Senator seems to believe that establishment of the highest five consecutive years as a basis for computation is something brand new and that it was inserted in some sort of surreptitious manner in the Retirement Act revisions of 1942. Such, of course, is not the case. The highest-5-year rule was instituted in the act of 1930, 12 years previous to passage of the act of January 24, 1942.

When the Senator from Delaware makes the statement that there was an increase in the Government contributions from $175,000,000 in 1944 to $246,000,000 in 1946, the answer plainly is that the coverage was, as I have stated, from 675,000 in 1940 to 3,000,000 in 1944. Numbers of persons covered by the act necessarily determine the number of dollars spent to put such coverage into effect. The cost will be greater if we have a larger number of employees and they remain in service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps I was mistaken in the assumption I made as to the increased cost, but if I was wrong, I should like to ask the Senator from South Carolina this question: I notice from the annual budget proposed for 1948 that the Civil Service Commission has estimated the requirements at $20,000,000 more than was appropriated in 1946. Yet a law was enacted last year providing that on July 1 of this year the number of Federal employees should be reduced to one and a half million, or half the figure which the Senator has just quoted, during a period in which there were appropriations of $246,000,000. The Senator has made a very good explanation as to why the appropriations should increase as the number of employees increased. I can understand that. However, I wish he would explain to me, if that was the reason for the increase, if it was due solely to the fact that the number of employees increased, why the Budget Bureau has not made a proposal to reduce the contributions now that we are going back to a level of one and a half million. Why should we be expected to appropriate more than $123,000,000 for next year if we are going back to the figure of one and a half million employees, half the previous figure?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Naturally the cost will be greater if there are more employees, if they remain in service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. When the Budget Bureau made its estimate that an additional $20,000,000 would be required during the next fiscal year over what was appropriated for this year, was it on the assumption that the number of Federal employees would be greater than it was last year?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator knows that a great many persons will leave the employment of the Federal Government. It will require millions of dollars to pay them, but that will mean a saving to the Civil Service fund in the long run, because if they have not been in the service 5 years, we shall have to pay them their money in cash, with 4 percent interest. Such payments in the aggregate will amount to a huge sum, but they will be off the pay rolls, and in the future we shall not have to pay them when they become 55, 60, or whatever the retirement age is.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is it not a fact that when the Senator, as a member of the majority which reported the bill favorably to the Senate, stated that the system could operate with no additional contributions above the appropriations which had been contributed to the fund, he was taking into consideration at that time that the number of Federal employees would be reduced to one and a half million?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have never believed that the number could be reduced to that extent. In the discussions in the committee, as the Senator will recall, practically every member of the committee reached the same conclusion. Is not that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In all the estimates that were made in the committee we used the assumption that we would be operating at a level of one and a half million employees. Is not that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have never believed that; and I do not believe that many Senators who really think the matter through are of that opinion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not care what the Senator believes. The estimates were all made on that assumption, were they not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They were made on the assumption that there would be a considerable decrease in the number of Federal employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. On the assumption that the number would be decreased to one and a half million.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. At the present time it would cost the fund a great deal of money, but eventually it would cost less as they leave the service.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe Mr. Irons made the statement in the committee—and we all agreed to it—that the estimate was based on the assumption of one and a half million employees, or one-half the figure of 3,000,000. The chart which I submitted for the record shows that the estimate of cost was based on that assumption.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am not able to dispute that statement.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The point I wish to bring out is this: What the committee proposes to do is to maintain appropriations approximately at the $250,000,000 level for the next 30 years, whereas by the Senator's own argument we had a reasonable right to expect that the appropriations would drop to $100,000,000 or $150,000,000 as the number of employees was reduced. When it is said that the program would cost nothing additional, it is assumed that there could be shouldered on the taxpayers for the next 30 years appropriations of approximately $250,000,000 a year, or $100,000,000 more than we had a right to expect, which would total $3,000,000,000 for the next 30 years to pay for this bill. Does the Senator dispute that statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am not here to dispute the Senator's statements. The Senator may give his facts and I shall give mine.

The Senator said that the increased number of persons "does not take into consideration any of the retirement funds which have been set up under some Government agencies in recent years, and which are being operated entirely independent of the present civil-service retirement system."

Just what the connection is between that statement and Senate bill 637 is entirely vague. The Tennessee Valley Authority does operate a separate retirement system. At the same time the TVA operates a separate employment system, independent of the Classification Act, the classified service, and the civil-service rules and regulations in general, as well as the civil-service retirement system. This, again, was done by act of Congress, and it goes back many years before the Senator from Delaware arrived in Washington.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will admit to the Senator from South Carolina that many of the statements which I have made on the floor have been regarding matters and things that happened before I came here. Perhaps that is the reason I came here—to investigate some of those actions.

I will admit, further, that when I made reference to the retirement fund of the Tennessee Valley Authority perhaps it did not have anything to do with the civil-service retirement fund. I was merely pointing out the fact that we do have several retirement funds operating in the Government. I think the Senator will admit that when I referred to those other funds, even though it was a little off course, it was more germane to the subject than is the discussion we have just had regarding appointments of postmasters in South Carolina.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think the Senator is correct when he says he was off the course.

Next, the Senator from Delaware speaks the fact that on the Senate Calendar there is a bill—S. 637—"which has been reported favorably by a substantial majority of the committee."

The fact is that it was not only a substantial majority but actually by a vote of 8 to 1, and that vote was taken only after extensive hearings and many hours of public and executive meetings.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the Senator will find that it was really a vote of 12 to 1.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They have a way of counting votes afterward. I am counting only the ones who were actually present at the time. That being so, I grant that if it was a vote of 12 to 1 it is so much the better. I will agree to the Senator's statement, but, if my memory serves me correctly, there were only nine present at the time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I am not mistaken, they voted 2 days later on that.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. They had one of the "sub rosa" votes and let them all vote. But I am speaking of the situation in the committee at the time.

Tenth. The Senator next says that the report on the bill sets forth that—

> The ultimate cost to the Government when the system reaches maturity, approximately 30 years hence, may be four or five million dollars per year. No immediate increase in appropriations is required.

That report was composed only after the committee had given a great deal of thought to the purposes of the bill and the costs involved. The statements in that report are concurred in by the Civil Service Commission in the form of a letter from the Acting President of the Commission, who says:

> It is our judgment that the liberalized benefits are balanced by modifications elsewhere in the bill, plus, of course, the increased contributions of 1 percent to be made by the Federal employees.

That is where the money is coming from—1 percent from the employees.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I want to thank the Senator from South Carolina for quoting from that report, because a few minutes ago he did not know anything about it; he said that it was a Republican report.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I did not say that. I said that the report was compiled by the staff of the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct; but the fact that the Senator is quoting from it indicates that he accepts it as having some authority.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I will never deny it; and I hope the Senator will not deny it when some other statements are sent in within a few days as to the cost of the bill. The Senator will find, I think, that the cost will be practically nothing.

Mr. President, the statement which I read a few moments ago was made by Mr. Arthur S. Flemming, then acting president of the Civil Service Commission, on May 9, 1947, after the bill had cleared the committee and had gone to the Senate Calendar. The Senator from Delaware will recall that there was a meeting held in his office with the Chief of the Retirement Division of the Civil Service Commission, Mr. Warren B. Irons, who made a statement to the effect that contributions from employees, in addition to the savings effected through economies in administration and otherwise, would approximate any additional cost under Senate bill 637.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I dispute that statement. Mr. Irons did not make such a statement as that in my office. In fact, I have several signed statements which the stenographer took down in the minutes. They are here, and I think if the Senator looks them over he will not find any such statement.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator said that previously, and the Senator said that he has heard no one testify that the 1-percent contribution by employees would cover the cost of those items contained in Senate bill 637. If the Senator will contact Mr. Irons, he will find that he made the statement which I have just made. I would remind the Senator that at a meeting presided over by the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], which was an executive meeting, the statement was made by Mr. Irons to that effect, and no one took issue with him. Whether the Senator attended that meeting I cannot say, because it was an executive meeting and no record was made of the transaction. The Senator appeared to be saying last Thursday that the committee was "spreading the idea all over the country that Government employees would gain benefits under the act," and at the same time "the situation is being misrepresented to either the Members of Congress and the taxpayers or to the employees themselves."

No one, so far as I know, is misrepresenting anything at the present time. I would not have taken any part in any such misrepresentation. I understand the purposes of Senate bill 637, and I believe that practically all my colleagues understand them. The innuendo that anyone inside or outside the committee is trying to misrepresent the purposes or effects of Senate bill 637 I think is not saying exactly what is true. Further, any such statements, implied or expressed, are unfounded.

Eleventh. The Senator makes capital of the statement that a chart which he inserted in the RECORD during the course of his remarks a few days ago had been filed with the committee itself during the hearings but was not printed in the record of the committee hearings. The fact is that the chart was submitted after the hearings had concluded, and only informal sessions were held after the hearings. While the table was not presented at a hearing, the purport of the table was discussed informally and the figures were revised downward. Even on the basis of the chart which the Senator included in his remarks, there is shown only an increased cost to the Government of $11,000,000 for a 32-year period beginning in 1948, the effective year of the proposed act, or at the rate of approximately one-half million dollars a year to institute these social benefits for Government employees.

Thus we find that the cost is very small, even if we take the cost figures to be found in the table which was discussed before the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from South Carolina has mentioned that the chart was not filed with the committee. I wish to call his attention to one fact which may refresh his memory: Mr. Irons brought this chart before the committee at one session of the committee, and the Senator from Vermont [Mr. FLANDERS], I believe it was, raised a question as to the figures for the three additional years of 1948, 1949, and 1950, as to which the statistics were not shown on that chart. At the next meeting the chart was brought back, and at that time the figures for all three of those years were included in the chart. It was filed with the committee, not in an executive session, but during a regular session, and it was not included in the printed hearings. Furthermore, the chart does not show that it would cost any such small amount as the Senator from South Carolina has just mentioned.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I remember, this point was brought up in the committee. We had various and sundry hearings on the bill, and at the time when the Senator from Delaware brought it up, as I remember, the committee was not having any particular hearings at that time. No witness was testifying, as I recall. Is not that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, at the time when I brought that into the hearings, Mr. Irons was the witness who was answering questions.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. At that time, as I recall, we were discussing the general phases and features of the bill, and this matter came up for discussion at that time. Of course my memory could be wrong and the memory of the Senator from Delaware could be correct. I am not quibbling over whether it was done at that time or at some other time, for that makes no difference.

The junior Senator from Delaware has taken the chairman of the Committee on Civil Service to task by claiming that elimination of the tontine or service charge on individual accounts in the retirement fund would cause a loss of $18,000,000 to the fund. It is apparent that the Senator has not read the entire statement of the Civil Service Commission on this point. Mr. Arthur S. Flemming, the Acting President of the Commission, says:

> This charge of $1 per month levied against each Federal employee has been an administrative problem ever since its inception. It is unfair in that the $1 per month is charged against the account of the low-salaried employee as well as the high-salaried employee. When full account is taken of the administrative handling charges, there is actually little net gain in income to the fund. The administration of the act by the agencies and the Commission will be greatly simplified by the elimination of the tontine.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me say that if he will read my statement, I think he will find that I did not make any charge that the dollar-a-month charge represents any additional cost. I merely said that I did not understand what it would do, and I said that perhaps the chairman of the committee or some other member of the committee could explain it. Perhaps the reason that I did not know at that time was because the quotation from the testimony of Mr. Flemming, which the Senator from South Carolina has just read, must have been made at some of the hearings which were not printed and available to Senators, and perhaps I was not present at the time.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think the Senator will find that statement in the testimony given by Mr. Flemming at the hearings. That is where I obtained it.

Incidentally, let me ask where the Senator from Delaware obtained the information regarding the $18,000,000 cost to the fund. I never have been able to ascertain just what the cost would be, because the administrative costs are so great.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I can explain where I got the figure of $18,000,000. If a million and a half employees are on the pay roll and if they pay a dollar a month, I think the total will amount to $18,000,000. Is not that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. In other words, the Senator from Delaware figures the total cost in terms of what would be contributed, without regard to the cost of operation or the cost of handling the funds or writing letters, and so forth.

Mr. President, there are a dozen or more retirement systems operated by the Federal Government. Yet only those administered by the Civil Service Commission carry the $1 a month tontine charge. Of the thousands of plans operated throughout the country in private industry, none, so far as I have been able to learn, make such charge against the credits of persons whose beneficiaries would derive payments under their systems.

The junior Senator from Delaware makes the claim that—

> If this bill passes, it will mean that in order for Congress to reduce the Government pay roll by 1,000,000 employees and assuming that only half of these employees qualify with over 5 years of service, the total cost of this proposed bonus bill would exceed $2,000,000,000.

It is difficult to understand how the Senator arrives at the cost in respect to 1,000,000 employees with over 5 years of service, who, he says, "fought the battle of Washington." The Senator is making a long assumption in believing, first, that 1,000,000 employees will be separated, and, second, that the 1,000,000 would or could have more than 5 years of service. They could not have that much service, in all probability.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will further yield, let me ask him how many of them could have 5 years of service.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think the only person who could answer that question would be someone who has access to all the records relative to civil-service employees. I do not know, and I do not think the Senator from Delaware knows.

Mr. WILLIAMS. How would the Senator from South Carolina suggest that we go about ascertaining that? Would he suggest that we take a particular Government agency as an example and examine the individual records of its employees? Or how would the Senator from South Carolina suggest that we proceed in obtaining an estimate of that sort?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. It is almost impossible to predicate the figures for all governmental agencies on the figures in the case of only one governmental agency. We could not proceed in that way. The agencies came into existence at various times, and some of them required more help along the line.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to say that I took one particular agency and went down the line for that agency employee by employee, and obtained the figures for that agency in that way. I do not claim that it is a representative agency, but I would suggest that the Senator from South Carolina make a similar study in regard to another agency and examine the figures for it. If he does that, perhaps we shall be able to agree upon some figure. But I do not think the Senator from South Carolina should criticize my figures unless he has figures to the contrary.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, it is impossible to say that the figures for one governmental agency will be indicative of those for all agencies. Such figures would be nowhere near accurate—simply to take the figures for one agency and multiply them by the total number of agencies. I think the Civil Service Commission probably could come the nearest to telling what would have to be paid year by year for the retirement system, and I believe it could do much better than I could.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In the case of the particular agency with respect to which I made an examination, I should like to repeat my report regarding it. That particular agency had 494 employees. Two and one-half percent of those employees—or 11, to be exact—resigned. Four hundred and eight-three accepted their dismissal notice. In addition, 170 of them had service between 5 and 10 years, and as to them I took 7 years as an average. Seventy-one of them had service between 10 and 14 years, and as to them I took 12 years as an average. Twenty-four of them had service between 15 and 30 years, and as to them I took 20 years as an average.

Thus, the total cost of liquidating that agency, insofar as those employees are concerned, would be as follows: All 494 of them would receive $983,500, in addition to getting back all the money they paid into the fund.

The Senator from South Carolina says he will stand by the committee's report, which says the bill will cost nothing. He also has a report in the process of preparation, and it is understood that it will be ready in a few days, for it is being worked on diligently at the present time in an effort to ascertain the answer. But the answer will be that it will cost nothing.

I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina explain just one thing to me: Where is the $983,500 for this one small agency of 494 employees coming from if it is not coming out of the Civil Service Retirement fund? If Congress is not going to appropriate the money, where is the money to come from?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. How does the Senator know the figure he gave is the correct amount?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I figured it out.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator figured it out? I wish he would figure out just how much it will cost for the next 25 years. He certainly would be paid well for the information.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Perhaps the Senator believes the figures are wrong. I placed them in the RECORD and I told the name of the agency from which they came and so far the facts have not been disputed. I did not include in the RECORD the names of the employees, because I did not think it would be fair. I do not blame any of the employees for taking what is coming to them if we enact the law, and therefore I would not like to put their names into the RECORD. I will give the name of every man in the agency to the Senator from South Carolina, if he cares to look the list over, and I would appreciate it very much if he then would come to the floor of the Senate and tell me wherein I am wrong.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Mr. President, there is the further fact that many such persons, even if the Senator's figures were correct, would have to wait 35 or 40 years in order to receive full benefit.

Lastly, the amounts which would be expended would be distibuted over three quarters of a century. Further, it is a fair assumption that many of these persons would be dead before arriving at age 62.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator from South Carolina is perfectly correct when he says that many of these employees would be dead, and never receive the benefit. But this estimate is based on the averages as used by the Civil Service Commission itself. In other words, they figure that on the average 100 employees, or a thousand, whatever figure they use, at the age of 62, would have 13 years coming to them for retirement privileges. It is true that one man will receive 15 or 20 years' benefits, another none. But the figure I gave was the average used by the Civil Service Commission. These figures have been looked over by the Commission, and they themselves do not contradict them.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator from Delaware made the statement that the cost of Senate bill 637 would be $105,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I think the cost I arrived at was around $75,000,000 in 1980. I included in the RECORD a report that was put before the House committee, and their actuarial statement was that the cost would be $105,000,000. I put that in the RECORD.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. When he was discussing the matter last Thursday the Senator from Delaware made the statement that the cost of S. 637 would be $105,000,000 dollars. Unfortunately, he does not seem to have read the entire letter of the Civil Service Commission of May 21, signed by Mr. Harry B. Mitchell, President, wherein Mr. Mitchell calls attention to the fact that the Commission staff is presently engaged in examining the assumptions used by the Board of Actuaries in reaching its original conclusion on costs. The Commission says:

We are examining particularly the cost charged to benefits to widows and children which is reflected on page 8 as being 1.94 percent of payroll. This examination should be completed within a few days and the Commission will inform you (Chairman LANGER) if, as a result of that examination, there should be any reduction in this quoted cost.

Just what those reestimates of cost will be I cannot say now, but at the proper time they will be presented before the Senate for its consideration.

Mr. President, I have here a statement of just how the actuaries estimate costs, which reads as follows:

HOW THE ACTUARIES ESTIMATE COST

The estimate of cost made by the actuaries of the civil-service retirement fund is based upon the assumption that the Fund is operated on an actuarially solvent basis. This means that there is money enough in the fund at all times to discharge all existing obligations in the event that the retirement system is abolished. This reserve would pay retirement benefits to all employees as long as they live and there would be a sufficient amount in the fund to operate the fund and to liquidate it at the expiration date of the last claim. Obviously, such a huge reserve is not necessary in a Government fund. If anything should happen to the financial stability of the Government, there would be no retirement benefits.

And there would not be very much for us here in America to live for.

In estimating cost the Board of Actuaries estimate normal costs and deficiency costs. Normal costs have nothing to do with expenditures. The actuaries do not attempt to estimate expenditures. What they call normal cost is the amount of future benefits earned by all individuals under the fund in any one year. Deficiency cost represents all the benefits due to the employees for previous service rendered prior to the enactment of the act.

In no other Government operation does the Government attempt to build up such an enormous reserve. In no other Government operation does the Government attempt to set up reserves to pay benefits for 70 or 75 years in the future. This is exactly what is attempted with relation to the retirement fund.

Mr. President, if we will study the entire civil-service and the retirement system as it applies to all civil-service employees, we will see that the Government has not at any time kept in reserve a sufficient amount actually to meet all the contingencies set out in what I have just read. But the Government does undertake to help out with the payment of benefits under the retirement system.

To begin with, it was estimated that the Government would pay the whole cost. Later the employees' contribution was increased from 2½ percent to 3½ percent, then later to 5 percent.

Now, to take care of the additional costs, the bill calls for an increase of from 5 percent to 6 percent. That alone will take care of the benefits which are allowed under the bill, according to my estimate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator referred to his information. Where did the Senator get the information?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I got my information from talking to those who are supposed to know what they are talking about, the Civil Service Commission and the actuaries.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Did the Senator get his information from the Board of Actuaries who are now working on the bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. For the Senator's information, I do not know who the actuaries are he has working on the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator does know what their answers will be?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. All I know is what I learned in the committee, that they are working on it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And the report to the committee is supposed to be that the bill will cost nothing?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am also taking the advice of the one who says it will cost nothing. I do not know about that. I do not pretend to know. I am being guided solely by what I have been informed by the Civil Service Commission and the actuary of our committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. BALDWIN in the chair). Does the Senator from South Carolina yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The actuary of the committee, of whom the Senator is speaking, is the same actuary who told me, on April 30, that no reliable estimate of the cost could be made until he had obtained certain information.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Does the Senator say that the actuary did not make that statement to him?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am speaking about Mr. Phenix. Is the Senator referring to Mr. Phenix, the actuary of the Senate Civil Service Committee, who is helping prepare the report, according to which the retirement bill will cost nothing? Is that the man to whom the Senator refers?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. As I said, I do not know who is preparing the report at the present time, but he helped prepare the report that was sent out.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will yield further, I thought I heard him say he was talking with the actuary of the Senate Civil Service Committee.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true. Now, is the Senator speaking of the report that was made?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am speaking of the report that is yet to come.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not know who is going to make that. I do not know exactly who will make that report. It will, however, come through the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I see. The Senator simply knows the answer?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No, I am not saying that; I do not know the answer. But the information I have is to the effect that the report will show that the pending bill will not entail any additional cost to the Government.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to observe that, as a member of the Senate Civil Service Committee, so far as I know, there is no actuary of the committee working on it, unless somebody has someone working on the side, preparing a report.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We had men who are supposed to know the actuarial tables, who were working for us when we were considering the bill, during the past 5 months. Is not that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. That part is true. We were supposed to have men working on it, and those men made a report to the committee. Their report was that the bill would cost something. But that report was omitted, and it has been ignored. I am speaking of the report which is to come from an unknown board of actuaries—a report about which the answer is known, 2 weeks before the report will actually be issued.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is the Senator speaking of a time before the bill was finally amended? If the Senator will recall, the actuaries said before we revised the bill, that it would involve additional costs. The revision saved millions of dollars. After the revision, did the Senator hear any man, who could speak from the standpoint of an actuary, say that the pending bill would involve additional cost?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did hear somebody say so, after the bill was amended. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina is speaking of some amendment which I have forgotten.

Will he tell me what particular amendment was made to the bill, after the report was made, which lowered the cost $20,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There was no report after that, but I am speaking of a time toward the end, when we were working on it, when we made several amendments that were suggested, as the Senator knows.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is correct.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We made several amendments that, as the Senator knows, were suggested by the actuaries, that they said would result in a saving of millions of dollars.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Will the Senator from South Carolina tell me of some of those amendments which would save money and which were adopted after the report was made? I cannot remember any amendments which were going to save $20,000,000. Perhaps I am wrong. Will the Senator tell me of some such amendment which was adopted?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Several amendments were submitted to us. I do not recall all the amendments submitted, but we had amendments before us, and the bill was revised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, it seems to me this is another assumption. This is an unknown amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. No.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to know which amendment it was.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The bill was practically rewritten; is not that true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, we worked on this bill, I think, 4 months, did we not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We have been working about 4 months on this bill. That is correct.

Mr. WILLIAMS. We had, I would roughly guess, from 20 to 25 sessions. Would I be far wrong in making that statement?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think it was somewhere in that neighborhood. I was not present every day. I did not count the sessions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Only five of the committee meetings were reported. I am trying to recall the amendment. I should like the Senator from South Carolina to correct me if I am wrong. I cannot remember any amendment being adopted which would save $20,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is the Senator criticizing anybody?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; I am merely trying to have a correct understanding.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Whose fault was it that all the meetings were not reported?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not know. The majority made the report. Thus far I have not been able to find any member of the committee who knows anything about the report of the committee being written, and yet it is on the desks of Senators, and it only covers 5 days, when it was admitted by the Senator from South Carolina just now that the committee had from 20 to 25 sessions.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. We considered the report, as well as I remember, on three different days. Was not the Senator present on either one of those days? On one occasion we took up the matter of the report, and discussed it; the next day we sat and discussed it further, and we held it over. They were going to work on it a little further, and the report was to be made.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The only observation I made on the report in the committee when it was being prepared was that it was a majority report, and, since I voted against the report, it was none of my business what was in the report. It was the report of the majority which was to be filed.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So the Senator was present, then, when the report concerning the pending bill was considered? Did the Senator vote for the report?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No, sir. I did not vote for the report. I was not present when it was voted to report the bill.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator was absent, then?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Had I been there, I should not have opposed the report being filed, because that was the action of the majority. I made my report, and I tried to defend on the floor the figures I presented. I do not claim that I am infallible, and if some amendment was adopted during a session from which I was absent, I am willing to correct my statement so far as that is concerned. But I wish the Senator from South Carolina, who remembers so much of what happened after the figure of $20,000,000 was placed before the committee, in connection with the cost in 1950, would tell me what amendment was adopted, either in my presence, when I was asleep, or when I was absent, which would reduce the cost.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Was the Senator present when the committee voted to make the changes—that is, to make the reduction?

Was not the Senator told that, if employees were given more time in which to withdraw from the fund, it would involve millions of dollars of additional cost?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I was present when a great deal was said with respect to the bill. I still do not recall any amendment that would change the cost represented by the bill, to the extent that the Senator from South Carolina has mentioned. I should like to be corrected by having the Senator name the amendment. I wish he would name some amendment.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator remembers that we went all through the bill, and that certain things would effect a saving, and certain things would add to the cost, all the way through the bill. Does not the Senator remember that?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that is a little too general. I wish the Senator would tell me what the certain thing is that effected a saving in the figures stated by me. I stated what I thought it would cost. I wish the Senator would name for me just one amendment which would make such a reduction.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Would it not save money to force employees who had served not more than 5 years to receive their money in cash? Would not that represent a saving to the fund of millions of dollars? Such a provision was added. Is that not so?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina repeat the question?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Would it not save money to force a person who did not have more than 5 years employment in the service to take a money payment?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina answer a question, first? What does the employee who now has less than 5 years' service receive?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. He receives back the money he paid in, plus 4 percent.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator from South Carolina tell me what the employee will receive under the pending bill?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. He would receive the same amount, but there was discussion as to whether or not that would be carried forward, with the right given the employee to stay in the fund, and then, upon reaching the age of 62, come in under the amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then the Senator will admit that the status of the employee who has less than 5 years' service was not changed, will he not?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. There is no change, so far as the law is concerned.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then that would not account for any part of the $20,000,000 of which the Senator is speaking?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Let me explain to the Senator from Delaware that we were discussing in committee, not the items that would cost less than the present law, but less than the bill that was introduced. We were trying to cut back the bill that was introduced so that it would not cost the Government any more money.

Mr. WILLIAMS. An employee, as I understand, under the present civil-service system, who has less than 5 years of service, is eligible for a refund of all his money, plus interest. Under Senate bill 637, an employee who has less than 5 years' service receives exactly the same consideration, and it makes no difference whatever in the cost under the bill. If I am wrong about that, I wish the Senator would correct me.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true, under the present law, and it is true under the pending bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Therefore, Mr. President, when we made those changes, we made absolutely no change in the cost at all.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is true.

Mr. WILLIAMS. And we are still $20,000,000 out of line in our figures.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I do not see that we are out of line by $20,000,000. That is what I am told; I am stating only what the actuaries who studied the pending bill have said.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I may, I shall hand to the Senator the report of which I am speaking.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Two actuaries may appear before the committee when it is considering a retirement system; and one will tell the committee that probably the system will cost so much, and the other will say it will cost some other amount. Finally, if they get together and try to iron out the differences and resolve the matter they will come pretty close together. That is what has happened in this instance as I understand from our study of the bill.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to suggest at this time that we are $105,000,000 apart based on actuarial statements. The actuarial statement on an identical House bill gives the cost of the bill as $105,000,000. Is that correct?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The bill that was originally introduced in the House and the bill originally introduced in the Senate are entirely different from the bill reported by the Senate Civil Service Committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, that is what I am trying to ascertain, namely, the difference in the cost of the various bills. If I am wrong about the matter, I wish someone would tell me what the difference is. What is the difference between the bill reported by the Senate committee and the House bill, which would account for the discrepancy of $105,000,000?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think if the Senator will read the report he will find the information. The committee staff has made a report, and they know far more about that matter than I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I should like to observe that I have read the report. I have read all the reports. In fact, I have been reading quite a little on this matter, and I still say that I cannot see any difference between the Senate bill now before the Senate and the bill which was before the House, which would account for the difference in the cost between the two. If I am wrong in that respect I wish some member of the committee who knows more about the matter than I do would tell me wherein I am wrong. The report on the bill before the Senate says there will be no additional cost to the Government. Yet a report on the identical bill in the House says the cost will be $105,000,000. One hundred and five million dollars may not mean much money in Washington, but it does mean a great deal of money in the places where the money comes from. I should like to know what the difference is between the two bills.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Is the bill which was in the House identical with the Senate bill, as amended, and now before the Senate? I do not think they are the same. They could not be.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I thought I had a copy of the House bill, but I do not. I have had both bills in the office and studied them, and so far as I have the ability to grasp, there is no difference in them which would account for the difference in the cost as stated. Perhaps the Senator from South Carolina can tell me wherein there is a difference between them.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have not read the House bill. Therefore, I cannot tell the Senator what is in the House bill. The Senate bill is here before us, and the Senator can read it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That is the point I want to bring out. The Senator from South Carolina is discussing a House bill which he has never read. He is quoting from an actuarial statement which is coming to the floor of the Senate sometime within the next few weeks. It has never been published, and yet he knows the answer.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I beg to differ with the Senator. I have not read the House bill. I do not know what is in it. I do not know what it looks like. I do not know whether it is similar to the Senate bill. I was asking the Senator from Delaware whether the two bills are alike.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have already said that they are the same.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The Senator has read them both?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I have read them both, and I think I have a copy of them somewhere here.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I am speaking of the bill which was reported by the Senate committee, not the bill introduced in the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I have read both bills. I would not say they are exactly the same, word for word, but in my opinion there will be found to be very little difference, if any, in the cost of the bills as reported. They are framed along similar lines. If I am wrong in that statement, I wish the Senator from South Carolina would correct me. There may be the change of a comma somewhere, but the meaning and the provisions of the House bill are substantially the same as the bill before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have not read the House bill. The only bill I have read is the Senate bill. I do not know what is in the House bill. But I make the statement I am making on the basis of what was brought out before the committee. I have just now received the information that the House bill was not reported by the House committee. The Civil Service Committee reported the Senate bill. A bill was introduced in the House, but it has not been reported. Is that not true?

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator will wait a minute, I shall endeavor to obtain the information. I cannot answer at the moment. I was not quite prepared for this discussion today, and when it arose I did not think I should be obliged also to prepare the other side of the question presented by the Senator from South Carolina. The Senator from South Carolina is speaking of the House bill, a bill which he has never read.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I said all the time I did not know what the House bill was. I have not read it. I do not know what is in it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I believe the Senator said he did not know anything about the House bill, but that it was different from the Senate bill. Although he has not read the House bill he says the bills are different. I think he should secure a copy of the House bill.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. If it is in order, I move that both the Senate and the House bill be stricken out of the four treaties now pending before the Senate.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. The only thing that would then be before the Senate would be the Senate bill as reported by the committee.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from Maryland will withdraw his motion, I will say that I have the actuarial report in my hand dealing with the House bill. I wish to read the part of it which I placed in the RECORD on last Thursday.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Will the Senator suffer an interruption? I have the floor.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; the Senator has the floor.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I think there is a little confusion with respect to what has occurred in the two Houses. A bill was introduced in the House, but was not reported by the House committee. The bill that was introduced in the Senate was probably similar to the House bill. Hearings have been had in the Senate committee on the Senate bill. It was remodeled, revamped, as every member of the committee knows, and in that form was reported. That being true, the cost of the Senate bill would be different from the cost of the bill as it was originally introduced in the Senate, and I believe every member of the committee, except the Senator from Delaware, will agree that we have revamped the bill, and that the cost under the bill as it is now before us will be millions of dollars less than the cost of the original Senate bill. I believe that is a fair statement to make.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the Senator from South Carolina keeps on in that vein, perhaps it will be disclosed that a refund will be obtained under the bill as it is now before us. First a bill was introduced in the House, the cost of which to the Government would be $105,000,000. Then it got down to the point where the Senate Civil Service Committee said it would not cost the Government anything; now the Senator from South Carolina has got down to the further point where it will cost even less.

I should like to read a quotation that was contained in the actuarial report on the House bill that is now before the House. It is a part of the statement which shows the cost of $105,000,000 under the bill.

> The comparative costs given above indicate that the adoption of S. 637—

This is the Senate bill, not the House bill—

> The comparative costs given above indicate that the adoption of S. 637 (Calendar No. 144) will increase the cost of the civil service retirement and disability fund to the Government by the difference between 10.82 percent of pay roll and 8.68 percent, or 2.14 percent of pay roll, or $105,324,269 per annum on the basis of the pay roll as of June 30, 1946.

In this actuarial report there is not even a mention made of the House bill. The Senate bill, S. 637, is being discussed. The report does not discuss the Senate bill (S. 637) as we worked on it in the committee. It discusses the bill that was on the calendar, Calendar Na. 144. The bill after it was reported and placed on the calendar would still cost $105,000,000.

We have another actuarial report coming in, which, as we have been told, will show the cost as being zero. The question has been raised as to the bill before us dealing with the retirement fund. I believe if the Senator will think back he will find that at no time have I criticized this bill from the beginning, in that it would grant to permanent employees some benefits in connection with the retirement fund. I think they are deserving of some consideration, especially the older employees who are now off the pay roll, trying to live on a dollar which is devalued today, while they paid into the fund a good 100 percent dollar years ago to build up the fund. I think there is an adjustment due. But, on the other hand, in this bill, in order to make those corrections, in order to give the employees of the Government, survivorships, the one thing they want most, I cannot see any reason why we should declare a bonus to those who, as I once said, fought the battle of Washington.

The employees who came here knew that the jobs would not be permanent. I do not see why it is necessary, in order to give some of the permanent employees benefits to which they are entitled, to pass a bill which would grant benefits to someone who is about to be discharged. I should like to have the Senator from South Carolina or some other Senator explain the reason for the bill. In liquidating a certain agency it would cost $5,000 more, in some cases, to dismiss an employee than it would cost if he were to resign. Take the Solid Fuels Administration, a typical agency. It has 494 employees. I do not blame the employees for not resigning, if the bill stands a chance of being passed. In that event they could get nearly $1,000,000 more by not resigning. I should like to know why such a provision was placed in the bill which would give an employee dismissed from the service from $3,000 to $5,000 more than he would get if he were to resign, and more than another employee with the same length of service would get if he were to resign.

Take the case of the OPA, which we are closing in June. If one of its employees sees an opportunity to get a job today in private industry and resigns, and another employee who has had the same length of service remains until June 30 and is dismissed, he will get from $3,000 to $5,000 more than the man who resigned. I want to know why such a provision was placed in the bill, if it is not a bonus bill, if we are not trying to cover up a bonus for wartime employees.

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. This bill does not change the law so far as concerns Government employees who entered the service during the past 5 years. It does not change their status one iota. We continually hear that statement. I should like to have the Senator explain just how the bill would change their status.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Under the law as it now stands, a Government employee with 5 years of service, after he leaves the service, is not entitled to receive the deductions made from his salary during the time he was in the service. Such deductions are retained in the fund. He cannot withdraw them. When he reaches a certain age—62, 65, or whatever the retirement age is—he is entitled to an annuity based upon the contributions which he has made. I am not objecting to that. However, under the terms of this bill, if that employee is dismissed from the service he gets all his money back, and still gets an annuity. Where is the money coming from? It does not cost the Congress anything. Where is it coming from if we are not planning to rob the retirement fund?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. So far as that is concerned, 1 percent additional would be paid into the fund. The view of the committee was that an employee who is discharged ought to be in a different status from an employee who resigns from the Government service, after working for a short while, and takes a job in private industry. He should not be permitted to reach back to the Government and say, "I want you to pay my retirement also."

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator believe that a 1 percent additional contribution would pay the additional cost?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. That is the statement which I have made all along. That is what the committee thought. No one knows exactly, but it is believed that a 1-percent additional contribution would approximately cover the additional cost.

Mr. LUCAS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a parliamentary inquiry?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. I have concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to make an additional observation. Apparently we are now getting a different understanding of the bill. Evidently it is the plan of the sponsors of the bill to levy an additional tax of 1 percent on the pay roll of all employees for generations to come in order to pension employees who are now leaving the service. In the case of the agency which I mentioned, that would represent a sum of $983,000 additional. On the average, $1,991.05 would be paid to every employee on the pay roll, out of the 1 percent. I wonder how other Government employees, such as postal clerks, who are permanent employees, will feel when they are asked to pay an additional 1 percent for the next 30 or 40 years. How are they going to feel when we use that additional 1 percent to pay those who are now leaving the service? Is that the plan?

Mr. JOHNSTON of South Carolina. Every time we have blanketed employees under civil-service retirement, certain employees have obtained benefits without paying for them. However, the additional benefits provided by the bill will be available to those who are already retired on annuities. If that is wrong, that is what the committee reported.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if we continue to debate the bill, perhaps we shall reach complete agreement. We have already agreed that certain employees were blanketed in. We have agreed that it was not fair to blanket them in; and we now agree that under this bill it is proposed to levy an additional tax of 1 percent on the pay roll to partially care for the cost of this bonus bill. On this basis we shall never be able to liquidate Government agencies until we discharge every employee.

Information with respect to the agency to which I have referred was placed in the RECORD last Thursday. The Senator from South Carolina could very easily have checked it. The headquarters of the agency is in Washington. The agency had 494 employees, and only 11 of them resigned. Those 11 employees might have been in a bracket which would receive certain benefits. The chances are that they were in the service for less than 5 years, so it would not make any material difference whether they remained in the service or not.

If we are to pay a premium of between $3,000 and $5,000 in the case of employees who are dismissed, the only way to get them off the pay roll is to dismiss them. The average payment to the individual employee in the case of the particular agency to which I have referred would be $1,991.05. Using this as a rule, it would cost nearly $2,000,000,000 to remove 1,000,000 employees from the Federal pay roll. That statement has not been contradicted. The agency to which I refer is an average agency since it was formed in the early war years.

I dislike to think that the sponsors of this bill would report a bill in the name of retirement, and encourage the retired employees who now need protection to think that they are going to receive benefits, and encourage other Federal employees to believe that they are to receive certain benefits, when it is all done for the purpose of giving temporary employees a bonus of $2,000,000,000.

CALL OF THE ROLL

Mr. BRIDGES obtained the floor.

Mr. WHITE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for the purpose of suggesting the absence of a quorum?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hawkes	Myers
Baldwin	Hayden	O'Conor
Ball	Hickenlooper	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hill	O'Mahoney
Brewster	Hoey	Pepper
Bricker	Holland	Reed

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-seven Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

ORGANIZED ACTIVITY AGAINST PENDING LABOR LEGISLATION

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Hampshire yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. KNOWLAND. Mr. President, we have all received quite a number of communications relative to the labor bill which is now pending before the Congress and which very soon will go to the President of the United States for his approval. I have a letter in my hand which I think was not meant to get into my hands, but I think it is of interest to the Senate and I desire to read it into the RECORD at this time. It is addressed "To All A. F. of L. Unions and Councils," and dated May 16, 1947. It reads as follows:

Within the next few days a joint conference of the United States Senate and Congress will draft an antilabor bill, based upon the Taft and Hartley legislation. This bill undoubtedly will be adopted by both Houses. We have every reason to believe President Truman will veto the bill; however, from present indications, the Congress will pass the bill over the President's veto by an overwhelming majority.

In the Senate we are informed that the A. F. of L. needs the support of 7 more Senators to block the passage of the bill over a veto. Senator KNOWLAND is one of the Senators needed. It is essential that a sufficient number of telegrams, letters, and telephone calls be made to Senator KNOWLAND in an attempt to influence him to refuse to override the veto. Thousands of letters from business men are arriving daily, requesting the adoption of this antilabor legislation. However, communications and contacts from members are very light. The united A. F. or L. is, therefore, requesting each union to have each officer, executive board member, and business agent take it upon himself to get 5 persons to wire, write or telephone Senator KNOWLAND within the next week, requesting him to vote against passage over a veto.

In Los Angeles County, A. F. of L. unions have over 5,000 members who are officers in the above capacities. If each of these officers got 5 persons to respond, Senator KNOWLAND will have received word from at least 25,000 citizens. If each officer leaves it to the others, Senator KNOWLAND will receive no correspondence. This is a program that must be carried out. It is a last-ditch attempt to avoid sabotage of the free trade-union movement. Please act immediately.

We will appreciate copies of letters or telegrams sent, or a reply from each officer when he has accomplished the above outlined task.

Sincerely and fraternally,

W. J. BASSETT,
Executive Secretary.

Address Senator KNOWLAND, Senate Office Building, room 355, Washington, D. C. Telephone, Washington, D. C., National 3120, extension 183.

Mr. President, the sequel to that form of pressure activity is a letter which I received from a member of one of the unions in southern California. For obvious reasons, I am not going to read the name of the gentleman who sent me the letter, but he has signed his letter, and it is in his own handwriting. The letter is addressed to Senator WILLIAM F. KNOWLAND, Washington, D. C., and it is dated May 26. It reads as follows:

DEAR SENATOR KNOWLAND: This is to inform you that a form letter which I wrote you today from Hollywood is a form letter written by myself and hundreds of others under duress whereby we were threatened that unless we would write this letter, local No. 468, of which Joe Singleton is office manager, would not issue work orders to those who would not conform.

Thank you, sincerely.

And then the name is signed.

He adds a postscript, as follows:

P. S.—Let's stop this dictatorship, and keep our United States a good place to be able to work and make a decent living.

Then, Mr. President, a day later I received the following communication:

DEAR SENATOR: I am enclosing a circular put out by the Newspaper Guild of Los Angeles which may be of interest to you. Several of my friends, who are members of the guild, have told me that they are in favor of the Taft-Hartley bill, but don't dare write you for fear of reprisals. After having witnessed some of the "legal" union activity around here recently, I can see their point of view.

I feel sure that you are doing all that you can to solve this problem in an adequate and rational manner. When good Americans do not dare to freely express their political convictions, then the situation certainly calls for remedial action.

Mr. President, at this point in the RECORD, I ask unanimous consent to have printed the letter going from the Los Angeles Newspaper Guild to its members.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HOW THE TAFT-HARTLEY LABOR BILL WOULD AFFECT THE GUILD

Make illegal "coercing" anyone to join. This "coercion" could be interpreted so drastically as to prevent all organizing.

Bans the closed shop, seriously curtails the union shop (we call it the guild shop).

Would prohibit all supervisory employees from belonging to guild. This would include any employee who supervises the work of one or more people. It might affect hundreds in LANG.

Would wreck the NLRB by emasculating the Board's powers, dividing its responsibility.

Would prohibit industry-wide bargaining. While this seems harmless as far as the guild is concerned, the provisions in this are so embracing as to forbid the American Newspaper Guild from even giving the Los Angeles local wage information at it applies to other bargaining on papers throughout the country.

Obviously these, and other restrictions of the bill would at once endanger the wages and working conditions of all guildsmen. For some guildsmen it would bring an end to membership, hence an end to guild job protection, severance-pay rights, etc.

What to do:

Write at once to President Truman asking him to veto the bill.

Write at once to Senator WILLIAM KNOWLAND and Senator SHERIDAN DOWNEY to sustain Truman's veto—if he vetoes the bill.

Do it now.

It's costing money to fight this labor bill. A collection will be made next week at LANG plants. If guildsmen will contribute 50 cents, thus spreading the cost pretty thin for a vitally needed job, we will meet our quota. Issued by LANG political action department.

THE STEEL INQUIRY

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I hold in my hand an editorial entitled "Get the Full Facts on Steel Racket," published in the Philadelphia Inquirer for May 25, 1947. The editorial commends in the most flattering and, I would say, the highest terms the work of the Senate subcommittee which is now and for nearly a month has been investigating the situation in the steel industry. I refer to the subcommittee composed of the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. MARTIN], the Senator from Washington [Mr. CAIN], the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Florida [Mr. HOLLAND], and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER]. I ask unanimous consent that the editorial be printed in full at this point in the RECORD, as a part of my remarks. I think it will be of interest to all Members of the Senate as showing the work the subcommittee is doing and as indicating how this particular newspaper, which I believe is representative of many other newspapers, feels about the work of this subcommittee of the Small Business Committee, which is doing such an admirable job in inquiring about the situation relative to steel.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

GET THE FULL FACTS ON STEEL RACKET

Shaping up as one of the most gigantic rackets yet uncovered in this country is the so-called gray market in steel now the subject of investigation by a United States Senate subcommittee headed by Senator EDWARD MARTIN, of Pennsylvania.

Mr. MARTIN is not the kind who starts something without carrying it to completion, and we may be sure that his committee will not end its inquiry until every pertinent fact has been produced.

These are big-money operations, under-the-counter deals with fantastic profits involved. Senator MARTIN's group is evidently on the trail of something that will make the racketeering of the prohibition era seem small-time. With only a few days' testimony and with many witnesses still to be called and masses of evidence to be presented, the record is already replete with charges of price rigging carried to extravagant heights, of thousands of dollars paid out for undelivered products, of intimidation and threats.

Starting point of the whole gray market enterprise, of course, is the continued scarcity in sheet steel, a basic product in industry. There has not been sufficient steel to supply industry's needs. The result has been stiff competition to obtain as much of the available steel as possible, with price no object.

We have seen the same thing happening in the case of other scarce commodities in the war and postwar years. Whenever anything is in short supply, whether it be automobiles, nylon stockings, washing machines, or building materials, there is always someone who manages to obtain the wanted products and someone else who is eager to buy them at exorbitant prices.

The ordinary consumer, naturally, is victimized by such operations. If he is unwilling to compete on a straight price basis, he simply does not obtain the goods.

We have had an unsavory example of this kind of business recently in the sale of new automobiles at from $500 to $1,000 above the manufacturers' retail price.

The racket in steel which Senator MARTIN's committee is exposing is on the same order as these other operations, except that more money is evidently involved and even shadier deals are indicated.

Sheet steel ordinary sells at around $80 a ton. When it is realized that prices up to $240 a ton have been quoted on the gray market, the enormous profits open to those who can obtain any substantial amount of the product are evident.

A Pittsburgh steel broker, E. A. Kerschbaumer, has told the Martin subcommittee that he lost $63,000 in an attempt to work out a steel deal that was not consummated. In the course of the transactions, he testified, "a couple of gunmen" appeared in his hotel room and threatened him.

The broker, according to his testimony, had ample credit for his middleman operations and customers ready to pay high prices for steel. He stated that a Detroit man offered him 300,000 tons of steel at $147 a ton.

His counsel testified that Kerschbaumer had been told by a New York lawyer that he could have 148,000 tons of steel if he would pay an "override" of $62.50 a ton over and above the market price.

These allegations will, of course, be investigated by the Senate group, along with other details of this widespread price kiting. Only the surface has been scratched thus far. The subcommittee should be given every facility and assistance necessary for an exhaustive investigation.

Steel is big business. Everything affecting it affects American industry and American living. Racketeering in steel is a blow at American production. Senator MARTIN and his fellow investigators are performing a tremendous service in relentlessly exposing these shady operations.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, twice in three decades it is given to us to try to rebuild a war-torn world, upon which mankind has visited ruthless destruction, unprecedented displacement of populations, and catastrophic confusion. Never have the wellsprings of hatred been more deeply drained, nor the dregs of despair more bitterly tasted. We live amidst world doubt, world confusion, and world revolution, in which hunger, want, and suffering stalk this unhappy globe. Doubt assails countless millions on every hand, and they look to us as almost the only source of hope for a brighter, peaceful world.

We are learning now that peace depends largely upon what efforts we devote to it. To have peace, we must build for peace and must encourage others to share the construction. Otherwise, we cannot escape a third World War, with havoc and destruction of incomprehensible magnitude. Indeed, it is not impossible that civilization as we now know it might be ended. It is with these sobering thoughts that I believe we should approach the question of ratification of the Italian Treaty of Peace.

Recently, in increasing strength and number, thoughtful citizens have come to criticize this Italian Peace Treaty in the severest terms. One columnist has said:

> I would be against the Italian treaty, even if there were a democratic and humane regime in Yugoslavia, because the treaty is unjust, stupid, cruel, dangerous, and in violation of our solemn promises.

Another has remarked that the treaty is "unjust, iniquitous, and vengeful." These are only two samples of a host of accusers who hold that the treaty is not only a violation of American ideals, promises, and democratic aims, but a serious threat to our political and social institutions and to our economic and international aims. They fear that by subscribing to the terms proposed, we shall make it easy for communism and Russia to seize control of Italy, while we are simultaneously opposing them elsewhere. They point out that the economic provisions contradict American interests, and are a sure guaranty that Italy will not recover, and, consequently, that Europe and the world will also fail to recover.

The treaty which we are now called upon to ratify can be, and has been construed, and correctly so—as a violation of our promises. Time and time again, Franklin D. Roosevelt and Winston Churchill, war leaders of two of the great Allied nations, promised the Italians just terms if they would turn out Mussolini and his brood. On June 4, 1944, after the fall of Rome, President Roosevelt said:

> The Italians, too, foreswearing a partnership in the Axis which they have never desired, have sent their troops to join us in our battles against the German trespassers on their soil.

In the following October he said:

> To the people of Italy we have pledged our help, and we will keep the faith.

Mr. President, how does this treaty propose to keep the faith? Does it keep the faith by stripping Italy of naval units we gave her reason to believe she could retain, and turning them over to Russia? Does it keep the faith by reducing Italy to a third-rate power? Does it keep the faith by placing Italy under the domination of a ruthless Yugoslavia? Surely, if it was wrong for a dictatorial totalitarian Italy to rule the Yugoslav part of the Adriatic, it is no less wrong for a dictatorial totalitarian Yugoslavia to rule the Italian part of the same sea. The treaty further strips Italy of land which we ourselves agreed she had a right to hold after the First World War. It is hard to visualize a treaty more severe than that which is before us.

I ask, Mr. President, is this the way the United States now would keep the faith? Does our word mean one thing when we are in battle, and another when we have won? One of the distinctions between our country and totalitarian states has been that man can rely on the American word. I, for one United States Senator, am proud of that distinction. One of the distinctions of which I am proud is the keeping of the faith, and I do not want to see it violated by the ratification of the pending Italian treaty.

This treaty runs counter to some of the basic principles for which we fought in both World Wars. It violates the Atlantic Charter; it strengthens totalitarianism; and it would leave Italy wide open to a totalitarianism as obnoxious as that which we fought from 1942 to 1945. Where is self-determination in Tenda-Briga, or freedom in Venezia Giulia, or freedom from want and fear for the 180,000 Italians in Yugoslavia? This treaty would fasten these unhappy conditions on the world.

Still another reason why the treaty should not be ratified is that its economic provisions run counter to world interests and will prevent economic recovery. While the United States and Great Britain, because of the economic weakness of Italy, agreed to forego their reparations, Russia and her satellite states insisted upon maintaining their reparation claims. Over and above what has been taken from Italy, she is now to be forced to pay $360,000,000—$125,000,000 to Yugoslavia, $100,000,000 to Russia, $5,000,000 to Albania; that is a total of $210,000,000 to Russia and her satellites, and, in addition, $25,000,000 to Ethiopia and $105,000,000 to Greece. Of course, Russia is taking out her share in productive guaranties, but it all amounts to the same thing—Italy must pay. But the most fantastic part of the business is that the original claims for damages against Italy ran back to September 1939, long before she entered the war. In short, in the space of 7 years Italy is to pay $360,000,000, which she does not have. These shall consist of money payments, a share of the Italian factory and tool equipment, current industrial production, and capital goods and services, all of which Italy needs if she is to recover economically.

Mr. President, permit me to remind you that at the time of the signing of the treaty Premier de Gasperi obtained a credit of $100,000,000 from the United States. This Italy needed to keep going. Now, in the truncated condition which this treaty proposes to impose upon her, it is unreasonable to expect that Italy can live a self-supporting existence. The drastic economic penalties of the treaty will force her into economic dependence upon other countries.

Can there be any question which way she would turn for economic help and who would be asked to foot the bill? There is only one major creditor state in the world. There is only one country with substantial supplies of money. That is our country, the United States of America. Britain cannot help, nor can France, nor Russia, nor any other country. Every major power, with the exception of ourselves, is asking for funds. So Italy, poor Italy, harassed by high food prices, beset by economic unrest, and seething with political difficulties, must look to the United States for help. Thus, if we ratify the treaty and then help Italy, in the interest of world recovery, the United States will pour in dollars at one end of the Italian funnel, while Russia and her satellites will drain off those dollars in the form of reparations at the other end. In any case, the American taxpayer will foot the bill.

Any money the United States may lend should be with at least a reasonable chance that the recipient shall benefit by it. But this treaty could in effect make the United States pay Russia and Yugoslavia indirect tribute in the form of Italian reparations.

But these are not the only economic provisions which are unsound. Take, for instance, the areas ceded to France. They may possess some strategic value for France, but Sumner Welles, a former acting Secretary of State, has said their cession "violates every principle upon which a durable peace should be founded." They are purely Italian, and they include some of the finest hydroelectric producing sections in all of Europe—the Mount Cenis plateau, the districts of Tenda and Briga, and the village of Olivetta de San Michele in the lower Roya Valley. In Tenda and Briga, France acquires control of power plants which will sell electricity to Italians across the border on Italian soil. Not only is Italy to be continued in a condition in which she lacks raw materials, but her white coal, which she built before the war upon Italian soil, with Italian money, is to be taken from her, and the control of the areas in which it is located is to be placed in the hands of an alien power. Not only will this mean the loss of electrical power, but if any of the dams should break, they will do so on the French side, while the area inundated will be Italian.

These illustrations will show why I believe that the treaty is unsound economically, and therefore almost bound to lead to a disaster in which it is doubtful we could escape being involved. Perhaps Italy could overcome one economic restriction or difficulty, but there can be little question that the total economic blow delivered by the treaty would have such a damaging effect that the United States eventually would have to come to the financial aid of the Italian people. Without attempting levity, may I point out that this is hardly the type of commitment which an economy-minded Congress should undertake.

Still another fundamental weakness of the treaty is that it creates unnecessary danger spots. Three in particular are bound to plague the world in the future: Trieste, Tripolitania, and Cyrenaica. I am reluctant to take up your time with a discussion of all of these. Let one, the worst one, Trieste, suffice. We propose to become a party to the internationalization of that city. Nowhere in connection with this proposal does one hear of what happened to Danzig, or to the Kiel Canal, or to Memel, or to Catalonia, or to the Danube, or to the Rhine, or to the Oder, to mention only a few of the unsuccessful experiences with international government and control. Rarely does internationalization succeed.

But we need not look to these earlier experiences with internationalization to know that the treaty arrangement for Trieste will fail. It has already failed. The struggle has already begun; in fact, it is in full swing now, and it is a losing fight by the Italians to retain the control of the city; and a gradual acquisition of control by the Yugoslavs, supported by Russia, seems unavoidable. Slowly, but surely, Italy, where the idea of unredeemed lands began, is losing Trieste. Can anyone doubt what Italy will do some years hence, if the opportunity presents itself? And, by the way, what are the Yugoslavs doing about the ports which they acquired from Italy—Fiume, or Zara, for example? It is my understanding that Trieste is rapidly becoming the sole center of the Yugoslav Adriatic trade. Can anyone question the economic significance of the creation of this new irridenta?

We should not underestimate the significance of this fact, because the port of Trieste is the natural outlet of trade for all of Central Europe. Fifty-eight percent of Austria-Hungary's trade went through that port prior to 1914, and only 16 percent of its trade was carried on along the eastern borders. Time will not permit a detailed examination or discussion of the railway lines and traffic routes to the Adriatic ports. But Trieste has great natural transportation advantages. Suffice it to say that the treaty arrangement with regard to Trieste makes no contribution to world peace, but promises, rather, to create a festering sore in southern Europe. Most impartial people, who know the area, would join Sumner Welles in saying:

> Trieste is, indisputedly—from every standpoint of right, of justice, and of principle—an Italian city. If the plan for the creation of a Free Territory of Trieste is carried out, it means protracted Italian resentment and unrest, long years of persistent propaganda and of bitter friction between Italians and Yugoslavs, and ever-increasing Soviet pressure within the area placed under international control. The experience of the past 27 years has shown conclusively that such schemes as this do not make for peace, but only make for future trouble. By this so-called compromise Mr. Molotov has secured precisely what he started out to get. Such a peace treaty will neither bring stability to Italy nor peace to Europe.

Let us look at still another difficulty. The treaty is inconsistent with the measures we have recently taken to try to stop the spread of communism. We are bolstering the Greek and Turkish Governments with military and financial aid. But this treaty would tear down one of the strongest bulwarks against communism and Soviet influence in Europe. Even in her present despondency Italy fights communism. Even the helplessness of Francesco Nitti, when it was a question of forming a new Cabinet, did not bring communism to Italy. Togliatti rants, and the Communists play their obstructionist games, but thus far they have failed.

And now we propose to make Italy a vassal of Soviet Russia and her satellites, with a reparations burden of $360,000,000, and the pledging of her industrial capacity to the extent of $100,000,000. And there stands Yugoslavia raised to the rank of at least a second rate power with Red support, with an army of 750,000 men, equipped in part with UNRRA funds, of which the taxpayers of this country paid a substantial part. Yugoslavia is to be the master of the Adriatic—Yugoslavia, the dictator-ruled country, with which we have had more than one diplomatic difficulty. I agree with Dorothy Thompson when she says:

> Why must we aid and defend Greece against the same regime to which we open Italy? Is it because the Government of Greece is more democratic than that of today's Italy? If we approve this treaty, there will not long be a government either democratic or friendly to us in Italy. The harsh terms of the Italian treaty is no way to stop communism.

I say we should at least try to be consistent.

The most comprehensive, powerful, and pressing reason for not ratifying the treaty is that it plays directly into the hands of Soviet Russia. The Italian treaty in the broadest sense does not dispose of troublesome European questions. Its implications are extensive. Whether we like it or not, the United States is now one of the principals in the most momentous struggle of all time. Let there be no mistake about its nature. The intentions of Russia in that struggle have been frequently made abundantly clear. Nowhere have they been made clearer than in the thinly veiled terms delivered by Andrei Gromyko before the American-Russian Institute in New York City on May 19. Here are a few of Gromyko's words:

> Who knows, the time may come when the country [the United States], at present occupying a more favorable position in this respect than other nations, will find itself in the same, or maybe even in a less favorable, position in comparison with other states in the field of the development and perfection of certain dangerous kinds of weapons, if such weapons are not prohibited.
> The tendency to secure this monopoly for one country inevitably causes rivalry among nations in this field.

Gromyko was speaking of the atomic bomb. He voiced what the Russians have always asked for ever since 1917, the elimination of armaments. But can anyone be blamed for skepticism about this repeated Russian thesis, this political window dressing, when one recalls how it was used at Geneva before the Second World War, with a full knowledge it could not be respected, or if one recalls the Russian aggressive acts against the Baltic States?

Is there anyone so naive that he cannot read the message in Gromyko's fateful words? It is Russia's attitude that an armament race is on between the United States and the U. S. S. R., in which Russia is being assisted by thousands of German scientists and technicians who have been lured or forced to work in Russia on atomic and scientific weapons. Gromyko hints that Russia is about to catch up with us, and perhaps pass us, in that race. We can honestly and sincerely deny that we are engaged in such a race, but we would be blind indeed were we deliberately to weaken our position abroad. Yet the Italian treaty would do just that. The treaty promises to keep Italy in subservience, in a constant condition of turmoil, until the Russian-dominated Communists under Togliatti gain control of the land.

It took the bloodiest and most devastating war in all history to show that Hitler and Mussolini were not bluffing. We cannot afford to beguile ourselves with the thought that Russia's totalitarian leaders are now bluffing. To do so is to invite another, and perhaps an irretrievable, Pearl Harbor.

One more reason why the treaty should not be ratified, is that it will create a disturbed condition in the Mediterranean, and thus leave the door wide open to conflict in the future. Setting aside for the moment the difficult problem of Palestine, the disturbed conditions in Lebanon and Syria, and the inability of Egypt and Britain to come to terms over the Sudan, we are faced today with Britain withdrawing her troops from the eastern Mediterranean and the Near East, and basing them in Africa. The reason, we are told, is that Britain wishes to reach an understanding over that section of the world with Soviet Russia, which she apparently cannot achieve as long as her troops remain. Does this not show how disturbed and how fluid are the conditions in that troubled sea?

We need a strong and democratic Italy for a stable Mediterranean. Britain now confesses that she is overextend-ed in relation to her power. The weakness of France, beset by domestic and colonial troubles, and the weakness of Italy, make Britain today the only important power in the Mediterranean Sea. But how tenuous is her power? Her control is beset by Franco's Spain, the Arab nationalists, the Palestine question, the constant threat of Russia, the limitation of British funds, to mention only a few.

These are only a few of the objections to ratification of the treaty at this time. There are many others, such as the unfortunate transfer to Yugoslavia of the ownership of the water supply of Italian Gorizia and its vicinity; the weakening of Italian military and naval power to the point where Italy becomes an invitation to aggression; the changed frontier at Mount Tabor and Little St. Bernard Pass; the flat contradiction between the fine spirit of the preamble and the cynicism of the instrument as a whole as reflected in its despoiling clauses. These objections do not conclude the list but they will help to show how unsound the treaty is.

There has been some talk about the need for speed so that Italy may recover. But how can any country recover under such terms? I am sure that no harm will be done by delay; certainly no more than is caused by delay on the main treaty, the one with Germany, which has not yet been framed, or on the one with Austria, against which Russia has set herself. I would rather have no treaty at all than an unjust, short-sighted instrument, which places my country's welfare in the hands of a totalitarian power, which has shown itself callous of human life, blind to freedom, and intolerantly self-seeking. I am convinced that the Italian Treaty is an invitation to war.

Permit me to impose upon the Senate's patience to present one further sobering thought. To the centuries of strife and struggle on the continent of Europe have now been added the destruction and inhuman persecution of the last three decades. Whole peoples have been uprooted by the millions and transported from place to place. Families have been divided and warring forces have destroyed people before the very eyes of their loved ones. The horrors of the concentration camps, the shifting of displaced people, the killing of hostages in ideological frenzies, have added their bit to the storm of sadism and human torture which has seen no equal in the annals of history. And after this, how can long-standing differences of language, religion, and race among these people fail to color and prejudice their views of one another? It is for us who are more fortunately placed to view world affairs impartially and fairly. Our land is intact. God has been kind to us. Without deliberately planning it we have become the most powerful, the most wealthy state in the world. It is true that gives us no special claim to dictate our views and wishes. But equally true it is that we are the hope of millions in the world. We are the only power which can honestly command the confidence of the world for impartiality and fair dealing. In direct proportion to the way in which we command that confidence we shall grow and be great at home and in the world. Our action upon the Italian peace treaty will be a major test of that confidence.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, before addressing myself to the very great questions which arise in my mind in connection with the Italian peace treaty which is now pending I desire to recall briefly two of the statements made on the Senate floor yesterday by the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG]. At the outset of his speech the Senator from Michigan stated very fairly that in the negotiation of international treaties the Executive responsibility is only a primary one, and that the final responsibility lies with the Senate.

I subscribe in toto to that statement. In answer to some remarks which have been made to the effect that we should ratify the treaty because commitments have been made, I should like to say to the Senate that no valid commitment is made in the treaty or in any of its provisions until the Senate of the United States ratifies it. That is a constitutional requirement. When the treaty is ratified, then we have made commitments. It is the function of the Executive, of course, to negotiate treaties. That is his prerogative. It is the duty of the Executive to negotiate treaties and submit them to the Senate for ratification, but certainly no one should stand on the floor of the Senate and say that because this person or that person has agreed to the provisions of the pending treaty, whether that person be in the executive department or in the United Nations organization, such person has done anything more than an administrative act. It is my position that commitments made by the Executive do not become valid until the Senate of the United States by a two-thirds vote ratifies the provisions of the treaty. At least that is the way I feel about the matter.

In the concluding moments of his able address, and it was an able address, the senior Senator from Michigan again spoke with fairness and with accuracy when he stated that the votes to be cast on this treaty should be predicated upon each Senator's complete and total right of independent judgment. I appreciate his making that statement, because it is in that sense, and in that spirit, that I approach the decision I am to make on my responsibility with respect to ratification of the treaty. Certainly Senators owe it not only to their States but to the people of the United States of America to use their own independent judgment. So with the admonition and advice and judgment of the distinguished Senator from Michigan I again totally agree. I also agree with the distinguished Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] who time and again on the Senate floor in respect to ratification of treaties has also made similar remarks, with which I agree.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I heartily agree with the Senator as to the functions of the Senate. I heartily agree with his statement that every Senator ought to vote his own honest convictions upon treaties, and upon everything else, for that matter.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator for his remarks.

Mr. President, yesterday we heard the very forceful and lucid report of the distinguished Senator from Michigan urging ratification of the admittedly unsatisfactory European peace treaties now pending before this body. We shall soon be asked to vote on those treaties and to declare the will of the American people with respect to peace settlements, determining the future of nearly 100,000,000 people involved in the treaties with Italy, Hungary, Rumania, and Bulgaria.

I feel that the able chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee is correct in saying that of all these settlements, the Italian Treaty is clearly the issue. I agree; not so much, as he stated, because scores of Americans have voiced their disagreement with the proposed Italian Treaty, but more because, as I see it, Italy is the only one of the former satellite nations in strategic Europe with respect to which we can still entertain great hopes for maintaining a friendly nation looking westward, not eastward.

Barring catastrophic events, we are forced to realize that the other nations whose treaties we are now considering are today all Russian satellites. All of the distinguished gentlemen who represented the United States at the various peace conferences, here and abroad, frankly admit that the controversial Italian Treaty is a child born of compromise. In studying the treaty with a nation so important to our vital interests in the Mediterranean, it becomes regretfully manifest that the final compromises conceded far more to Soviet Foreign Minister Molotov than to our former Secretary of State, Mr. Byrnes.

To forget that Italy was an enemy state is just as foolish as to forget that the Italian people threw out their Fascist rulers and voluntarily joined us in an uphill battle toward a common victory. But the greatest folly of all would be to blind ourselves to the crucial fact that a free Italian people is necessary to our own security. Small nations such as Italy must, in today's unsettled world, seek shelter under the protection of their strong friends. That is what is happening in Europe. The present De Gasperi government is friendly toward us; but how long that government can last is doubtful if we complacently ratify this harsh and outmoded treaty favoring Russia at Italy's expense.

The distinguished Senator from Michigan urges us to ratify this treaty because "a bird in the hand is worth two in the bush"; but I ask those who may consider ratifying the Italian Treaty as a fulfillment of our best interests. In whose hands does ratification place this precious bird? In our hands? In the hands of the world's peace-loving nations? In the hands of the Italian people?—or, on the basis of the valuable concessions to Russia, in the hands of the Russians?

Mr. President, the record of the hearings before the Foreign Relations Committee reveals that of all the outside witnesses—and when I say "outside witnesses" I mean witnesses other than those from the State Department or other Government agencies, who, of course, testified for the treaty—only one favored it. This testimony favoring ratification came from a spokesman for an Italian Communist organization in New York which publishes a pro-communist newspaper. The War Department, on complaint from Representative DONDERO, of Michigan, recently cancelled its advertising contract with this newspaper, L'Unita Del Popolo, because it was alleged to be conducted along Communist Party lines. At this point I should like to read into the RECORD a letter signed by Robert P. Patterson, Secretary of War, relative to this particular newspaper, the representative of which was the only outside witness who testified in behalf of ratification of the treaty. The letter reads as follows:

APRIL 7, 1947.

Hon. GEORGE A. DONDERO,
House of Representatives,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. DONDERO: A few days ago you directed attention to the fact that the War Department was running recruiting advertisements in the L'Unita Del Popolo, a newspaper in New York City alleged to be conducted along Communist Party lines.

I find that your information was correct. The advertisements were placed in this paper without knowledge of its character.

Action has been taken to eliminate this newspaper from further advertisement in the program for Army recruits. Meanwhile, an inquiry is being conducted to see whether there are other newspapers in the same category in which advertising for the War Department is being placed.

Thanking you for your cooperation, I am,
Sincerely yours,

ROBERT P. PATTERSON,
Secretary of War.

In addition, I have before me a copy of the newspaper published in Rome by the Italian Communist leader, Palmiro Togliatti. He exhorts his Marxist colleagues, in large headlines on page 1, "Urge your Senator to ratify the treaty." The words are in Italian. I suppose they could not be printed in the RECORD; but I want Senators to know that I have a copy of the newspaper before me. The article has been translated for me by an Italian. The words "Urge your Senator to ratify the treaty" are enclosed in a circle.

It cannot be made plainer to any of us that communism in Italy has much to gain by our ratification of the treaty. Such action on our part will strike down the newly born democracy in the Italy of today.

In weighing our decision on the crucial question of the Italian treaty, I view it as our obligation to the American people to act in accordance with our best interests abroad. I view this question especially in the light of the recent Communist usurpation of government in Hungary. It is vital, as the distinguished Senator from Michigan pointed out, to ask ourselves, If a similar theft of government should occur in strategic Italy within the next few months, what would happen to our $400,000,000 program to aid Greece and Turkey and stop the growth of communism in the Mediterranean area? As my distinguished colleague from Michigan has put it, "We alone shall bear the responsibility."

Within the scope of American interests in the Mediterranean, let us briefly review the outstanding injustices of the Italian treaty as presented to us. Compelling the Italian people to pay out $365,000,000 in reparations while we at the other end, through gifts and loans, will be required to give them millions in rehabilitation credits, simply does not make sense to me. For at least indirectly we will be underwriting Italian reparations. I can draw no other conclusion.

Certainly we know by this time that Russia alone will effectively set the full cost of reparations the Italian people will have to pay. Under the terms of the pending treaty, Russia supplies raw materials to Italy for processing. These materials are charged at a certain price. The finished product which Italy delivers to Soviet Government monopoly is likewise charged at a certain price. The difference between the cost to Italy of the raw material and the credit to Italy of the finished product goes to liquidate the reparations penalties.

In theory that should work out fairly enough; the distinguished Senator from Michigan feels that it should; but the pretense that the prices either for raw materials or finished products will be fairly agreed upon by Italy and the Soviet Union is merely self-delusion. The whole record of Russia in Europe and in Asia since VJ-day is testimony to the contrary.

I contend that our proper objective should be to restore American trade with a democratic Italy, which will help Italy to help herself, and not to underwrite an extension of Soviet slave economy, by turning over Italian production of manufactured goods to Russian satellites for the next decade.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am happy to yield to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. EASTLAND. When the Senator speaks of the raw materials which Italy is to receive from Russia and process, under the reparations clauses, does he not have in mind that that will tie the Italian economy to Russia and make her subservient to Russia?

Mr. WHERRY. I cannot see any other answer. The only thing we have been told is that it does not amount to anything. It is only $15,000,000 a year for approximately 7 years. If we consider the record of Russia, as indicated in the statement just made, all the evidence is to the contrary. I want to tell the Senate that while an appeal to the four Ambassadors is provided, yet if Russia uses her veto power our reliance on such an appeal will amount to nothing. If we sign this treaty we shall have absolutely mortgaged the labor of Italy and have mortgaged sufficient coal and power to cover the stipulated amount of reparations. It is my opinion that there will be priorities and that Russia will insist upon delivery regardless of what Italy can produce for herself or for export abroad to help rehabilitate her own economy. Show me a record that is different since VJ-day, so far as Russia is concerned. Show me a record which can be interpreted any differently. I cannot find one. I am not making that statement with any ulterior motive or with any animosity toward Russia. I suppose Russia feels that Italy owes her reparations.

When I was in Europe last summer and inquired about food, which the Russians said they would not divert to the Army, I was told, "Of course, we keep the supply of food produced in this territory. Why should we not do so?" They feel they have a right to do so, because the enemy countries invaded Russia and pursued a "scorched-earth" policy. But I think that Italy is in a different category, because she abandoned the war against us and fought with us on representations made that she would be treated fairly if she helped us prosecute the war.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. The argument is made that the ratification of this treaty will speed the rehabilitation of Italy. I think the Senator will agree that the ratification will retard the rehabilitation of Italy, for the reason that the treaty gives her hydroelectric production to Yugoslavia and turns over her coal resources to Yugoslavia.

The figures from the State Department indicate that Italy produces 1,370,000 metric tons of coal annually, 90 percent of it which is given by the treaty to the bandit, Tito. Italy imports normally 13,000,000 tons of coal. Of that there comes from Germany 7,600,000 tons. Germany cannot, of course, ship coal to Italy today because coal is not being produced in the Ruhr. Great Britain normally ships to Italy 2,200,000 tons of coal. Every one knows there is a coal shortage in England and she cannot supply coal at this time. From Poland, Italy receives normally 1,500,000 tons of coal and from other countries 1,600,000 tons. If we ratify the treaty Italy's coal production and hydroelectric power production will go to Yugoslavia and she cannot receive from other countries the coal supplies which she has historically received. That being true, the ratification of the treaty, taking those resources from her, will postpone her economic rehabilitation and, further, lay her open to Communist infiltration.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator from Mississippi for his observation. I would go even further than the Senator from Mississippi has gone, and say that it is very doubtful that Italy can buy enough raw materials, in view of the reparations demands, to produce the products she needs to export in order to rehabilitate her own economy. I think the outlook would be very discouraging. Russia has priority and a mortgage. We might as well make up our minds now that it is not only a question of fuel; Italy will have to have food. Where will Italy get the food, and what can she pay for it? If we ratify the treaty the United States, through its generosity, will have to supply the food that will help labor to produce the materials to be sent to Russia as reparations. It seems to me, that would discourage the rehabilitation of the economy of the Italian people.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I think this treaty is a great victory for Russian foreign policy, and as a result within two or three years, at the longest, there will be a communistic government in Italy.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his contribution to the discussion.

Mr. President, the State Department's announced objective—and it should certainly be considered and respected—is to restore peaceful conditions in Italy. With that we all can agree. Why? So that trade can be resumed between the United States and Italy for mutual benefit. As a part of this process further aid to Italy is right now being discussed—I refer to the so-called Lombardo Mission to Washington—so that foods may be produced in greater quantity there, raising the Italian standard of living and promoting a greater exchange of products. In the American view—the historic American view—this is one step toward a full and democratic life. It is one of the material bases of such a life. But this treaty does not promote such an objective. On the contrary, it very plainly condemns the economy of Italy to an indeterminate and undeterminable sentence. There is no safeguard in this treaty to prevent Russia from flooding the factories and workshops of Italy with raw materials, priced very high by Russia—or Russia's henchman, Tito—to be processed and shipped back at very low prices for the finished goods to Russia or to Yugoslavia.

Furthermore, under this treaty Russia can demand priorities for processing any raw materials it wants. The fact that Italy can appeal these demands to the four Ambassadors is relatively unimportant. No long-term private contracts would be safe under this arrangement from Soviet interference and uncertainty, and, therefore, they could not be made. That is the answer I have to that.

It is plain folly to overlook or to be silent about—as some persons are on this subject—the fact that we are dealing in this matter with a power whose basic intention is to destroy our system of business, that is, our system of production and exchange of goods, by bankrupting Italy. Under the power given through this treaty to sell high and buy low, the Soviet Government and its satellites can accomplish their purpose legally, with our consent, our assistance, and at great cost to the American people—if we ratify this document. I can reach no other conclusion.

Much stress has been laid by the proponents of ratification on the alleged fact that ratification of the treaty is necessary if we are to raise the morale of the Italian people. With that position I agree. Greater industrial production in Italy is suggested as a means of freeing the Italians from fear of want. That is absolutely necessary if their morale is to be built up; and it seems to me that the only chance they have of increasing their industrial production is by purchasing raw materials from the United States and fabricating them and then exporting them and obtaining the proceeds for use in supplying their own needs, and thus rehabilitating themselves. Certainly that cannot be done when there are no surpluses for the Italian people, over and above the goods required to pay reparations to Soviet Russia and its satellites.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. IVES in the chair). Does the Senator from Nebraska yield to the Senator from Minnesota?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. THYE. Will the Senator from Nebraska state what he would like to propose, instead of the pending treaty?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to see the situation remain in status quo until we are able to determine whether we can iron out a treaty with Germany and with Austria, as the Senator from Michigan suggested, and until we see how affairs proceed in Hungary during the next several months.

Mr. THYE. But has not the Foreign Relations Committee already given a great deal of study and thought and time to this subject?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. THYE. What accomplishments can we hope for by requiring the committee to continue its study for the next several months?

Mr. WHERRY. Let me say that I am not for a moment challenging what the Foreign Relations Committee has done or suggesting that it has not worked diligently and hard. Certainly anyone who heard the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] state yesterday that he sat across the table from Mr. Molotov for 213 days and that this treaty was the best he could get, must admire the work the Senator from Michigan has done and is doing, and I am not questioning or challenging it in any way.

Mr. THYE. I listened to the address which was made yesterday by the Senator from Michigan, and it is with that address in mind that I am now asking the Senator from Nebraska what we could hope to accomplish if we had the study of this problem continued for another month or 2 months or 3 months. Unless the Senator from Nebraska has some concrete suggestion to submit, I feel that I am at a loss as to what to do other than to follow the recommendations of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if the Senator from Minnesota will bear with me until I complete my statement, I think I shall answer his questions.

Obviously, the Senate must now decide whether to ratify the treaty or not to ratify it. If the Senate ratifies the treaty and if the treaty subsequently does not bring about the peace we seek to have established in Italy, obviously it would have been better for us not to have ratified the treaty at all.

Insofar as alternatives are concerned, let me say that I am not a member of the Foreign Relations Committee, and I have not suggested any alternatives to ratification of the treaty. However, I know that if Communist infiltration into Italy proceeds, as it seems to me it will under the terms of this treaty, the situation will be no better, insofar as confusion is concerned, 6 months from now, than it will be if we do not ratify the treaty at all.

Let me say that an alternative to ratifying the treaty is the making of a separate peace. That would be difficult to do, of course, inasmuch as Russia is one of the four leading powers involved. But if we tell Russia what we are going to do and what we are not going to do with the same force that the distinguished Senator from Michigan used when he sat across the table from Molotov for 213 days, we might obtain a better settlement from Russia, now that our policy has changed insofar as appeasement is concerned, as compared with what I think our policy was when this treaty was written.

There is another alternative. I am not suggesting that it is the answer, for I am no superman. My job and the job of the Senator from Minnesota is either to vote to ratify the treaty upon its own terms or to vote not to ratify it. If in the opinion of the Senator from Minnesota, ratification of the treaty as it now stands is the proper procedure, certainly he should vote for ratification. I imagine there will be an overwhelmingly large vote in favor of ratification of the treaty. But as a humble Member of this body, it is my duty to evaluate the terms and provisions of the treaty; and if I conclude that in the end the treaty will not accomplish the purposes we seek to have accomplished, then certainly it is my duty now to state how I feel about the treaty and its provisions. I believe that is the first responsibility I have.

Mr. President, personally I am not much alarmed over the possibility that if we do not ratify the treaty, the situation in Italy will become much more out of hand than it is and has been in the absence of a treaty. If we consider and study the reports which have been and still are coming from Italy, it seems to me there can be no doubt that there is confusion there and that the Communists have gone in. But I believe that if this treaty is ratified, the Communists will infiltrate there more than they have already done. If that happens and if, as a result, Italy has a Communist government, the result will be to place Italy much more definitely behind an iron curtain than she would have been if we had proceeded in some other way.

So, as I said a moment ago, I am not suggesting alternatives, and I do not know what is best to be done; but I wish to be sure that if I vote to ratify this treaty, I shall know that ratification of the treaty is the best we can do at the present time. I am raising these points and these questions because I believe it is my duty to do so.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is it a fact that the present status of Italy is that of a belligerent proceeding under armistice terms?

Mr. WHERRY. I think that is approximately correct. Probably I would not interpret the situation in the same way that someone else does, but I think what the Senator has stated is approximately correct—in short, that Italy is now in the situation of a cobelligerent.

Mr. BALDWIN. If that be true, then, if this peace treaty is signed, Italy will attain the status of an independent, free nation, will she not?

Mr. WHERRY. Why does Italy have to attain that status now? If she does not want it, why should we force it upon her?

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not know that she does not want it.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not, either; I wish someone would tell us; but, of course, Italy has to sign the treaty, if it is ratified.

Mr. BALDWIN. Would not her status as a free and independent nation admitted to the United Nations be better for her than her present status as a belligerent living under mere armistice terms?

Mr. WHERRY. That argument has been made before, but in my speech I have several paragraphs about it, and when I reach them I think they will at least elucidate on that point.

Mr. BALDWIN. I did not understand that the Senator was going to cover that point. I shall be glad to subside and wait to hear what he has to say about it.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I realize that in speaking here as one of a very few Senators who apparently are not in total accord with the provisions of the treaty, I am very much in the minority. I realize, too, that the smart thing for a lawyer to do is to say, "Well, what would you do?" Certainly if there is an alternative, we should present it and consider it. I think that is good policy and good procedure and good floor work. I think we should be able to respond to the suggestion that we present an alternative. As I have said, I do not have a panacea for all the ills of Italy; but I am sure that so far as Italy and the infiltration of Communists into Italy are concerned, the situation will not be improved by our ratification of the treaty, rather than by our refusal to ratify it.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, if the Senator from Nebraska will yield to me, let me say to him that he should not feel badly about being in a small minority. If he is correct—and I think he is—he should not feel concerned about being in the minority. Let me recall to his mind that 10 or 11 years ago when the administration was trying to force through the Neutrality Act, only six Members of the Senate opposed it. At that time the administration said the Neutrality Act had to be passed and that peace could be legislated, and all the influence of Mr. Roosevelt was exerted, and all the administration forces and many of the Republican Members of the Senate were joined in urging the enactment of that measure. I said it was wrong, and subsequently it was proved to be wrong. I was one of a small minority—a minority of only six Members of the Senate. The only other member of that group who still is a Member of this body—I refer to the group of six Members of the Senate who voted against passage of the Neutrality Act—is the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. He joined me and four other Senators in opposing the Neutrality Act. We did so because we were sure it was wrong for us to vote for it.

Moreover, let me say that I was one of a very small minority of the Members of the Senate who opposed the sending of scrap iron and steel and war supplies to Japan. In taking that position I was condemned and abused by various persons in the United States, and also I was criticized by various Members of the Senate; but, Mr. President, it has been proved that I was right, even though I was only one of a small minority of Senators who took that position.

So I say to the Senator from Nebraska that if he is right he should not feel badly if he is one of a small group today. If a thing is bad we should not compromise about it. It is not possible to compromise with the devil or with evil. If a thing is wrong we should oppose it; and I say that the Italian treaty is wrong.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I certainly thank the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire. I have known him for many years. On the basis of my experience in public life, I say to the Senate that the Senator from New Hampshire is a man of courage. The observations he has just made not only reassure me, but make me feel that possibly the time will come when it will be found that I was right in opposing ratification of the treaty.

Mr. President, if I may be forgiven a personal observation, let me say that I remember a very long and lonesome afternoon I had a few years ago when the question before the Senate was the confirmation of the nomination of Dean Acheson to be Under Secretary of State. When the debate was concluded, after 2 days, I found myself voting alone against his confirmation. So I know what it is to belong to a very small minority group. I wish to say to the Members of the Senate that the fact that he signed the international air agreements in Chicago, and they had to be repudiated by the United States Senate, convinces me that my opposition to him, as indicated by the vote I cast against him that afternoon, is nearer right today than it ever was before.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Why is it not proper to go ahead and rehabilitate Italian industry, get Italy into a position where she can stand on her own feet, where she can resist with her own resources Communist infiltration, and then sign a peace treaty and turn her loose?

Mr. WHERRY. That is one of the solutions I mentioned in my address.

Mr. EASTLAND. I think it is a proper solution.

Mr. WHERRY. I agree with the distinguished Senator. Senators must make up their minds that, just so surely as the sun rises, if we sign this peace treaty, the Italians will have to have money from the United States of America. Senators may as well make up their minds that, if they make appropriations, they will be used for supplying the materials that will go into factories mortgaged to Russia, where goods will be manufactured which will be sent to Russia as reparations. Why not give Russia the money in the first place? If, for instance, we want to give aid to Greece, which is necessary in order to restore her economy, why extend the aid by the indirect method of giving to Italy hundreds of millions of dollars, and then have it relayed to Greece? If we want to be sure that Greece will get it, we had better give them the relief in the first place.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Senator says that we must lend money to Italy to rehabilitate Italian industry.

Mr. WHERRY. I do not think there is any question about it.

Mr. EASTLAND. The Italian textile industry has been rehabilitated by the United States without the outlay of money simply by the shipment of raw material there. The Italians fabricate it and pay us. That process has resulted in a great market for the products of this country. It has rehabilitated the greatest industry in the Italian economy, and has not cost the United States a penny. I do not see that it is necessary to have a great outlay of money to rehabilitate the Italian economy.

Mr. WHERRY. One point I wanted to raise was that we had done much for Italy through feeding her people. Seventy-three percent of the money that went through the UNRRA organization came from the taxpayers of the United States, and Italy received a great deal of the assistance.

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. DWORSHAK. The Senator from Nebraska has been making a most comprehensive and profound statement on the subject before the Senate. I desire to commend him for his diligence, and the thoroughness with which he has approached the entire issue. I should like to ask him whether he has analyzed the question so as to state in what manner the Truman doctrine may be applied to Italy if the pending treaty shall be ratified. Has the Senator given that matter any consideration or thought?

Mr. WHERRY. I should like to say to the distinguished Senator from Idaho that I have not, but if he cares to have me make an observation, I shall be glad to do so. Perhaps he would like to make a statement first.

Mr. DWORSHAK. No; I am very sincere in making the inquiry, because I was not one of those who supported the proposal to fortify Turkey and Greece in order that they might resist Communist aggression, and I am wondering whether it is consistent to weaken a nation such as Italy in order to apply the reverse logic, so that she may be made less immune, and weakened, and rendered less able to resist the same aggression of the communistic forces of Europe.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation. I would answer in this way: If we ratify this treaty, and the United States moves out of Italy, as will be the case, I am convinced that, as Hungary went behind the iron curtain, the same thing will happen to Italy. Certainly we jeopardize the $300,000,000 investment in Greece and the investment we are making in Turkey, because the Tito government will move into Italy. There is nothing to stop his soldiers moving in there. Under one provision of the treaty they can enter Italy and hunt down fugitives. The first thing we know there will be a wholesale infiltration, and I shall call attention later to the remarks of Tito as they appeared in the press of yesterday or the day before.

It is my belief that this treaty will place Italy behind the iron curtain; and if it does, we will be outflanked, so far as Greece and Turkey are concerned, and we will have lost one of the best military advantages we possibly could have if we maintained our position in Italy.

The only alternative is to give Italy a democratic government, to finance Italy, as we will have to do, and see that Italy remains a democratic country that is favorable to the United States, and not thrown behind the iron curtain and made a satellite of Russia. In that respect the two policies of Truman are in direct contradiction. We are doing the opposite in Italy to what we are attempting to do in Greece and Turkey.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. BROOKS. Does not the Senator feel that, while we are being told by those framing the present foreign policy that we have to send not only money but military missions into Greece and Turkey, it is absolute folly to weaken the military strength of Italy by a treaty and then have to send money to Italy to feed the Italians, and have money go to Russia in the form of materials produced by the labor of Italy?

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Illinois has answered the question raised by the Senator from Idaho very forcefully and more ably than I could have answered it. It is the complete answer to the observation of the distinguished Senator from Idaho.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. Does the Senator think that we should pull out of Italy while conditions there are chaotic, while the people are starving, while they are undernourished, while the factories are shut down, and while the Communist movement is on?

Mr. WHERRY. My answer is that we cannot afford to pull out of Italy and leave ourselves exposed in Greece and Turkey, if we expect to follow the Truman doctrine so far as stopping communism is concerned. If it is right to follow it in one country it is right to do so in others. I say to the distinguished Senator from Minnesota that it is only my opinion, but I have reached the opinion conscientiously, based upon my convictions and on what I can read and learn, that if we ratify this treaty there will be wholesale infiltration into Italy, and if there is, Italy will be placed behind the iron curtain, and if that comes about, we will be outflanked in Greece and Turkey, and our investment to stop communism will be of no avail. That is my position. The distinguished Senator from Illinois has given the answer more ably than I could have given it.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nebraska yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I am very much interested in the statement the Senator has just made, but I am wondering what there is in Italy now to stop the infiltration to which he refers.

Mr. WHERRY. The American Army is in Italy to the extent of about 25,000 men, and so long as we have even a token force there, that will accomplish the purpose. Of course, even 25,000 men could not stop an invasion. We might just as well have 5,000 as 25,000. My theory is that so long as we are advancing money to Turkey and Greece, we had better protect the flank in Italy. If we are going into Greece and Turkey with military missions, we might as well do the same thing in Italy. Let us be consistent in this policy.

Mr. BALDWIN. As I understand the Greco-Turkish situation, what is happening there is that our military mission is helping them with their own armed forces. If Italy had a status as a free and independent nation, and we were extending the Truman doctrine to Italy, we would not be using our troops, but following the same policy.

Mr. WHERRY. With Italy permitted to have only 200,000 soldiers and 25,000 seamen guarding the whole seacoast, how will that avail against Tito, who has an army of 800,000? If we pull out of Italy, the Communists will move in.

Mr. BALDWIN. What would we pull out?

Mr. WHERRY. The prestige of the United States of America is what we would pull out. The point I make is that it seems to me to be senseless to advance loans to Greece and Turkey and then pull out of Italy. It may be said the advances to Greece and Turkey are for rehabilitation, for training personnel, and so on, but I have been told by a high military authority that the money that was advanced to Turkey was to get air bases in Turkey. How are those bases to be protected? If we propose to protect them, how are we going to do it if we lose Italy? If it is right to do that, in Turkey, why do we not do it in Italy? If it is not right, why do we not walk out of all foreign countries? I do not see any difference. I think there should be a consistent policy.

Mr. THYE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. THYE. I may say to the Senator from Nebraska that, as I tried to follow the explanation of the treaty with Italy as it was given to us yesterday by the chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, as I have followed the remarks by the Senator from Nebraska, and as I have tried to visualize the entire question, it seems to me that the troops that are stationed in Italy today are not going to keep out the communistic philosophy. The communistic philosophy is something that cannot be seen; it cannot be touched; it merely exists.

Mr. WHERRY. How is it to be kept out of Greece?

Mr. THYE. The atmosphere that may prevail in Italy will permit the entrance of the Communist, or he will remain outside, depending entirely upon the philosophy of the people. But it will be necessary sometime to begin the negotiation of a treaty. Does the Senator question the judgment of the Secretary of State, General Marshall?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly.

Mr. THYE. The Senator does question it?

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. I am questioning the whole peace treaty.

Mr. THYE. I will say to the Senator that I personally do not at all question the judgment of Secretary Marshall. I do not question his recommendation.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator is perfectly within his rights. The Senator has a perfect right to back up General Marshall. He has a perfect right to back up the Committee on Foreign Relations. The Senator has a perfect right to vote in any way he pleases. I am basing my judgment on what I believe to be right. I think the treaty is not, as it purports to be, a peace treaty. I think that if it is signed and ratified Italy will go behind the iron curtain. That is my judgment. I realize, of course, that the distinguished Senator from Minnesota has a perfect right to set up the judgment of Secretary Marshall over my judgment. If the Senator wants to follow Secretary Marshall he should vote for ratification of the peace treaty. But that does not alter in the least degree my opinion of what this ratification means to the Italian people and what it means to the security of the United States of America, if we want to hold the most strategic place on the Mediterranean—which is Italy. Certainly it does not alter my answer. When the question is asked, "How are we going to prevent the Communists from taking over Greece with the investment we have made?" I repeat, how are we going to do that? Is it through having made them a loan of $300,000,000? Is it supposed that, because of that fact, Greece will not allow a Communist to enter its borders? We shall wait and see. That is what was expected to be the situation in Hungary. What has happened in Hungary is exactly what is likely to happen in Italy.

Mr. EASTLAND. Has General Marshall said that Italy would not admit Communists if this treaty were approved?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not think so. I thought the senior Senator from Michigan said on the floor of the Senate yesterday that he would not predict what might happen in foreign relations for a period of even 5 minutes. I agree with him. It is very difficult to know what will happen.

Mr. EASTLAND. The point of the controversy is that so long as the status quo is maintained, Italy is not going to become communistic.

Mr. WHERRY. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. Then why take the chance?

Mr. WHERRY. That is a proper question. I think Italy is better off in the status quo than she would be if the treaty were ratified today. I think there will be nothing lost, so far as the infiltration of communism is concerned, by waiting until January to see what kind of peace treaty can be written in agreement with Russia.

Furthermore, I may say that the treaty has not been ratified thus far by any country, with the exception of Great Britain. Great Britain has ratified it, and is the only country that has ratified it. Someone will say, "Let us take the lead." That is fine; that is a great thing; but the other countries have not ratified it.

I am told the Italian people do not want this treaty and that, instead of raising their morale, it will lower their morale, if the treaty is ratified. Of course, I cannot bring the authority into the Senate Chamber, but I think probably it is just as good an authority as the newspaperman who was quoted yesterday, who represents the ANSA, from Italy, whose position is comparable to that of an agent of the UP, at Rome. Certainly we cannot rely entirely on the testimony of one man as to what the entire people of Italy think about the ratification of the peace treaty.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. I should like to make one point clear. I think it is the earnest and most sincere desire of every Member of the Senate to do the best thing that can be done for Italy. There are throughout the United States hundreds of thousands, yes, millions of people of Italian origin, who are among our best citizens. They are hard-working. They are industrious. They are practical. They are among our very best people. What bothers me, and the question that it seems to me we must answer, is this: Is the status of Italy, as at present, a better status to permit the regeneration of Italy as a nation than her status would be under a treaty of peace which would make her a free and independent nation, and admit her to the United Nations and to the family of nations? I think that is the question.

Mr. WHERRY. That argument was made yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I think there is a great deal of merit in it. If I were making up a balance sheet, that is one of the things that I would consider as an asset, with respect to the signing of the treaty at this time. I think possibly it is an asset. But I will say to the distinguished Senator from Connecticut that with respect to foreign relations, I should like always to follow the judgment of the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee, who has given so much thought and attention to the subject, and, if I gathered correctly the remarks of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, this treaty is not a satisfactory treaty, and it is hard to determine whether or not it is the best treaty that can be made at this time. I do not know; it is my personal opinion that Italy will not be any worse off in 6 months. Of course, any Senator has a perfect right to say that she will be, and that in 6 months the confusion will be such that it would be impossible to get a treaty. I think that is what the senior Senator from Michigan said; but in my opinion Italy will not be any worse off in 6 months, under the status quo, than she is today, with a token force within her borders which she knows will remain until a satisfactory treaty is signed.

Mr. BALDWIN. What bothers me is, how long that period would be?

Mr. WHERRY. The other signatories have not yet signed the treaty, have they? And then, too, Italy will have to sign it.

Mr. BALDWIN. Someone must make a start.

Mr. WHERRY. The ratification has been started.

Mr. BALDWIN. Does the Senator think that, if we delay the matter, other nations—France, for example—will come forward and sign the treaty?

Mr. WHERRY. I do not know. The Senator can answer that question as well as I can.

Mr. BALDWIN. Does the Senator believe that our help to Italy can be any more effective, if she continues her status as a belligerent?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes; I think that if we continue Italy's status quo, communism will not be so likely to infiltrate the country as it will if the treaty is ratified. I have said that before.

Mr. BALDWIN. Then the Senator maintains that we must keep an army of occupation in Italy indefinitely?

Mr. WHERRY. How many soldiers are in Italy now?

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator said 25,000, and he also said that was an insufficient number.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator from Connecticut will certainly agree with me, will he not?

Mr. BALDWIN. Yes.

Mr. WHERRY. I think all we have in Italy is the prestige of the United States. I think a token force of 5,000 would accomplish just as much as an army of 25,000.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is it not a wise policy to help the Italians to help themselves?

Mr. WHERRY. That is what I am trying to do.

Mr. BALDWIN. Is not that better than trying to do everything for them?

Mr. WHERRY. I am not trying to help put them behind an iron curtain, with a mortgage on their labor, a mortgage on their electric power, and a mortgage on their coal, because of reparations which they must pay for years and years to come.

Mr. BALDWIN. Does the Senator feel that our assistance is going to be any less, if Italy gains the status of a free and independent Nation again, than it is now? Is it not true that if Italy is admitted to the United Nations as a free and independent nation, even under this treaty she will have not only our support but the backing of those friendly to us in the United Nations as well?

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I have answered that question three or four times. The Senator from Connecticut has asked it three or four times, and I agree with him in that respect. If I were going to prepare an inventory I would say that if that were the one thing upon which the decision hinged it would have considerable weight, I do not think there is any question about that. I have answered that question three or four times for the Senator.

There is another fear which I have not heard mentioned. That is the fear of armed invasion and of a civil war inspired and sustained from outside the frontier. We have not heard anything said about that. Yesterday we were told that the treaty does not leave Italy virtually helpless. That statement of mine may not be entirely correct, and I do not want to misquote anyone. But the sense of what was said was that Italy would not be virtually helpless if the treaty were entered into. On that point, however, I should like to say that I beg to differ, and to differ very sharply. I believe it does leave Italy virtually helpless. Throughout the whole Italian Peninsula and the islands of Sicily and Sardinia, the Italian Government is to be permitted only a little over 200,000 men in its land forces. For an immense stretch of seacoast it is to have some 25,000 men in its naval force. These are to be the sole protection against the 600,000 men—and I have been told the number is as high as 800,000—of Tito's standing army. Yesterday, we were told that it is necessary to have the frontiers fixed before any reconstruction of European—specifically Italian—economy can begin. But does this treaty fix any borders? It defines them, yes. But it guarantees them only in the sense that Poland's borders were guaranteed by the Atlantic Charter and Covenant of the League of Nations. It deprives Italy of any force to resist aggression, an aggression that was plainly hinted only yesterday by Tito, who told Bulgarian newsmen that Yugoslavia had suffered injustice in Venezia Giulia. Here are his words reported in the New York Times:

> Trieste has simply been carved out of a whole healthy body * * * We shall have to submit to decisions because we are a member of the United Nations, but that does not mean acceding to such a decision forever.

Those were the words of Tito reported only yesterday.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. CONNALLY. I should like to suggest to the Senator that during the Peace Conference held in Paris, Yugoslavia, through Marshal Tito's representatives there, very bitterly resented what we had agreed upon as to Trieste, and the Yugoslav representatives made a public statement to the effect that they would not sign the treaty. I happened to be on the committee when the statement was made. I made some remark in reply to the Yugoslavs, and told them, "All right, you do not need to sign it. We will get along without that." Subsequently they changed their minds and did sign the treaty. So that Yugloslavia is a party to the treaty, and if she violates it she will incur the penalties and sanctions of the other nations, for Italy will become a member of the United Nations and, of course, she will have recourse in the United Nations against any invasion or aggression.

Mr. WHERRY. Yes. Yet Marshal Tito only yesterday was quoted as having made the statement:

We shall have to submit to decisions because we are a member of the United Nations.

As the Senator from Texas has just stated:

But that does not mean acceding to such a decision forever.

What does that statement mean?

Mr. CONNALLY. We will have to meet that situation when it comes.

Mr. WHERRY. Certainly. It is my opinion that Tito intends now to infiltrate into Italy.

Mr. CONNALLY. We cannot control that situation at this moment. We will have to meet it when it comes but for the present there is no threat.

Mr. WHERRY. It is my opinion that if we sign the treaty and pull out of Italy, then that threat is there. I have tried to make it very clear that in my humble judgment, the threat will then be there. As I stated yesterday, I did not have the privilege of talking to Molotov personally.

Mr. CONNALLY. I am not trying to argue with the Senator.

Mr. WHERRY. I appreciate the Senator's statement.

Mr. CONNALLY. I want the Senator to have the facts.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

The way is open by this treaty for Tito to take an easy path toward revising the decision. The vital Julian passes, which were the ancient bastions of Roman civilization north of the Adriatic Sea, are transferred by this treaty to Tito's Yugoslavia—that is, to the new federation "of free Balkan peoples in a strong monolithic entity," which Tito said yesterday, "is indispensable."

Loss of this vital land defense affects more than Italy. It affects the security of all western Europe, and by that the peace and security of the western world. On that point I can use my own judgment, because I have been to Europe twice recently, and I spent a month last November looking into the situation with which we are now dealing. I think the Senators who have been over there recently and have made observations will agree with me.

Let us not forget that long ago, Lenin, the spiritual master of Stalin, of Tito, of Togliatti—of all those who are vowed to destroy our way of life—declared: "Sooner or later capitalism will commit suicide for profit." By any sane yardstick it is hardly less than suicidal, it seems to me, for us to throw away one of our last defenses in Europe. That is the point we have been arguing this afternoon. As I said, Senators do not have to accept my interpretation, but that is the way I feel about the matter.

How do the territorial clauses slicing up Italy support United States interests? Take Triete, and the Venezia Giulia area, which incidentally is the source for one-third of Italy's coal.

Yugoslav Dictator Tito has just rejected General Marshall's third demand to cease further looting of Italian property in the Trieste, Venezia Giulia, and Istrian zones. Tito's army is now cutting up the former Italian luxury liner Rex and shipping the valuable scrap back to Yugoslavia. In flagrant disregard of our strong protests, Tito has failed to return other Italian vessels pirated in the Adriatic. And, parenthetically, let us not forget that we, in turn, are furnishing Italy with ships which we recognize are needed to restore her economy. Liberty ships are going to Italy to restore her economy.

In view of Tito's rejection of a thrice-repeated American demand to stop stealing Italian property from under the noses of American occupation troops, how can we expect Tito to restrain himself in the future?

If, as many Italians feel, Tito decides, should the Italian Treaty be ratified and our troops withdrawn, to move into the free zone of Trieste, will the United Nations then be ready to take practical action against the aggressor? If they are, and they can do it, all well and good. Then the question which has been asked so many times will be answered: Could the Italian Army, drastically limited by this treaty, stop Tito? Senators can use their own judgment as to that. Are we willing to stop him? Does it serve our interests and our policy to help rehabilitate Italy? If it does, why give away Italian territory where so much of Italy's shipbuilding and other industries, its electric power, its coal, and other resources are found?

It has been said that failure to ratify the treaty will hinder the free flow of goods to and from Italy on a normal parity basis because she is still technically at war. That argument has been made here this afternoon. Thus, it is argued we cannot legally enter into a commercial agreement for broader mutual exchange.

Those who have read the hearings before the Foreign Relations Committee know that ratification is not the only—or indeed the most intelligent—road to restoration of normal relations between the United States and Italy. A suggestion made in testimony by former Assistant Secretary of State Adolph Berle recalled the American precedent following World War I when the state of war between the United States and Germany was ended by a joint resolution of Congress.

Under this precedent, the way is clear to postpone final action until after Congress reconvenes in January of 1948, while terminating our present outmoded state of war with Italy. I think the problem could be dealt with in that way, and then Italy would be in the condition the Senator from Connecticut thinks desirable, with the exception that the treaty would not be ratified, but by joint resolution what is necessary could be accomplished.

For the life of me, however, I cannot help but feel that the so-called technical state of war with Italy is just so much diplomatic doubletalk, in view of the fact that we recognized her co-belligerency some three years ago and shortly thereafter exchanged ambassadors.

Fear has been expressed that such action as I have indicated would be regarded as unilateral action on our part in violation of the United Nations agreement. It has been suggested that Communist propaganda would tear to shreds any further concept of American democratic good faith in foreign agreements.

The facts are that the Italian Peace Treaty itself violates every single clause of the Atlantic Charter, which is the essence of the United Nations declaration; and that declaration has been repeatedly cited by the proponents of ratification. Yet I think it is really the best argument against ratification.

As for the question of American good faith, the people of Italy and of the world know that the United States Senate must pass upon all treaties to which our country adheres, even though some Americans seem to overlook that fact. There can be no breach of faith until after a treaty has been ratified by the Senate, so the allegations seem to me to be inconsistent with our known constitutional procedures.

My final point, and one which I hope will be a revelation to those who have repeatedly stated that the Italian people themselves actually want ratification, concerns a major consideration in our ultimate decision.

Again quoting the distinguished Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG], yesterday he read from a letter addressed to him by Francesco Gasperini, bureau chief in the United States of the Italian semiofficial news agency ANSA. In that letter it was stated that "the Italian people need ratification badly."

I should like to quote a paragraph from the letter which was inserted in the RECORD by the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I am quoting the words of the writer of the letter. As I understand his official position, he is the representative of ANSA, which is a news agency similar to the United Press, the International News Service, or the Associated Press. He recently came to New York as the agent of ANSA in this country and no doubt has a considerable concept of what the Italian people feel and believe. I quote his statement:

I am not authorized to speak in the name of the Italian people—

I do not mean to intimate that the Senator from Michigan stated that he was. In fact, he stated to the contrary, that he was not entitled to speak for the Italian people, and that he offered the letter only as the personal observation of this individual. However, the letter implies that the Italian people want ratification.

I am not authorized to speak in the name of the Italian people, but I know for sure that I am interpreting the feeling of all, or almost all, Italians who have our country's destiny at heart, and I know how the overwhelming majority of the members of our Government and of the Constituent Assembly feel in this matter.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Three months ago—I think it was on March 2—the Committee on Foreign Relations received a communication from the Constituent Assembly after Italy had signed the treaty, in which it bitterly criticized the terms of the treaty. It certainly could not be said to be asking for its ratification. The communication ended with a general plea for American support in the postwar reconstruction era. I was under the impression that that letter was in the committee records, but the committee records do not go back that far. I am giving the Senator this information because otherwise I feel that an erroneous interpretation may be drawn from the incident.

Mr. WHERRY. I will say to the distinguished Senator that that subject is a part of my prepared speech. I was about to ask the Senator with respect to the memorandum which came from the Constituent Assembly.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The statement was given out at the time it was received. It was presented to the committee. When the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] asked me to locate it earlier today, I was unable to do so. Later I placed it in the RECORD, and it is available.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the distinguished Senator. The remarks which I am about to make have to do with that subject. I have been given a copy of the original letter sent to the President pro tempore of the Senate. I could not find it in the RECORD. I called the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. EASTLAND] and everyone else I could think of because I thought that information ought to be included in the RECORD. I thought there might be some reason for the statement, and I was about to ask the distinguished Senator if he had received such a memorandum from the Constituent Assembly, and if that would not be conclusive evidence as to how the Italian people feel about ratification of the treaty.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, may I comment further?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I think that is evidence of the official attitude. I think the official attitude obviously must be that attitude. I would differentiate between the official attitude and the unofficial attitude, although anyone's guess is justified on either side of the question.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator for his observation. If he does not mind, I wish he would remain in the Chamber because I shall deal with that subject in the final part of my remarks. I should like to clear up that question for the RECORD.

Getting back to the letter which came from the newsman in New York, it was placed in the RECORD. It was referred to with great force and eloquence by the distinguished minority leader [Mr. BARKLEY]. I do not wish to misquote him or be guilty of an excessive statement, but from what the distinguished minority leader said, I would interpret his remarks as saying, in effect, "Here is a letter from a man from Italy. He knows how the Italian people feel about this question." I respectfully invite the attention of Senators to the words of the distinguished Senator from Michigan, who stated that this man did not represent the Italian Government, but that he was only the representative of a news agency. His statement reflected only his personal observation. Of course, on that basis, we appraise it for what it is worth. However, in view of the very forceful statement of the minority leader, I wish to stamp indelibly on the minds of Senators the fact that this man does not represent the Italian people. He has no official mandate.

Mr. VANDENBERG. The Senator from Michigan made no pretense to the contrary.

Mr. WHERRY. I am not saying so. But the statement of the minority leader was very forceful. I would not want anyone who had not read the letter or the explanation to infer from the remarks of the minority leader that this man was an official representing the people of Italy. I think that point ought to be emphasized. It is already so stated in the RECORD, and I very much appreciate the fair attitude of the distinguished Senator from Michigan when he offered the letter for the RECORD.

Mr. President, I have before me a document which I believe is far more expressive of the will of the Italian people with respect to the treaty before us than is the statement of any self-appointed spokesman, no matter who he is. I refer to a communication sent last March, as the distinguished Senator from Michigan has already said, by the Italian Constituent Assembly to the United States Senate—in other words, from an elected legislative body in Italy to its counterpart in the United States.

I do not believe that this document has ever been made public. I understand that some comment was made in the press with respect to it; but so far as any release by the Foreign Relations Committee is concerned, it was not made public until this afternoon.

Mr. VANDENBERG. It was made available to the press on the day it was presented to the committee.

Mr. WHERRY. I am glad to have that information, because I understood that there had been some comment in the press to the effect that the document itself had not been released or that its provisions had not been called to the attention of Members of the Senate. However, I am glad to accept the statement of the Senator from Michigan relative to its publication.

It is signed by the Honorable Terracini, President of the Italian Constituent Assembly, and addressed to the President of the United States Senate. Though Terracini is a Communist, and therefore in favor of ratification, he was forced by majority vote to dispatch the communication, pleading, in the name of the elected representatives of the Italian people, that this treaty be rejected.

Here is a Communist in a legislative body—the head of it—forced to sign this memorandum which I am now giving to the Senate of the United States, having a copy of it in my possession. It reads as follows:

> The Italian Constituent Assembly, elected by the votes of a nation which has been restored to liberty and democracy by the heroism of the Allies and by the sacrifices of its own sons, has solemnly charged me with the duty of appealing to the representatives of the American people.
> The Italian people who, in the final victory against fascism made a contribution of men and faith recognized by the whole world, asks that the peace be framed justly so that we may repair our ruins, reconstruct our national life, and take part freely in the progress of the world. The Italian people asks that the harsh injustice found in many clauses of the treaty be not allowed to hinder us in our regeneration—a regeneration which will be made impossible if our freedom and our integrity as a nation are not respected. It asks that the arbitrary mutilation of our territory be annulled, together with the humiliating terms regarding our army, air force, and navy, which shared heroically in the final struggle for the common victory. It asks also, that the insupportable economic and financial penalties (reparations) be lightened.
> The ties of blood which bind the United States and Italy, and the continuing proofs of sympathy given to Italy throughout the years by the people of the United States, as well as those recently shown the Head of our Government, assures the Italian Constituent Assembly that the American people—champions of justice and liberty among nations who fought for the triumph of those principles—will listen sympathetically to this appeal, and will do its utmost, in keeping with the principles laid down by the United Nations and by peaceful agreements between interested nations, to bring about a revision of the conditions of the peace.
> TERRACINI,
> President of the Italian Constituent Assembly.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WHERRY. I yield.

Mr. BALDWIN. The Senator just mentioned revision of the conditions of the treaty?

Mr. WHERRY. Yes.

Mr. BALDWIN. As I understand the United Nations Charter, if Italy were admitted as a nation to the United Nations organization, under the charter she could make application for revision of some of these conditions?

Mr. WHERRY. I think the Senator is correct. But does the Senator think that that will be done if we sign this treaty?

Mr. BALDWIN. I do not think it can be done unless the treaty is signed.

Mr. WHERRY. The time to revise the terms of the treaty is before it is signed. It is like making any other kind of a contract. Here is a statement from the head of the Italian Constituent Assembly, a legislative assembly comparable to the Congress of the United States, asking us to revise the terms of the treaty before we sign it. The treaty has only one signatory now, and that is Great Britain. If we want to keep faith with the people of Italy, who do not want the treaty ratified until the revisions are made, the time to make them is before we put our name on the dotted line.

Mr. BALDWIN. I want to assure the Senator that I am just as sincere in my desire and purpose to do the best thing for the Italian people as is the Senator from Nebraska, or anyone else

Mr. WHERRY. Oh, of course, I understand that.

Mr. BALDWIN. I think the Senator will concede that.

Mr. WHERRY. I would like to have the RECORD show that I know of no one who is more sincere in his work than is the distinguished Senator from Connecticut.

The time to make a revision of a contract or any other document is before the names are signed to the dotted line. Once our name is placed there it will be terrifically difficult to revise it.

Mr. BALDWIN. I am wondering what would be the machinery for revising it now, other than a repudiation of the treaty and going all over it again. I do not understand the argument of the Senator. I am trying to find light on the subject to help me to determine how I shall cast my vote tomorrow. I am wondering if Italy's position as a member of the United Nations would not better enable her to reestablish herself and have revisions made in the treaty than if we were to throw the treaty to one side. I say to the Senator that I do not like it; I wish we could have done better for Italy. But if we throw the treaty to one side and trust to a complete series of renegotiations——

Mr. WHERRY. I think it would require renegotiation if we revise the treaty; I think there is no doubt about that. If the Senator feels that it would be better to go the other way, to sign the treaty and then revise it, that is one way to go, and we have a perfect right to do it. But my opinion is that we had better revise it now if we ever expect to have it revised, because once the United States places its name on the dotted line I think it will be very doubtful that we can get any revision otherwise. That is merely my opinion.

Mr. BALDWIN. I asked the question of the Senator because I know he has made a very earnest and very deep study of the whole question. The answer to my question would be that if Italy were a member of the United Nations she could take that course?

Mr. WHERRY. That is my interpretation; and I think the Senator from Michigan would agree with me in that statement.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Pardon me. I did not hear the colloquy.

Mr. WHERRY. The procedure would be available, and the treaty could be revised.

Mr. BALDWIN. If the Senator will yield further, I want to say to him that he has been very generous in allowing all these interruptions.

Mr. WHERRY. My patience does not compare with that of the distinguished Senator from Michigan. I realize that yesterday and many times in the past he has labored and sweated—if the Senate does not mind that word—when he gets up and I ask him questions. There is no Member of the Senate who admires him more than do I; I should like to follow him on questions of foreign policy, because he is a student of the subject. In this instance I have done my level best to do so, as I have on other occasions. Possibly I take things too seriously; I have been told that I do; but I want the Senator to know that I have been utterly sincere in my conclusions, with what knowledge I have, and I want to be just as patient as the distinguished Senator from Michigan has been, and even more so, because I realize that some of the questions I have asked have been very elementary, and I suppose he feels that all of us should know the elementary things. Yet there are many complications involved and there has been much said that was unsatisfactory.

I have been over there, as I have stated. I went over there for another reason. I paid my own expenses. I do not want to emphasize that fact, but I went over because I was interested in food and in the rehabilitation not only of Italy but of Germany and Austria. I spent considerable time in Europe. No one has the answers to all the questions involved. I certainly agree with the distinguished Senator from Michigan that it is very difficult to get the answers. As I understand, he takes the position, as does the Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BALDWIN] that this is the best treaty we can get at this time and that we had better take it and meet the other hurdles as we come to them. As I said on the floor of the Senate this afternoon, that is the way in which the great majority will see this peace treaty. But, personally, I should like to support the motion of the distinguished Senator from Arkansas. I should like to see his motion agreed to. I do not want to be placed in the position that because I support the motion I am trying to destroy the treaty. I have the feeling that if we wait we shall get a better treaty than we have at this time; and I do not think we would jeopardize the position of the Italian people any more than it has been jeopardized. I may be absolutely wrong in that position, but that is my judgment. I have done the best I could with the light I have had.

The other way is to go ahead and vote for the treaty on the theory that it is the best that we can get. Certainly the work which was done in scaling down reparations was an admirable job done by the men who sat there and dealt with Mr. Molotov.

In that connection I want to pay tribute to the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] and all those associated with them. I suspect they did a better job than could any like number of persons have done in the same situation. But even though they have done the best they could, somehow I have the feeling in my heart—and I cannot get it out—that we should not ratify the treaty at this time. I should like to have action on it postponed until we see if things will not work out for a better treaty for Italy so that she will not take the chance of being placed behind the iron curtain and lose the things she fought for when she became our ally in the war.

I hope that I shall not be misunderstood. I am just as sincere about the matter as anyone could be. I deeply appreciate the statement of the senior Senator from Michigan that it is an individual matter. Certainly there is no politics connected with it. We have a bipartisan foreign policy.

I voted for the United Nations largely upon the representations and statements made by the Senator from Michigan and the Senator from Texas, and no one has been more anxious to see it succeed than have I. I did not vote in the first instance for UNRRA, because I felt that we should distribute our food direct to the people in Europe. After the organization was once set up I voted for the appropriations every time the question arose. I thought it was a mistake, and certainly over the years it has proved to be a mistake, because all of us agree that the way to feed them is to feed them directly through their own governmental agencies. But in the main I have supported it.

I wish the Senate to know that it takes a great deal of courage to stand on this floor and in any way take a position opposite to that which is taken by the distinguished Senator from Michigan. For that reason, Mr. President, it seems to me that a Senator who is in the minority should be given due credit for having the courage to take the position I have taken, even though his judgment may not be the judgment of other Senators who, being in the majority, will vote for ratification of the treaty.

Mr. President, I should like to say something off the record, but that cannot be done in the Senate, so I shall proceed along another line.

Mr. BALDWIN. Mr. President, I should like to say that I do not think anyone questions the courage or sincerity of the Senator from Nebraska. I think that statement should appear in the RECORD.

Mr. WHERRY. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, I interrupted my remarks in reference to the memorandum to which I have called attention. It bears a signature which is comparable to that of the President of the United States. Mr. President, if a point is made—and it was made—as to how the people of Italy feel about this matter, I think that memorandum, which comes from an important governmental body in Italy, more truly reflects the feelings of the Italian people than do the personal observations of a newspaperman or the statements contained in a news article coming from Italy. That is my opinion. I think we should pay attention to the sentiments and views expressed in that memorandum, because I think it is clear that those persons are pleading with the United States Senate to understand their viewpoint, and I think it is clear that they are pleading with the Senate not to ratify this treaty.

In conclusion, Mr. President, let me state that the following sentiment was reiterated by Italy's present Foreign Minister, Count Carlo Sforza, only last month when he declared for the public record:

> Never in act, word, or written document has the Italian Government sought to say or to imply that it favored ratification of the onerous peace treaty.

He is the Foreign Minister of Italy. We are speaking of evidence now. On the one hand, we have a letter from a newspaperman who says the people of Italy want the treaty to be ratified, and that newspaperman is a Communist; that is what is said about him, and I think I can prove that, if proof is desired. On the other side of the ledger, we have the expressed sentiment of the legislative body of Italy which is comparable to the Senate of the United States, and it is pleading with Members of the United States Senate not to ratify the treaty.

Let me read again to the Senate the sentiment of the Italian Foreign Minister:

> Never in act, word, or written document has the Italian Government sought to say or to imply that it favored ratification of the onerous peace treaty.

Furthermore, he warned the Italian people against the illusion that Italy's eventual membership in the United Nations could change the hardships resulting from this treaty.

It is admitted even by those favoring ratification that efforts to revise the treaty through the United Nations or otherwise could be started immediately the treaty is ratified. To this I say: Why do we have to make a patient sick in order to cure him? And can we cure him? It is a fact that once these treaties are ratified, none of them can be peacefully revised without the full consent of all the signatories, and that would be a terrific job.

Mr. President, I think there should be no further doubt in the mind of any Senator as to the real sentiment of the Italian people regarding this treaty.

There should be very little doubt, it seems to me, as to how the true interests of the Government and people of the United States can best be served in the matter at hand.

Mr. President, once again I wish to say, in concluding my remarks, that I have spoken independently as a Senator, and that I have done so, as set forth by the distinguished Senator from Michigan, in accordance with what I believe to be my duty; and I have arrived at these conclusions individually because I feel that a postponement of this treaty for the period which has been suggested would provide the very solution for which the Italian people are pleading tonight. I think that to do so would place the American people in a better position in the Mediterranean area insofar as concerns the carrying out of the Truman philosophy and program in Italy, as well as in Greece, Turkey, and elsewhere.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, I wish to suggest that as soon as I can obtain recognition tomorrow, I expect to address the Senate on the pending question.

Mr. VANDENBERG. Mr. President, I am very happy that the able Senator from Texas has given that notice. Let me say that in the unanimous-consent agreement, there is nothing which would require a division of the time tomorrow during the further consideration of the treaty. It seems to me there should be at least a voluntary effort to divide the time tomorrow as evenly as possible. So I say to Senators that so far as the President pro tempore of the Senate is concerned, he will undertake voluntarily to divide the time tomorrow, before 2 o'clock, between the proponents and the opponents.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Senator from Michigan for that announcement, because several Senators have stated to me that they would like to have time tomorrow to speak on the treaty, and I knew that the unanimous-consent agreement did not provide for a division of the time.

Will the Senator from Michigan allot the time for both sides?

Mr. VANDENBERG. Yes; I shall undertake to do so for both sides.

Mr. WHERRY. I assure the Senator that we have the utmost confidence in him and we shall be glad to have him divide and allot the time for both sides.

Mr. VANDENBERG. I thank the Senator.

RECESS

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, if there is nothing further to come before the Senate at this time, I move that the Senate take a recess until tomorrow at noon.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 5 o'clock and 57 minutes p. m.) the Senate, as in executive session, took a recess until tomorrow, Thursday, June 5, 1947, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

WEDNESDAY, JUNE 4, 1947

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Again, our Heavenly Father, the morning light has broken and Thy mercy has embraced us; surely Thy goodness endures forever. We praise Thee that Thou dost make known Thy loving kindness; while all earthly things are transient, we are grateful for the blossoming in the wilderness, untouched and unsmitten. The richest treasures of life are invisible and known only to the human heart, whose gifts cannot be weighed, measured, or counted.

In our contention against evil, O Lord, quicken every laggard step, every faltering heart and hesitant mind, and give triumph to courage and the sense of justice born of goodness. Cleanse our minds and purge our lips from all irreverent and evil speaking, and may we be as prophets rising above confusion, pointing the way that was hallowed by our fathers, who served and died to keep men free. O direct us until our consciences accept the holiness of Thy law and we become united with the purpose of Thy holy will.

Through Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Frazier, its legislative clerk, announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 1) entitled "An act to reduce individual income-tax payments."

THE SUGAR SITUATION

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. VURSELL. Mr. Speaker, I have been looking into the sugar situation a little, and I find there is an immense amount of sugar in the warehouses and in the refineries, in many instances more than they are able to take care of. I also find that the sugar situation is much better than it was last year, that they are expecting a considerable increase in imports from Cuba and other countries in the next few months. Taking these facts into consideration, I take this time to suggest to the Department of Agriculture and to those who have charge of allocation and distribution of sugar that they look into this matter and allow an extra 10 or 15 pounds per capita to the home canners, to take effect not later than July 1, and not wait until it is too late. With the sugar situation as it now stands, I urge the Department of Agriculture to take early action to provide for this extra canning sugar. In order that we may preserve and keep from waste millions of pounds of food, I think something ought to be done by the Department of Agriculture for the home canners of the country and to save all food available rather than to allow it to go to waste.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

GREECE AND TURKEY

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the late lamented Greek-Turk aid bill there were many of us who contended that matter should have been referred to the United Nations for action. Much to my surprise, today I find that one of the distinguished delegates to United Nations, Mr. VANDENBERG, rose in great wrath and denounced the action of the Communists in Hungary in taking over that Government. In the Greek-Turkish matter Mr. VANDENBERG said the United Nations was not equipped to act. But yesterday that distinguished gentleman said that the United Nations can and may be called upon. Mr. Speaker, what kind of consistency is this? Mr. VANDENBERG has jumped from the frying pan into the fire. If this is what is called a bipartisan foreign policy, I want none of it.

I am seeking light because I want to know if the United Nations should act for Hungary why is it not good also for the United Nations to act in Greece and Turkey?

I would like an answer to that question.

DEATH OF THE OPA

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend my remarks and include an editorial.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GAVIN. Mr. Speaker, it is with deep regret that I arise to announce that a significant event of great importance took place last Saturday, May 31—an event that received but little recognition and no comment. That was the official death of the OPA.

During its lifetime the OPA commanded great attention and played an important part in the economic structure of America.

It has gone to its reward, along with the NRA, the OWI, and the Office of Culture and Information. They, too, enjoyed great prestige during their short but exciting existence.

The OPA will always be something to be remembered but not talked about, and its passing can be properly recorded under the head of public improvements. Farewell.

[From the Bristol (Pa.) Courier of June 2, 1947]

DEATH OF THE OPA

Officially, Saturday marked the death of OPA—Office of Price Administration—which was by all odds the most controversial and least satisfactory of the many agencies created for the war.

The OPA was in constant hot water, during and after the war emergency, both because it came closely in contact with the private lives of American citizens and because so much of its activities failed to get the expected results.

In looking back at the OPA, future generations will want to ask many questions. This is especially true if the present drift toward a Third World War continues. Then the problem will rise, inevitably, whether to re-create OPA or try something different.

In evaluating OPA let's go back to first principles. The question often is heard, "Was there really need for price controls and rationing, or were they simply used as excuses for putting political favorites on the pay roll?"

The answer to that question is not simple. If it must be answered "yes" or "no," then "yes" has to be the reply, but for very definite reasons, which OPA itself seems never to have understood.

Rationing was necessary, in some form or other, for two reasons: First, to assure fair distribution of scarce items; second, as an evidence of good faith to our foreign allies, who were "up against it" for lack of many items abundant here and dependent upon our supplies for their survival.

Pearl Harbor cut the "rubber life line" of the United States. It also disrupted the Nation's sugar supply. Need for rapid production of arms and ammunition gobbled up our stocks of many other commodities—tin, copper, etc.

Price control, under the circumstances, was almost inescapable. Had Uncle Sam and private purchasers gone into price competition with each other for these items, "profiteers" would have tried to corner the market, and there would have been turmoil and extravagant waste.

The second basic question which had to be answered when rationing and price control were decided to be necessary was how these regulations were to be administered. There was a definite choice in the matter. During the First World War this was done by about 90 percent voluntary effort, and public morale was built up to make the rules largely self-enforcing. This was one way to do the job.

The other way was to copy the European invention of the past two generations—what is called bureaucracy. That meant the creation of a vast Federal agency which would have, in effect, the power to make its own rules (legislative authority); the power to enforce its rules (executive authority); and the power to determine whether its employees or the unhappy civilians who complained were in the right (judicial authority).

Widespread as bureaucracy has become in the Federal Government, it is and always will be contrary to the intention of the Constitution and therefore repugnant to the American sense of how the country ought to be run.

First announcements of OPA, back in the defense period, were carefully worded to give two impressions, both of which presently developed to be fraudulent. One was that the voluntary phase of enforcement would be emphasized. The other was that the power back of the controls would be not new powers in the hands of Uncle Sam but the so-called police power of the States, once assumed to be their most important sovereign right under the Constitution.

States organized the OPA. Local boards were created which, at the start-off, had wide discretion to meet unusual problems.

Presently, however, the whole structure was taken over out of Washington. Directives of such complexity that no two attorneys could agree on their meaning were dumped on the local boards. Those were the days of the famous order that no more female steers should be slaughtered for beef. A host of bright young college graduates, still damp behind the ears, and most of them with conspicuous political contacts in the New Deal, moved in. They had a field day. No one knew what they were trying to do—not even themselves. If something worked out a way they disliked, they simply passed a new rule—retroactively, in many cases.

State cooperation in the program was blasted by the creation of districts—Pennsylvania, for example, was suddenly being run out of New York, along with New Jersey, Delaware, Maryland, and the District of Columbia. Those in charge knew less than nothing about the internal problems in this State. For a time there was uncertainty in the chain of command. Some Washington instructions said the States were still in charge, with the New York office purely advisory in capacity; others that the New York office was in the saddle. There was confusion about the status of the Third Corps Army Area, which had different geographic boundaries, and some authority over many of the questions.

The real troubles of OPA dated from this take-over, which had all the earmarks of a political coup by the New Deal bureaucrats at Washington. Local board members resigned singly and en masse. Voluntary help—school staffs, unpaid recruits from patriotic organizations, etc.—were presently displaced for a gigantic paid staff hired by some mysterious hocus-pocus which, however it worked, never drew any protests from Democratic campaign committees.

Scandals, charges of favoritism, and hints of corrupt practices began at once. Industrial concerns soon found it expedient to employ Washington representatives. Building materials were much too scarce for the ordinary person to build a home or enlarge his building, yet available for those with the right contacts to build racing tracks, new taprooms, and the like.

Those who at the top took over the voluntary system of price controls and rationing were mainly disciples of socialism and the new order. Presently it developed that the controls were to be used in an effort to put across a social revolution along communistic lines.

Price controls were used not to prevent outright profiteering, as at first intended, but to redistribute wealth—just as Marx and Lenin and Stalin preached. Presently any profit was being construed as mischievous, and prices were held down to prevent them.

Thereby arose another great stumbling block on which OPA tripped. It presently became obvious that the things which OPA concentrated on became scarcer and scarcer, while other articles, which OPA had overlooked, continued available at prices which, considering the rise in all costs, were not exorbitant.

The shortages in sugar, gasoline, and rubber—three of the most disturbing scarcities—might have been relieved within a year to a year and a half, under efficient management. They continued throughout the war, and were worse after a couple of years of OPA than when OPA was created.

OPA went into politics, trying to keep Congress from clamping down on its abuses. Impressive publicity staffs were hired, radio orators were put to work, there were tie-ins with liberal groups of all kinds, including the bosses of the CIO and PAC. For months the country seethed with the OPA issue. Congress and the people were determined to do away with it at the first opportunity; the OPA itself preached, over and again, the idea of how much it would like to be made a permanent part of our Government.

About a year ago, the OPA fight broke wide open. The CIO chiefs talked President Truman into vetoing a compromise bill decontrolling OPA over a period of months. After several weeks in which there was no OPA, a new OPA bill was passed. This the President hailed as about what he wanted, and he signed it; but it was so hopelessly muddled, both in the law itself and its enforcement, that shortly before the November election President Truman, in desperation, wiped the bulk of the controls out of existence.

Since then OPA has operated on borrowed time. Its once gigantic staff has largely been reabsorbed in congenial jobs in other, less controversial Federal bureaus. Its few remaining powers have been parcelled out elsewhere.

Saturday, officially, it came to an end.

And with its passage dies the bureau which made the most serious and hardest fight yet attempted to throw the American free economy into a collectivist dictatorship.

Its epitaph can be short and sweet: "Good riddance."

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JOHNSON of Indiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. AUCHINCLOSS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an address by Mr. HERTER, of Massachusetts.

Mr. LATHAM asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. PLUMLEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. TWYMAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances.

THE STRANGE WAYS OF THE WAR ASSETS ADMINISTRATION

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, a manufacturer from the district I represent wrote me as follows on May 26 with regard to sales methods of War Assets Administration:

When our representative was down in Philadelphia a few days ago for the opening of bids, they were offering for sale buckles and slides. One bidder interested only in the buckles offered $2.85; another bidder offered $1.90 for the buckles and slides.

Inasmuch as the $2.85 bid was not in accordance with the proposal, it was thrown out and the award made to the $1.90 bidder; however, the higher bidder protested with the result that all bids were canceled and a new invitation resulted in the lot being sold—that is, both buckles and slides—at $2 per thousand.

Apparently, Mr. Speaker, we hope for too much when we hope for horse sense on the part of the bureaucrats charged with the administration of our governmental functions.

The same constituent has drawn my attention to the fact that the Louisville, Ky., office of War Assets Administration advertised a sale to open on May 23, 1947, of an item of hardware at the very moment when the Army Quartermaster Depot at Philadelphia was receiving bids on a lot of 1,000,000 of an identical article.

Alas, the poor taxpayer.

AMENDING VETERANS' PREFERENCE ACT OF 1944

Mr. ALLEN of Illinois, from the Committee on Rules, reported the following privileged resolution (H. Res. 231, Rept. No. 512), which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 1389) to amend the Veterans' Preference Act of 1944. That after general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and continue not to exceed 1 hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, the bill shall be read for amendment under the 5-minute rule. At the conclusion of the reading of the bill for amendment the Committee shall rise and report the same to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. HORAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include a statement I made before the Committee on Public Works this morning.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

Mr. BOGGS of Louisiana asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, to include in one an editorial appearing in the New Orleans States, and in the other an address by Mr. Salon B. Turman.

Mr. RIVERS asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the National Oil Marketers Association.

MILITARY POSTS

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'TOOLE. Mr. Speaker, any effort to take strength from or lower the efficiency of the War Department at the present time would be the most serious mistake that this Congress could make. I believe every effort should be made to make the Army a more formidable group than it is at the present moment. This can be done and at the same time a greater degree of efficiency can be achieved by the suggestion that I am about to make.

Let the War Department immediately abolish the hundreds of obsolete military posts and Coast Artillery installations that no longer serve any useful purpose. Let the entire Army in the United States be placed in five or six now available gigantic cantonments where they could be grouped and trained as brigades and divisions. Under this plan Quartermaster Corps, Field Artillery, Infantry, Engineers, Signal Corps, and other branches which comprise the modern Army could train and work together. This is not possible now. In some cases battalions of the same regiment are separated by as much as 200 miles and never receive an opportunity to work and drill with the other groups comprising their outfit. It would prepare officers of the upper level for the task of handling large numbers of men. It would make possible the everyday study of tactical problems, and it would above all develop a feeling of strength and a far better esprit de corps than exists today. At the same time that a finer training was being given to our Army, the taxpayers would be saved hundreds of millions of dollars a year because of the concentration of these forces and the abandonment of useless posts.

INDIA'S FREEDOM

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. CELLER. Mr. Speaker, fast and furious history is being made in India. Great Britain has offered a solution to the political difficulties of India and has suggested the division of India into two countries, Pakistan and Hindustan, the latter to comprise most of the 310,000,000 Hindus and the former to comprise of approximately 90,000,000 or less Moslems. It is interesting to note, and very creditable also, that the Indian leaders have accepted the solution, that Britain will get out and transfer power to the Indians this summer. Leaders Nehru for the Hindus and Singh for the Sikhs and Jinnah for the Moslems have all shown great statesmanship in the acceptance of this latest British proposal. It should prevent much shedding of blood. We are vastly interested in the 400,000,000 Indians. There are great possibilities of enhanced trade between the United States and India, and it points up the need for the setting up of a commission to consummate eventually a treaty of peace, commerce, and navigation with either one India or two Indias. We have sent an Ambassador to India, which indicates our vast interest in this great domain, and if there are to be two countries, we may have to send another Ambassador. But, in any event, we should focus our attention to a great degree upon India, because we are losing much if we do not do so.

We can gain, India can gain from a better mutual understanding—both can gain culturally, spiritually, commercially, and economically.

Too little, unfortunately, is known by each of the other. Most Americans still think of India as a land of minarets and performers of the rope trick. Indians in the main look upon Americans as rough cowboys and bathing beauties.

Although I deem Pakistan a mistake, yes, and a rank appeasement of Jinnah; if that is what India wants, let her have it. In my humble opinion Pakistan and Hindustan will only deepen the cleavage between Hindus and Moslems. Pakistan would roughly comprise the Provinces of Bengal and Assam in the northeast and Punjab Sind, Baluchistan, and North-West Frontier—all in the northwest. Thus Pakistan would be like two arms without a body. It could not exist as a nation. Then again the Hindus and Sikhs are demanding and will get a further partition in these Provinces, especially Bengal and Punjab. Thus Pakistan will be a truncated Pakistan. But if that is the way to peace, so be it. India, all of it, has our blessings.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. KENNEDY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, and include in one three resolutions from his district supporting the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill, and in the other a letter from the Cambridge Committee for a Living Wage.

Mr. BUCHANAN asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial from the New York Times.

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR., asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an article by George Sokolsky appearing in today's Times-Herald in connection with the proposed increase in the postal rates.

Mr. ANGELL asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

Mr. REES asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper statement.

Mr. SHAFER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances and in one to include a magazine article.

Mr. HOPE asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include a newspaper article.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday afternoon I was granted permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD and include certain extraneous matter. I stated that it exceeded the two pages of the RECORD permitted, but was granted permission to insert it regardless of that fact. However, the Public Printer informs me that I have to submit the amount, which is $449.67. I ask unanimous consent that this article may be printed regardless of the fact that it exceeds the limit.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, notwithstanding the cost, the extension may be made.

There was no objection.

TERMINAL-LEAVE PAYMENTS

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

Mr. DORN. Mr. Speaker, I hold in my hand today an armed forces leave bond which was issued to me as an enlisted man of the armed forces after the late war, the same as was issued to other enlisted personnel of the armed forces. Many of you have probably never seen one of these bonds but it is, as so stated on the back, nonnegotiable and nonassignable except to the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to be used in payment of premiums, loans, and interest on national service life insurance.

I wish to compliment this House on passing a bill last year to make these bonds payable in cash, and am sorry the other body did not see fit to concur.

Many of our soldiers are now going through a period of readjustment. They are in school, or making an attempt to get started in business or to establish a home. It is very important at this time that they have the use and benefit of these bonds because they feel, and I feel, that the bonds will be needed more right now than 5 years from now, and those who wish to save the bonds will be permitted to do so but the average American GI feels that this whole matter of terminal leave pay was a discrimination against him and a violation of the principles for which he fought. They were led to believe that they were fighting for democracy, for equal rights for all people, and against discrimination in any form.

These GI's feel that it is the duty of this Congress to make these bonds negotiable in order that if they so desired they may obtain cash which they can use to make payments on furniture in their homes, on their homes, or to be used in furthering their education or getting started on some farm. I believe that the GI's of America have a just cause to carry before this Congress and I think these bonds should be made negotiable now. Therefore, I advocate the passage during this session of the Congress of the Rogers bill, H. R. 3521.

SPECIAL ORDER GRANTED

Mr. HUGH D. SCOTT, JR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that on Monday next, at the conclusion of the legislative program of the day and following any special orders heretofore entered, I may be permitted to address the House for 20 minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

TWO GREAT VICTORIES FOR CHRISTIAN NATIONS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I did not quite understand the hysterical references of the gentleman from New York [Mr. CELLER] to what is taking place in India; but I do know that two things took place in the world on yesterday that are most encouraging to the Christian nations of the earth, and most discouraging to the communistic elements throughout the world.

One of them was the announcement by President Truman of the settling of our alleged differences with Argentina, that great South American country, with which we have been at odds because of certain Communist elements trying to stir up trouble for us in South America. In announcing that settlement President Truman issued the following statement:

The Argentine Ambassador, who has just returned from Argentina, reviewed with the President and the Secretary of State the steps which his Government has taken and is continuing to take in fulfillment of its commitments undertaken in the Final Act of the Inter-American Conference on Problems of War and Peace. He expressed the view of his Government that no obstacle remained to discussions looking toward the treaty of mutual assistance contemplated by the Act of Chapultepec. The President indicated his willingness to renew the consultations with the Governments of the other American republics initiated by the United States memorandum of April 1, 1946, on this subject.

Another one was the settling of the differences between the British Empire and the various factions in India, a solution which seems to be satisfactory to them all, and which will be most distasteful to the Communists who are trying to use India to stir up trouble for Great Britain.

At this point I am inserting the statement of Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee announcing the settlement. It reads as follows:

LONDON, June 3.—The text of Prime Minister Clement R. Attlee's statement on the British plan for Indian self-rule:

"I desire to make an important statement on Indian policy. A similar statement is being made at the same time in the House of Lords and by the Viceroy in New Delhi. The statement, in the form of a white paper, will be available this afternoon.

"I am glad to inform the House that the plan contained in the announcement which I am about to make, including the offer of dominion status to one or two successor authorities, has been favorably received by all three parties represented at the conferences held by the Viceroy with Indian leaders during the past 2 days.

"Before making the statement I would like to express the gratitude and appreciation of the British Government of the great services which the Viceroy has rendered.

"1. On February 20, 1947, His Majesty's Government announced their intention of transferring power in British India to Indian hands by June 1948. His Majesty's Government had hoped that it would be possible for the major parties to cooperate in the working out of the cabinet mission's plan of May 16, 1946, and evolve for India a constitution acceptable to all concerned. This hope has not been fulfilled."

MOSLEMS HOLD ALOOF

"2. The majority of the representatives of the provinces of Madras, Bombay, United Provinces, Bihar, Central Provinces, and Berar, Assam, Orissa, and the North-West Frontier Province, and the representatives of Delhi, Ajmer-Merwara and Coorg have already made progress in the task of evolving a new constitution. On the other hand, the Moslem League Party, including in it a majority of representatives of Bengal, the Punjab, and Sind, as also the representative of British Baluchistan, has decided not to participate in the constituent assembly.

"3. It has always been the desire of His Majesty's Government that power should be transferred in accordance with the wishes of the Indian people themselves. This task would have been greatly facilitated if there had been agreement among the Indian political parties. In the absence of such an agreement, the task of devising a method by which the wishes of the Indian people can be ascertained has devolved on His Majesty's Government. After full consultation with political leaders in India, His Majesty's Government have decided to adopt for this purpose the plan set out below.

"His Majesty's Government wish to make it clear that they have no intention of attempting to frame any ultimate constitution for India; this is a matter for the Indians themselves. Nor is there anything in this plan to preclude negotiations between communities for a united India.

"4. It is not the intention of His Majesty's Government to interrupt the work of the existing constituent assembly. Now that provision is made for certain provinces specified below, His Majesty's Government trust that as a consequence of this announcement the Moslem League representatives of those provinces, a majority of whose representatives are already participating in it, will now take their due share in its labors."

BEST PRACTICAL METHOD

"At the same time it is clear that any constitution framed by this assembly cannot apply to those parts of the country which are unwilling to accept it. His Majesty's Government are satisfied that the procedure outlined below embodies the best practical method of ascertaining the wishes of the people of such areas on the issue whether their constitution is to be framed:

"(a) In the existing constituent assembly; or

"(b) In a new and separate constituent assembly consisting of the representatives of those areas which decide not to participate in the existing constituent assembly.

"When this has been done it will be possible to determine authority or authorities to whom power should be transferred.

"5. The Provincial Legislative Assemblies of Bengal and the Punjab (excluding the European members) will therefore each be asked to meet in two parts, one representing the Moslem majority districts and the other the rest of the Province. For the purpose of determining the population of districts the 1941 census figures will be taken as authoritative. The Moslem majority districts in these two Provinces are set out in the appendix to this announcement."

WILL VOTE ON PARTITION

"6. The members of the two parts of each legislative assembly, sitting separately, will be empowered to vote whether or not the Province should be partitioned. If a simple majority of either part decides in favor of partition, division will take place and arrangements will be made accordingly.

"7. Before the question as to the partition is decided, it is desirable that the representatives of each part should know in advance which constituent assembly the Province as a whole would join in the event of the two parts subsequently deciding to remain united.

"Therefore, if any member of either legislative assembly so demands, there shall be held a meeting of all members of the legislative assembly (other than Europeans) at which a decision will be taken on the issue as to which constituent assembly the Province as a whole would join if it were decided by the two parts to remain united.

"8. In the event of partition being decided upon, each part of the legislative assembly will, on behalf of the areas they represent, decide which of the alternatives in paragraph 4 above to adopt."

TO SIT IN TWO PARTS

"9. For the immediate purpose of deciding on the issue of partition, the members of the Legislative Assemblies of Bengal and the Punjab will sit in two parts according to Moslem majority districts (as laid down in the appendix) and non-Moslem majority districts. This is only a preliminary step of a purely temporary nature, as it is evident that for the purposes of final partition of these provinces a detailed investigation of boundary questions will be needed; and, as soon as a decision involving partition has been taken for either province, a boundary commission will be set up by the Governor-General, the membership and terms of reference of which will be settled in consultation with those concerned. It will be instructed to demarcate the boundaries of the two parts of the Punjab on the basis of ascertaining the contiguous majority areas of Moslems and non-Moslems. It will also be instructed to take into account other factors. Similar instructions will be given to the Bengal boundary commission. Until the report of a boundary commission has been put into effect, the Provincial boundaries indicated in the appendix will be used.

"10. The Legislative Assembly of Sind (excluding the European members) will at a special meeting also take its own decision on the alternatives in paragraph 4 above."

EXCEPTIONAL POSITION

"11. The position of the North-West Frontier Province is exceptional. Two of the three representatives of this province are already participating in the existing Constituent Assembly. But it is clear, in view of its geographical situation, and other considerations, that if the whole or any part of the Punjab decides not to join the existing constituent assembly, it will be necessary to give the North-West Frontier Province an opportunity to reconsider its position. Accordingly, in such an event, a referendum will be made to the electors of the present Legislative Assembly in the North-West Frontier Province to choose which of the alternatives mentioned in paragraph 4 above they wish to adopt. The referendum will be held under the aegis of the Governor-General and in consultation with the Provincial Government.

"12. British Baluchistan has elected a member but has not taken its seat in the existing constituent assembly. In view of its geographical situation, this province will also be given an opportunity to reconsider its position and to choose which of the alternatives in paragraph 4 above to adopt. His Excellency the Governor General is examining how this can most appropriately be done."

REFERENDUM ON SYLHET

"13. Though Assam is predominantly a non-Moslem province, the District of Sylhet, which is contiguous to Bengal, is predominately Moslem. There has been a demand that, in the event of the partition of Bengal, Sylhet should be amalgamated with the Moslem part of Bengal. Accordingly, if it is decided that Bengal should be partitioned, a referendum will be held in Sylhet District, under the aegis of the governor general and in consultation with the Assam Provincial Government, to decide whether the District of Sylhet should continue to form part of the Assam Province or should be amalgamated with the new province of Eastern Bengal, if that province agrees. If the referendum results in favor of amalgamation with Eastern Bengal, a boundary commission with terms of reference similar to those for the Punjab and Bengal will be set up to demarcate the Moslem majority areas of Sylhet District and contiguous Moslem majority areas of adjoining districts, which will then be transferred to Eastern Bengal. The rest of the Assam Province will, in any case, continue to participate in the proceedings of the existing constituent assembly."

FRESH ELECTIONS REQUIRED

"14. If it is decided that Bengal and the Punjab should be partitioned, it will be necessary to hold fresh elections to choose their representatives on the scale of one for every million of population according to the principle contained in the Cabinet mission's plan of May 16, 1946. Similar elections will also have to be held for Sylhet in the event of its being decided that this District should form part of East Bengal. The number of representatives to which each area would be entitled is as follows:

Province	General	Moslems	Sikhs	Total
Sylhet District	1	2	0	3
West Bengal	15	4	0	19
East Bengal	12	29	0	41
West Punjab	3	12	2	17
East Punjab	6	4	2	12

"15. In accordance with the mandates given to them, the representatives of the various areas will either join the existing constituent assembly or form a new constituent assembly.

"16. Negotiations will have to be initiated as soon as possible on administrative consequences of any partition that may have been decided upon:

"(a) Between the representatives of the respective successor authorities about all subjects now dealt with by the Central Government, including defense, finance, and communications.

"(b) Between different successor authorities and His Majesty's Government on treaties in regard to matters arising out of the transfer of power.

"(c) In the case of Provinces that may be partitioned, as to administration of all Provincial subjects such as the division of assets and liabilities, the police and other services, the high courts, Provincial institutions, etc.

"17. Agreements with tribes of the northwest frontier of India will have to be negotiated by the appropriate successor authority."

STATES POLICY UNCHANGED

"18. His Majesty's Government wish to make it clear that the decisions announced above relate only to British India and that their policy toward the Indian States contained in the Cabinet mission memorandum of May 12, 1946, remains unchanged.

"19. In order that the successor authorities may have time to prepare themselves to take over power, it is important that all of the above processes should be completed as quickly as possible. To avoid delay, the different Provinces or parts of Provinces will proceed independently, as far as practicable within the conditions of this plan, the existing constituent assembly and the new constituent assembly (if formed) will proceed to frame constitutions for their respective territories; they will, of course, be free to frame their own rules.

"20. The major political parties have repeatedly emphasized their desire that there should be the earliest possible transfer of power in India. With this desire His Majesty's Government are in full sympathy, and they are willing to anticipate the date of June 1948, for the handing over of power by the setting up of an independent Indian Government or Governments at an even earlier date. Accordingly, as the most expeditious, and indeed the only practicable way of meeting this desire His Majesty's Government propose to introduce legislation during the current session for the transfer of power this year on a dominion status basis to one or two successor authorities according to the decisions taken as a result of this announcement. This will be without prejudice to the right of Indian constituent assemblies to decide in due course whether or not the part of India in respect to which they have authority will remain within the British Commonwealth.

"21. His Excellency the Governor General will, from time to time, make such further announcements as may be necessary in regard to procedure or any other matters for carrying out the above arrangements."

APPENDIX

Moslem majority districts of Bengal and the Punjab according to the 1941 census:

Bengal, Chittagong Division: Chittagong, Noakhali, Tippera; Dacca Division: Bakarganj, Dacca, Faridpur, Mymensingh; Presidency Division: Jessor, Murshidabad, Nadia; Rajshahi Division: Bogra, Dinajpur, Malda, Pabna, Rajshabi, Rangpur.

Punjab, Lahore Division: Gujranwala, Gurdaspur, Lahore, Sheikhupura, Sialkot; Rawalpindi Division: Attock, Gujrat, Jhelum, Mianwali, Rawalpindi, Shahpur; Multan Division: Dera Ghazi Khan, Jhang, Lyallpur, Montgomery, Multan, Muzaffargarh.

Former Prime Minister Winston Churchill congratulated Mr. Attlee on this agreement.

It seems that the settlement is satisfactory also to the various factions in India as will appear from the following excerpts from radio addresses delivered in New Delhi by their respective leaders. The matter referred to follows:

NEW DELHI, INDIA, June 3.—Following are excerpts from the radio addresses tonight of the Viceroy, Viscount Mountbatten, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, representing the Congress party, Mohammed Ali Jinnah, representing the Moslem League, and Sardar Baldev Singh, representing the Sikh community, concerning the British proposals in respect to India.

VISCOUNT MOUNTBATTEN

"With a reasonable measure of good will between the communities a unified India would have been the best solution. It is regrettable that it has been impossible to attain agreement on any plan preserving unity.

"But there can be no question of coercing any large areas in which one community has a majority to live against their will under a government in which another community has the majority—and the only alternative to coercion is partition.

"But when the Moslem League demanded the partition of India, the Congress party used the same arguments for demanding in that event the partition of certain Provinces. To my mind this argument is unassailable. And so I felt it was essential that the people of India themselves should decide this question of partition.

"The procedure for enabling them to decide for themselves whether they want the British to hand over power to one or two governments is set up in the statement which will be read to you.

"The whole plan may not be perfect; but like all plans its success will depend on the spirit of good will with which it is carried out. I have always felt that once it was decided in what way to transfer power, the transfer should take place at the earliest possible moment. But the dilemma was that if we waited until a constitutional set-up for all India was agreed, we should have to wait a long time, particularly if partition were decided upon.

"The solution to this dilemma which I put forward is that His Majesty's Government should transfer power now to one or two Governments of British India, each having dominion status, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. This, I hope, will be within the next few months.

"I am glad to announce that His Majesty's Government have accepted this proposal and are already having legislation prepared for introduction in Parliament this session.

"I wish to emphasize that this legislation will not impose any restriction on the power of India as a whole or of the two new states if there is partition, to decide in the future their relationship to each other and to the other member states of the British Commonwealth.

"Thus the way is now open to an arrangement by which power can be transferred many months earlier than the most optimistic of us thought possible."

PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

"I am speaking to you on a historic occasion when a vital change affecting the future of India is before us.

"The British Government's announcement lays down the procedure for self-determination in certain areas of India.

"It envisages on the one hand the possibility of these areas seceding from India and on the other it promises a big advance toward complete independence.

"Such a big change must have the full concurrence of the people before it is effected, for it must always be remembered that the future of India can only be decided by the people of India and not by any outside authority, however friendly.

"We have therefore decided to accept these proposals and to recommend to our larger committees that they do likewise.

"We shall seek to build anew our relations with England on a friendly and cooperative basis, forgetting the past which has lain so heavily upon us.

"It is with no joy in my heart that I commend these proposals, though I have no doubt in my mind that this is the right course.

"For generations we have dreamed and struggled for a free and independent united India.

"The proposal to allow certain parts to secede if they so decide will be painful for any of us to contemplate.

"Nevertheless I am convinced our present decision is right even from the larger viewpoint.

"The united India we labored for was not one of compulsion and coercion, but a free and willing association of free people.

"It may be that in this way we shall reach a united India sooner than otherwise and that she will have a stronger and more secure foundation.

"Let us bury the past insofar as it is bad, and forget all bitterness and recriminations.

"Let there be moderation in speech and writing, let there be strength and perseverance and endurance in the cause we have at heart.

"Let us face the future, not with easy optimism or complacency or weakness, but with confidence and firm faith in India.

"There has been degrading violence in various parts of the country. That must end. We are determined to end it. Political ends are not to be achieved by methods of violence.

"On this eve of great changes in India we have to make a fresh start, with clear vision and a firm mind, with steadfastness and tolerance and with a stout heart."

MOHAMMED ALI JINNAH

"On the whole the reaction of Moslem League circles in Delhi has been hopeful.

"We have examined the British Government's statement cooly, wholly, and dispassionately. We have to take momentous decisions and have very big issues facing us in the solution of this complex political problem of this great subcontinent, inhabited by 400,000,000 people. It is a most onerous and difficult task.

"Therefore we must galvanize and concentrate all our energies to see that the transfer of power is effected in a peaceful and orderly manner.

"It is clear that the plan does not meet in some important respects our point of view, and we cannot say or feel that we are satisfied or that we agree with some of the matters dealt with by the plan.

"It is for us now to consider that the plan as presented to us by the British Government should be accepted by us as a compromise or a settlement.

"On this point I do not wish to prejudge the decision of the council of the All-India Moslem League which has been summoned to meet on Monday, June 9.

"In view of the projected referendum in the North-West Frontier Province, the Provincial Moslem League there has been requested to call off the movement of peaceful civil disobedience which they had perforce to resort to.

"Moslem League leaders and Moslems generally are now called upon to organize our people to face this referendum with hope and courage. We have confidence that the people of the North-West Frontier Province will give their verdict by a solid vote to join the Pakistan Constituent Assembly.

"I feel that the Viceroy has battled against various forces very bravely, and he has left the impression on my mind that he was actuated by a high sense of fairness and impartiality.

"It is up to us now to make his task less difficult and help him as far as it lies in our power in order that he may fulfill his mission of the transfer of power to the peoples of India in a peaceful and orderly manner.

"I appeal to every community in India and especially to the Moslems to maintain peace and harmony.

"We must examine the plan, its letter and spirit, and come to our conclusion. It is for us to consider whether this plan as presented to us by His Majesty's Government will be accepted by us."

SARDAR BALDEV SINGH

"It would be untrue if I were to say that we are altogether happy. Seldom perhaps has a fulfillment like this been reached with so much fear and sorrow.

"Our common quest for freedom need never have divided and torn us asunder one from the other.

"This has actually taken place. The shadow of our differences has thrown its gloom over us. We have let ourselves be rent apart. We witness today, even on the day of our freedom, scenes of mutual conflict and horrors in so many parts of India.

"Neighbor has risen against neighbor; thousands of innocent lives have been lost; men, women, and children are roaming from one place to another homeless and without shelter.

"Untold losses, financial, cultural, and spiritual, have been inflicted in wide areas. We look as if we are a house divided against itself. The day indeed finds us an unhappy people.

"It is not necessary for me today to go into the reason for this affliction. We each have our faults.

"The plan that has now been announced steers a course obviously above the conflicting claims.

"It is not a compromise. I prefer to call it a settlement.

"It does not please everybody, not the Sikh community anyway, but it is certainly something worth while. Let us take it at that.

"We must not forget that we have no authority to let party disputes afflict our people now that we shall be masters in our affairs.

"We have big tasks, big and small, of reconstruction on our hands. Let us remember that it is only when the minds of our leaders are not deflected by internal quarrels that they can effectively handle these tasks for the common good.

"Our people have many needs that have remained unmet for years. Let us settle down to meet these needs and relieve the distress that haunts us.

"Whatever our own preferences, let us guard against a petty outlook and work together to set our country on the way to the greatness that certainly belongs to it.

"I believe with all my heart that the divisions that tend to keep us apart now will not last long. The very blueprint of our plans, so soon as we view it with care, will bind us together. Let us concentrate on common interests.

"During the last few weeks, large contingents of foreign troops have been deployed in various parts of the country to aid the civil government.

"These troops consist of trusted men, and they will give help to those in need and act also as the stern keepers of peace in the troubled areas. I want you to look upon the soldier as your friend.

"You, our soldiers, sailors, and airmen obviously are not uninfluenced by the great events that are taking place in India today. You will undoubtedly not allow yourselves to be needlessly perturbed. Your interests will in no circumstances be allowed to suffer."

Mr. Speaker, these developments seem to mark a turning point in world affairs, which may lead to an era of lasting peace.

To say the least, they constitute a victory for the Christian nations of the earth over the forces of atheistic communism throughout the world.

ELECTION TO COMMITTEE

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I offer a resolution (H. Res. 232) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That ALVIN F. WEICHEL, of the State of Ohio, be and he is hereby, elected chairman of the standing committee of the House of Representatives on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

OLD-AGE ASSISTANCE PAYMENTS

Mr. HOPE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (S. 1072) to extend until July 1, 1949, the period during which income from agricultural labor and nursing services may be disregarded by the States in making old-age assistance payments without prejudicing their rights to grants-in-aid under the Social Security Act, and that the bill be referred to the Committee on Ways and Means.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kansas?

There was no objection.

AVIATION ACCIDENTS

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ROSS. Mr. Speaker, on Monday I charged the Civil Aeronautics Authority with gross carelessness with respect to the United Airlines accident which occurred at LaGuardia Field.

I want to quote from an article by Gill Robb Wilson, aviation writer for the New York Herald Tribune. He says, in part:

The LaGuardia Field disaster is but another illustration of fundamental lack of eternal vigilance in air safety. I attribute that crash to the basic inadequacy of the north-south 3,533 foot runway for operation of very heavy four-engined aircraft.

Considering the load of the DC-4 which came to disaster, and the length of the runway, its use under any except high-velocity south-wind conditions constitutes a borderline operation. The take-off attempted hued too close to the line of the law and was scantily justified by the dictates of practical operating procedures. This does not constitute the kind of rigid vigilance expected from operators and authorities.

How close the use of this runway by four-engine planes is to the border line of safety is attested by the fact that one air line will not permit take-off upon it under any conditions by a DC-4 whose gross weight exceeds 55,000 pounds.

NEGLECT BRINGS GRIMNESS

The whole affair sums up, in the writer's judgment, as another illustration of those historic tolerations which have plagued aviation history. Sometimes it is a short runway, sometimes a hazard like the late gas tank that loomed in the path of aircraft near Chicago, or the tank still tolerated at Detroit, or other compromising conditions at many airports. Always eventually the answer is the same—tragedy.

Aviation is not so grim by far as these compromises make it appear. We make it grim by neglect of fundamentals such as use of a short runway strip by four-engined aircraft at the world's most important terminal.

Mr. Speaker, I contend that a thorough investigation will prove that proper safeguards and precautions were not taken, and that this accident is directly chargeable to the agency which permitted a regulation whereby an employee in the control tower could send a plane of that weight and size out on a runway which was of inadequate length. I understand that a committee of the House of Representatives is going to sit in with the CAB in their investigation.

I strongly want to urge that this committee broaden their investigation to include the entire safety regulation and inspection set-up of the CAA and CAB.

FOREIGN COUNTRIES HAVE PRIORITY OVER AMERICAN VETERANS

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

Mr. RIZLEY. Mr. Speaker, I doubt very much if you gentleman who voted for the Greek-Turk loan bill realized that by doing so you gave a superior priority over all existing priorities now contained in the Surplus Property Act that we provided for veterans and our own departments of government.

I received today a letter from the general counsel of the War Assets Administration, Col. Larson, advising that both the State Department and the War Assets Administration had so construed the Greek-Turk Act as giving the provisions of that act affecting Surplus War Assets priority over veterans and everyone else in the present Surplus Property Act, for whom we provide priorities. In other words, the State Department and the President by Executive order can requisition surplus property in this country today and supersede priorities of veterans and others and send the property to Turkey or Greece.

OPA SAVED $100,000,000,000 IN COST OF WAR

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. PATMAN. Mr. Speaker, the OPA has been mentioned here this morning. I know it was a very unpopular agency with a lot of people but I know that if it had not been for the OPA during the war the cost of the war alone would have been $100,000,000,000 more. In other words, if it had not been for the OPA our war debt today would be at least $360,000,000,000 instead of $260,000,000,000. That is not considering the amount saved by the American people as consumers. It also helped to win the war. Workers will not work for worthless dollars. You have to protect their dollars to keep them working. That is what the OPA did during the war. Although it was regimentation and we did not like it, we submitted to it during the war with the expectation of getting rid of it just as quickly as possible after the war. We removed some controls too soon. We saved through OPA $100,000,000,000 on the national debt. From the time World War II started until it was over the price of steel and many other materials which were the largest factors in war cost did not increase one penny a ton in price. We can easily determine how much was saved on the war cost and the $100,000,000,000 estimate is conservative.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. JONES of North Carolina asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD and include an editorial.

THE OPA

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. GROSS. Mr. Speaker, when the gentleman from Texas stands up and makes such blatant assertions as he did a moment ago, he is simply talking about something that he cannot substantiate. Nobody can prove a figure or statement such as he just made. It sounds like Wallace, Bowles, or Mrs. Roosevelt; they were always making similar claims. I want to call to your attention that it is this gang who are hollering and bellyaching about doing away with the OPA and controls who today are offering resistance to every dollar that we are trying to save in this Government. They are a group of habitual, chronic, reckless spenders of public funds. They understand only deficit financing, and always place votes above the public welfare or our security. It does not make any difference what proposition comes along, proposed by the Republican side, to save a dollar, we meet this violent resistance on the other side of the aisle—the same old crowd that is bellyaching because the gravy train is stopping for them. If we would continue to be a great nation, we must remain solvent; and if we would continue to wield influence throughout the world, we must remain strong and united. It is about time that the Democrats of the House and the Democratic organization begin to get down to sound economy and sound practice and stop offering resistance every time we try to save a few dollars. We find the administration working through the Post Office Department, through the United States customs office, and through the Agriculture Department. Every agency of the Federal Government is lobbying, turning on the heat against Republican economy.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GROSS] has expired.

OLD-AGE RETIREMENTS

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend my remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAMEY. Mr. Speaker, the word "pension" is often misused. A pension is a gratuity. To be the recipient of retirement pay is not to receive a pension. The postal clerk, the Congressman, the judge, or Government worker who pays into a fund out of his earnings is, of course, not the recipient of a gratuity.

However, he has had a job and the opportunity to create a security for a future day in order that he may have maintenance and sustenance.

Two years ago I was one of the 39 who did not support the congressional retirement-pay plan. Not that I believed it was unjust, but it was my conviction that any retirement-pay plan should be extended to all the masses and not just to certain classes.

Let any retirement pay be equal and alike for all. Thus excessive bookkeeping and inspection could be eliminated. Everyone could be taken care of with much less expense than is now encountered under our haphazard old-age retirement system, which fails to cover many of our citizens.

May I suggest to all Members that you assist the Ways and Means Committee in working out this belated legislation and give such assistance as is necessary to

H. R. 16. Should there be suggestions for amendments, let them be submitted to the committee now.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LODGE asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the Appendix of the RECORD and include a speech he recently made.

Mr. JAVITS asked and was granted permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include Memorial Day speeches.

Mr. MAHON asked and was granted permission to include certain brief tables and excerpts in the remarks he will make today in Committee of the Whole.

REPEALING CERTAIN PROVISIONS OF PUBLIC LAW 388

Mr. WOLCOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 3203, an act relative to maximum rents on housing accommodations, to repeal certain provisions of Public Law 388, Seventy-ninth Congress, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments, disagree to the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOLCOTT]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Mr. WOLCOTT, Mr. GAMBLE, Mr. KUNKEL, Mr. TALLE, Mr. SPENCE, Mr. BROWN of Georgia, and Mr. PATMAN.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. RANKIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that I may revise and extend the remarks I just made and include a statement issued by the White House yesterday and also statements issued in London and in India on the question involved.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 230 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That during the consideration of the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, all points of order against title II of said bill or any provisions contained therein are hereby waived.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. SABATH].

I yield myself such time as I may desire.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution waives all points of order against title II of H. R. 3678.

I can say nothing more than that this legislation under title II only takes away from the War Department the sum of $1,100,000,000, which was appropriated during 1946 and prior years. It is money that has not been accounted for in the spending for future Army needs previous to 1947, and there is no reason why, with the great national debt we now have, the Congress should not in every way save every dollar it possibly can. It is within the power of the Congress to take money already appropriated to any department of Government and say to them that no department of the Government may spend money appropriated and not allocated nor unexpended at this or any future time. I feel, therefore, that every Member of the House will concur in the request of the Appropriations Committee to have these funds impounded and retained in the Treasury. It looks as though Congress did not act in accordance to wise and judicial spending of moneys in 1946 and prior years.

Mr. Speaker, I now yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, this rule again waives points of order on legislation on an appropriation bill. The only difference between the usual request of the Appropriations Committee for such a rule is that whereas as a general thing this type of rule waives points of order against legislation increasing appropriations, in this instance the reverse is the case, and the effort is to save money that the War Department could not expend from the 1946 appropriations. The amount they have been unable to get rid of in this instance amounts to $1,100,000,000.

Some will claim that the Republican Party is saving this much money. The facts are, Mr. Speaker, however, that in the last Congress we passed rescission bills amounting to $64,000,000,000. We did not, however, claim any credit for saving that amount of money; we merely provided that that amount of money which had been appropriated but not expended should remain in the United States Treasury.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I think the gentleman has the idea correctly—that this is a continuation of the rescission program.

Mr. SABATH. That is correct.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. These appropriations were not 1946 appropriations but 1946 and prior years; and as part of the recapture of money which had been appropriated for the prosecution of the war, which money, it developed, was no longer needed. Much of this is represented by money which had been made available to various theater commanders all over the world and the reports have come back to the central part of the War Department that they no longer need the money.

Mr. SABATH. That is correct; it is money that the War Department could not spend.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield for a question.

Mr. MAHON. Is it not true that the rescission here provided for, which we all favor, is in no way comparable to the $33,000,000,000 rescission made in War Department funds last year?

Mr. SABATH. It was $64,000,000,000, in all, from the War Department, Navy, and Maritime Commission—from every agency which had received emergency war appropriations.

Mr. MAHON. Is it not true that those rescissions are not comparable by reason of the fact that those funds rescinded last year represented live money which could be expended for any obligation of the War Department or for any program of the War Department for which the money had been appropriated, and that money would remain live money until the end of the fiscal year; that is, June 30, 1947; whereas this rescission today is for money that was previously appropriated in 1946 and prior years and cannot now be used for regular obligations of the War Department as would have been the case of the billions rescinded last year?

Mr. SABATH. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. MAHON. I should like to say to the gentleman, in order to keep the record straight, neither side of the aisle claims this is a saving. If the gentleman will read the report and read the remarks made on the bill, he will find nobody claims this is a saving. The reduction in this bill is under the budget by $475,000,000. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. SABATH. I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. COX. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. COX. I think the gentleman is correct in the statement he has thus far made. Nobody is seeking to claim any political advantage as a result of the action that may be taken on this bill. The gentleman should take care to make clear that this bill takes from the War Department not a dime it needs for the carrying on of any program that it has set up or may set up.

Mr. SABATH. Again I thank the gentleman for his explanation. I am fully aware of the fact that the report does not claim any credit, but knowing the gentlemen on my left, my friends, the Republicans, I know they will claim that they are saving millions and billions of dollars, and I want to make it clear that that money has not been expended and that the War Department cannot expend it. This merely provides that it shall remain in the Treasury and cannot be spent for something that is not necessary.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SABATH. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RICH. The fact of the matter is that the lavish spending that we had previous to 1946 and for a number of years thereto that got us into this great debt we are in now and which we are trying to pay off means that we do not want to leave any money in the hands of any department of Government that is not absolutely necessary for that department. It is only good sound business to retain it in the Treasury in order that some day we may be able to balance the budget and pay off this huge debt.

WE MUST AVOID WAR

Mr. SABATH. I am indeed immensely pleased that I can agree with the gentleman from time to time. I agree with him now that we should endeavor to bring about a reduction in our tremendous debt which was brought about by the terrible war. I hope every effort will be made on the part of each Member of this House and every citizen in the United States to avoid another war, although there are many who through their talk and actions are trying to force upon this Nation another war, so costly not only in money but in human lives. The money we will be able to repay, especially if you gentlemen will not reduce the taxes, and will use that money that you are trying to give to the big taxpayers toward repaying and reducing the public debt. The lives we can never repay, nor can we make up for the world-wide misery and destruction.

That is the reason I opposed the tax bill. That is the reason I feel it was unfair and unjustifiable to reduce the taxes to the big profiteers and the people that have made millions of dollars out of the war, and otherwise, due in part to legislation that they forced through the Congress. So, I feel it would be in the interest of the Nation that the surplus should be utilized, not to reduce the taxes on the wealthy, but to reduce the great debt that we incurred due to the war.

WHO WON THE WAR?

I am beginning to wonder whether we actually won this war we fought mainly for the eradication of fascism and nazism. Today they are rebuilding their war plants in Germany, and reestablishing their powerful cartels, the leaders of which were instrumental in encouraging and helping to finance Hitler and Mussolini and their armies.

Evidence is now coming to light every day showing that, notwithstanding our efforts to denazify Germany, she is rebuilding her steel plants and her vast chemical industries; and many of these plants, I understand, are being rebuilt with money advanced by Great Britain, no doubt out of the $3,250,000,000 we loaned to Great Britain.

I fear there is no one here on this floor who will live long enough to see that debt repaid.

I feel that when the time comes for payment even of the small interest we will again be called Shylocks as we were after the First World War.

GLAD TO GET OUR CLUTCHES ON THAT BILLION

I am not going to detain you very long, but I am mighty pleased to support this rule and the provision of the bill to put our clutches on that $1,100,000,000 so the War Department cannot spend it. I feel that if the committee had had all the facts, instead of $1,100,000,000 we could have rescinded perhaps between three and four billion dollars. There is a lot of money that has not been as yet used, but all the ingenuity of the gentlemen in the War Department that do the buying and spending and contracting will be devoted to devising ways to expend all of the money which they secured from Congress through the liberal Committee on Appropriations. It has been my experience that in the months of May and June these gentlemen in the War Department, yes, and the Navy Department, and other departments, worry themselves sick when they see that there is an unexpended balance, and their desire is to spend that unexpended balance which has been placed to their credit. So, I hope the Committee on Appropriations will continue to bring in rescission bills, and I assure them that I, for one, shall gladly support any rule waiving points of order that will save the Treasury and save the American taxpayer additional burdens.

Feeling that most of you gentlemen are ready to proceed with the consideration of the bill, I shall not detain you any longer.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I have no request for time.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, as has been pointed out, there is nothing controversial about this rule. I think we all favor this $1,100,000,000 rescission. I do think that there are some legislative provisions, at least one, in the bill that probably is not sound. That is in regard to a revolving fund which will be established in the Ordnance Department by a legislative provision in the bill which will more or less cause Congress to lose control of those funds because they will be subject to expenditure through the revolving fund rather than by direct appropriations by Congress. I realize that this rescission matter is somewhat complicated and that probably most Members are not greatly concerned about it, especially since no money is being saved by this procedure. Ordinarily we would not bring in a rescission bill in a case like this. The money involved has never been taken out of the Treasury. It is there now, and we just provide that it shall remain there.

The money provided in most of the appropriation bills is not totally expended by the end of the fiscal year. If that money is not expended by the end of the fiscal year and not obligated, it goes back into the Treasury and it is not necessary for Congress to pass a rescission bill. So while this is in order it is not necessary.

I have been interested in this fact, that in prior years the War Department at the end of the fiscal year has had more money percentagewise that was covered back into the Treasury without a rescission bill than is being covered back into the Treasury by this rescission. In other words, this rescission of $1,100,000,000 provides a six-tenths of 1 percent rescission of the amount available during the year, whereas in 1939 the amount of money in the War Department that reverted to the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year without any rescission on the part of Congress was 1½ percent, approximately twice as much. In 1 year, 1935, the amount of money that reverted to the Treasury, that was never expended or obligated, was 2.2 percent. Yet this procedure today is justified because such a large amount of money is involved, even though percentagewise it is not comparable to the amount of money that in some prior years has reverted to the Treasury at the end of the fiscal year without any action by Congress in rescinding the funds.

I shall place at this point in my remarks the tables prepared by the War Department in connection with the figures I have recited.

Military Establishment appropriations proportions for fiscal years 1925, 1927, 1931, 1933, 1935, 1936, 1937, and 1939 which reverted to the Treasury compared with proposed reversions, as of June 30, 1947, of appropriations for fiscal years 1942 through 1946

Fiscal year—	Appropriation	Amount carried to surplus fund [1]		Percent, column 4÷column 2

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Speaker, since everybody says that they are in favor of this rule it might seem a little useless to take any further time on it. However, it seems to me there is a little unnecessary concern on the part of my friends on the other side of the aisle about having this rescission title in the bill and the Republicans taking any credit, for fear that it might be regarded as adding to the Republican credit for economy.

There is a sound reason for having this rescission in the bill. Many of these appropriations were made during the days when there was a 10-percent transferability clause. While these funds normally would be expended for the various titles under which they are indicated here, under the 10-percent transferability clause which was in effect in the appropriation bills for the years for which many of these appropriations were made, it would be possible without this rescission, if the War Department wanted to do so, to transfer 10 percent of these various items into a given fund and there to expend it for a purpose not within the definite intent of the Congress. Therefore, there is a very sound reason for making this rescission. Whether or not it adds to anybody's economy credit or whether or not it effectively reduces the amount that may be available for expenditure by the War Department, let all that go by the board, there is a sound reason for rescissions being in the appropriation bill.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. OWENS. Is there any question but that the low amount that is being cut from the budget can be accounted for only because of the fact that you are turning back $1,100,000,000?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. No; I would not say that is exactly the situation, although if this $1,100,000,000 were to continue to be available for expenditure, it would not be necessary to appropriate so much new money. I would be glad to discuss that when we come to that part of the bill.

There is one further thing I should like to say, which is, that this money actually is not in the Treasury. The money has been set up on the books for the War Department. We need this action to put it back into the Treasury, if the transfer clause is to be counteracted while the money remains available for obligation or expenditure.

Mr. RICH. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MILITARY ESTABLISHMENT APPROPRIATION BILL, 1948

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 3678, with Mr. MICHENER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on yesterday the Clerk had read the first 6 lines of the bill. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Pay of the Army: For pay and allowances of the Army of the United States, including pay of Reserve officers and officers of the National Guard of the United States ordered to active duty under the provisions of section 37a and the fourth paragraph of section 38 of the National Defense Act, as amended; pay of civilian employees at military headquarters; allowances for quarters for enlisted men on duty where public quarters are not available; interest on soldiers' deposits; payment of life insurance premiums authorized by law; payment of exchange fees and exchange losses incurred by disbursing officers or their agents; repayment of amounts determined by the Secretary of War, or officers designated by him, to have been erroneously collected from military and civilian personnel in and under the Military Establishment and losses in the accounts of Army disbursing officers in accordance with the acts of December 13, 1944 (31 U. S. C. 95a) and December 23, 1944 (50 U. S. C. 1705–1707); $2,348,438,179, which shall also be available to pay mustering-out payments, as authorized by the "Mustering-Out Payment Act of 1944", as amended (38 U. S. C. 691–691g), to persons who were or may be denied such payments because they were discharged from the Army to enter the United States Military Academy or the United States Naval Academy and subsequently were discharged from either Academy because of physical disability: Provided, That the appropriations contained in this act shall not be available for increased pay for making aerial flights by nonflying officers at a rate in excess of $720 per annum, which shall be the legal maximum rate as to such officers, and such nonflying officers should be entitled to such rate of increase by performing three or more flights within each 90-day period, pursuant to orders of competent authority, without regard to the duration of such flight or flights: Provided further, That, during the continuance of the present war and for 6 months after the termination thereof, a flying officer as defined under existing law shall include flight surgeons, and commissioned officers or warrant officers while undergoing flying training: Provided further, That section 212 of the act of June 30, 1932 (5 U. S. C. 59a), shall not apply to retired military personnel on duty at the United States Soldiers' Home: Provided further, That during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, no officer of the Army shall be entitled to receive an addition to his pay in consequence of the provisions of the act approved May 11, 1908 (10 U. S. C. 803): Provided further, That provisions of law prohibiting the payment of any person not a citizen of the United States shall not apply to military and civilian personnel in and under the Military Establishment: Provided further, That without deposit to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States and withdrawal on money requisitions, receipts of public moneys from sales or other sources by officers of the Army on disbursing duty and charged in their official accounts, except receipts to be credited to river and harbor and flood-control appropriations, may be used by them as required for current expenditures, all necessary bookkeeping adjustments of appropriations, funds, and accounts to be made in the settlement of their disbursing accounts: Provided further, That no collection or reclamation shall be made by the United States on account of any money paid to assignees, transferees, or allottees, or to others for them, under assignments, transfers, or allotments of pay and allowances made under authority of law where liability might exist with respect to such assignments, transfers, or allotments, or the use of such moneys, because of the death of the assignor, transferor, or allotter.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DIRKSEN: On page 5, line 1, strike out "$2,348,438,179" and insert "$2,223,438,179."

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I had originally contemplated offering or at least suggesting for discussion an amendment to the pending bill that might very conceivably reduce it by $250,000,000. That amendment was designed to offset the military aid that has been provided under Senate bill 938, better known as the Greek-Turkish loan bill. The theory, after all, is that when you extend aid of that kind you are extending defense aid even as we did under the act of 1941. When you export your weapons and munitions and instrumentalities of war, it is a fair assumption that you can modify your own security establishment proportionately.

I appreciate, however, in offering an amendment of that kind it would be necessary to set it up in a lump sum and, if it were in order, to permit that modification to be made at the discretion of the Secretary of War. Of course, if you repose that sort of discretion in the directing head of the War Department, he would have great latitude and flexibility of judgment as to where the cut might be made. It is very conceivable indeed rather than cut the establishment and its manpower that a very generous proportion of that sort of cut might be applied to research activities of the Department.

So, while I had some convictions on the matter I relented in the attitude because I felt perhaps we were in a position now where the establishment could be cut and at the same time not be impaired in its effectiveness for all purposes.

As you know from the conferences we had with the War Department from time to time over a period of years it was assumed that we would have an establishment of 1,070,000 officers and enlisted personnel as of July 1, 1947, and that there would be 146,000 officers, including 13,500 warrant officers. I think generally the Congress is familiar with the fact that there has been some difficulty in recruiting that manpower. It is agreed that recruitments are not up to expectations. The amendment that is before you now to strike out of this paragraph $125,000,000 would be set up so as to envision a diminution in the officer and enlisted strength of the Army on the ground, which I think is a tenable and sustainable ground, that the men cannot be obtained. That is admitted. Then why should funds be appropriated for manpower which does not and will not exist. That is the rub of this proposal and the hearings will bear out the soundness of this proposal. That $125,000,000 would be composed of three items. First, $93,000,000 which envisions a reduction of 30,000 enlisted men at the rate of $3,100 per man. Already the officer complement has been reduced by 20,000. If you add another 5,000 at the rate of $5,500 per officer, that would be $27,500,000. The third item could be taken out of the flying pay. You are familiar with the fact that only recently General Spaatz has indicated that flying hours would be increased from 48 to 100. That, of course, means that there are a great many who would not be able to qualify. So the complement there that seeks to make itself eligible for flying pay would be reduced. That item of flying pay could be reduced also, making a total of, roughly, $125,000,000.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I yield.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. How much did the gentleman propose to reduce the enlisted personnel?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Thirty thousand. That is at an estimated figure of $3,100 per individual.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Then the gentleman would reduce the enlisted men 30,000 and the officer personnel 5,000?

Mr. DIRKSEN. Yes, and make a cut of $5,000,000 in flying pay. It may figure out a little more than that, but it has been reduced to a round figure.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman is aware of the fact that there is a 20,000 reduction already effective in the reduction of officers?

Mr. DIRKSEN. I appreciate that, but the increased reduction in enlisted personnel would make possible a further reduction in the officer complement.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Of course, the reduction which the gentleman suggests is on the ratio of one to six, which would be a much heavier reduction in proportion than the existing rate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I am not insensible to that fact, but I think the reduction can properly be absorbed by the War Department.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has expired.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

I do believe that it is within the province of Congress to determine the size of the Army, either by direct legislation or by reduction in appropriations, but this would really be cutting in the dark. The average figures of $5,500 per officer and $3,100 for enlisted men are approximately correct except that these figures include food and clothing, medical care, and maintenance of quarters as well as pay and allowances. Yet, the gentleman's amendment proposes to take the entire reduction for a cut of 30,000 men from the funds provided for pay and allowances.

If the House wants to cut the strength of the Army by reducing the money on an average per man basis, the amendment should be drawn to take out a proportionate amount from all of the items included in the average cost figure, rather than taking it all from the pay funds. In other years, it might not have mattered so much, because the bills used to carry a transfer clause which permitted shifting of funds within the War Department to increase a given fund up to 10 percent. This bill, under the leadership of the chairman, the gentleman from Michigan, does not contain a transfer clause.

Again, if the Congress wants to reduce the Army by cutting its strength overseas, maybe that is a question that should be considered. The gentleman from Illinois has not put his amendment on that ground, however.

Obviously, he is inviting a heavier reduction in officer personnel than the committee has reported. There are three reasons why the officer personnel is higher today in proportion to enlisted strength than it was before the war. I should say there are four explanations, one being the carry-over from the war itself, when we had a higher proportion than peacetime for obvious reasons. To the extent that is true, the officer strength should be reduced, and the committee has proposed to do that in the bill now before you. But there are three sound reasons why the officer strength today is heavier in the Army than it was before the war.

The first reason is that the air force today constitutes a larger proportion of the over-all Army than before the war. In 1941 the air forces were about one-fifteenth to one-seventeenth of the total army strength. Today the air forces are one-third of the total army strength. Anybody who knows anything at all about the Army knows that it is necessary to have a higher proportion of commissioned officers in the air forces to operate the airplanes than in the old infantry army, let us say. So that is one sound reason. You have an air force today one-third of the total Army, as compared with one-fifteenth or more before the war.

The second reason is that you have the problem of occupation. The director of occupation cannot be accomplished by immature boys who, in their own home towns, would not be entrusted with municipal administrative and judicial jobs because of lack of experience or maturity, even in the United States. So you have to have a higher percentage of officers to administer occupation in foreign countries than you would have in the normal peacetime army occupying an ordinary peacetime military post.

The third reason is that you are carrying out a research and development program and the most important parts of that research and development program are being carried on by officer personnel, by commissioned officers. If you are going to get the greatest value for the dollars you expend on research and development you need a greater complement of officers to direct and handle that work.

So the proposal here to reduce the officer strength in the proportion of one to six, in my judgment would be proposing an unwarranted reduction in officer strength. It is not popular, perhaps, to say "Let us maintain the officer strength of the Army," but to those who are familiar with the details of our national defense program it does make sound sense to maintain a proper proportion of officers in your Air Force and in your occupation force and in your research and development program.

If the gentleman based his savings on a general reduction of the total size of the Army we could have a debate upon that issue, but it strikes me that this approach overlooks the reduction in total strength already made. Bear in mind that when the committee reported the bill reducing the officer strength by approximately 20,000—17,500 in the commissioned officers and 2,500 approximately in the warrant officers—we did not put back in the bill the money for the enlisted men. So already the bill is about 20,000 less in the over-all strength of the Army.

If the gentleman's amendment carries it would mean 30,000 in addition. The issue is before the committee. You can do what you want about it, but it would, if the gentleman's amendment were adopted and carried out as he explained its intent, accomplish an improper reduction in the officer strength.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. The gentleman from South Dakota suggests perhaps a different approach; in other words, in your aggregate.

This is a general cut of $125,000,000, and I take it from the gentleman's discussion that there can be a reduction in enlisted men, but his particular opposition lies to the fact that——

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. That the gentleman was suggesting a disproportionate cut in officers and that you propose to take the entire cost for 30,000 officers and men out of the pay funds, overlooking the fact that the average cost figure includes subsistence, clothing, medical care and maintenance of quarters as well as pay and allowances.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from South Dakota may have two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. DIRKSEN. At all events, I will say that the amendment deals only with money here and would be in the nature of a recommendation. It perhaps needs some refining somewhere else. So it is not a hard and fast understanding that it would have to be 5,000 officers. I think very well under the circumstances and under the statement the gentleman makes that the amendment might very well go through and that they make their own refinement as between enlisted men and officer strength.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. If we were going to debate a reduction of the Army issue, it seems to me we ought to debate it upon the issue of the job the Army has to do.

As a matter of fact, the Army today is overmanned for its presently authorized pay strength. The fears the gentleman expressed about being able to raise the authorized number of men to fill the requirements of the personnel of the Army are groundless. The Army today must shrink its personnel to get within the figures the committee has provided.

As I said yesterday during general debate, I think we should turn over more of the occupation job to the native populations of those countries we are occupying. I think we should do that as a matter of reducing costs, and I think we should do that partly to put those countries on their own feet and build them up so as to get them off of the economy of the United States.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I agree with that observation. The only way it can be brought about is for Congress to make some kind of reduction. Then the responsibility more and more will have to be reposed in the native populations. This is an effective way to do it.

Mr. O'HARA. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I yield.

Mr. O'HARA. We have heard a great deal about the officer personnel of the Army in the field and in the occupied areas, but we have not heard anything as to how many officers there are in the Pentagon Building. Can the gentleman give us information on that subject?

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I do not know how many officers are over in the Pentagon Building. The bill does propose a reduction of 20,000 officers.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from South Dakota has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman from South Dakota for his remarks. Throughout the hearings on this bill we proceeded on the theory that we were appropriating money for an Army of 1,070,000 officers and enlisted men. That has been the basis upon which we have proceeded, and I think the chairman of the committee will join me in saying that we have mutually felt we could not now go below the 1,070,000 men.

Mr. Chairman, it would be unwise for the United States of America under world conditions as they are, with our commitments as they are, to begin a policy which would mean the disintegration of our Army. There are many standing armies in the world in excess of ours; at least, there are some. To go below 1,070,000 men it seems to me would be most dangerous at this time. When this occupation job gets under better control, when peace treaties are signed, we probably will not want an Army of the present size, but certainly an Army as now constituted is not out of proportion at this time. This being the authorized Army, if action is going to be taken to reduce it, I should like for the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS] and his Committee on Armed Forces to hold exhaustive hearings and present the matter to the Congress. Then if the Congress is willing to make that reduction, it is a different story. Personally, I would not be willing to do it, and I am not willing now for this committee to usurp the authority of the Committee on the Armed Services to strike out the present authorized 1,070,000-man Army.

As the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. CASE] so well pointed out, a very large percentage of the Army is the Air Force. We all know the heavy percentage of officers required in the Air Force. When we cut the officer personnel in the bill I thought we cut it a little too deep. In cutting that officer personnel I did not think we had ample justification for the depth of the cut made. But be that as it may, no funds are in the bill to make up the deficit in our armed forces created by the 20,000 reduction in officers which the bill effects. In other words money is not provided for the pay of 20,000 additional enlisted men needed to keep the Army up to the 1,070,000 strength. I would not for a moment dare to take the responsibility and the chance of flying in the face of all military authority who tell us that the very minimum required at the present time is 1,070,000 men as now authorized.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. DIRKSEN. I remember the hearings that we had with officials of the War Department last year and the year before. As will be remembered, they contrived a figure of 1,070,000 even at that time. It occurs to me there is no magic in that figure of 1,070,000. Yet for nearly 18 months we have been sort of going through with that figure, nursing it as a sort of target, but there is no magic in it. It can be raised and it can be lowered without impairing the efficacy of the Army.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. First, that figure of 1,070,000 has already had a couple of whacks taken in it. When the figure of 1,070,000 was adopted that was for active personnel. Those who were on an inactive status, those who were in hospitals, those who were on hospital leave or terminal leave were not included. However, the 1,070,000 today includes those who are on terminal leave as well as those on active duty. In addition to that, as I have already pointed out, the reduction of 20,000 officers accomplishes a reduction of enlisted personnel, because when we took off the officer money we did not put back the money for the enlisted personnel. So that there have been two whacks taken in that 1,070,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. SCRIVNER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I have the greatest admiration for the gentleman from Illinois and his keen insight and his desire for economy. I, too, have a desire for economy, but I feel that the committee, in making the cut that they did in the pay for officers, cut just about as deep as we can cut at the present time, and we are fairly certain that the cut is sufficient to take off some of the overload in rank in the higher brackets.

If you turn to page 1582 of the hearings you will find what had been originally proposed, namely, 4,023 second lieutenants as compared to 20,000 majors, and I can assure you that if the cut we have made does not have the desired effect, there will be some further surgery next year when the Army appropriations come up.

I can understand the position many of these men take, and I know the way they feel. I could not help but think about it the other day as I read a news story which related that a West Point class of 1940, or possibly 1941, was going to have a reunion. It named seven, eight, or possibly nine of the officers coming back, youngsters just out of the Point, you might say, and of the seven or nine, my recollection is that two were full colonels, four were lieutenant colonels and one was a major. We know that normally it takes 15 to 17 years before an officer reaches the rank of colonel. Many of these higher ranks can well be reduced to what would normally be their level. Maybe this cut will hasten the reduction to somewhere near peacetime normalcy. So, in all deference to the suggestion which has been made by the gentleman from Illinois, I feel that we cannot go further than we now have gone in the proposed cuts in the pay for the Army.

The picture is not as dark as some have painted it; the emergencies are not as dire as some have suggested, but neither are they as bright as some of the most optimistic would have us believe. We are going through a period of transition in which our Army is to play a very important part. We hope that within the very near future many of our troops can be returned to this country and taken off occupation duty in Germany, Korea, and Japan. When the return of those troops can be made, of course, there can be a further reduction in the cost of the Army, in the number of men necessary, and in the number of officers as well. Then with time to study it thoroughly, as I said just a few moments ago, this committee will look things over next year with a very critical eye with the hope that we may further pare this appropriation.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, in view of the importance of this amendment and its relationship to the Committee on Armed Services, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, may I say in the first place that the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. ENGEL], the chairman of the subcommittee in charge of this bill, has during the past 2 months revealed a very fine spirit of cooperation with the members of the Committee on Armed Services through his contact with me as chairman of that committee.

The subject matter of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois leads me to make a few remarks on the floor this morning. I should like the members of this committee and, in fact, the entire House, to know that for a period of 2½ months, starting on March 17, the leading subcommittee of the Committee on Armed Services, that on personnel, the chairman of which is the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. SHORT], has been considering the entire question of personnel of the Army Ground, the Army Air, the Navy, and the Marine Corps, both in enlisted strength and officer strength, from all points of view, that of the high-ranking officers, from the generals up, and from the generals down.

The number of generals in the Pentagon was referred to, and that leads me to say that we have examined the billets for star rank in all the services in minute detail, in cooperation with all four sections of the armed services, the Marines, the Navy, the Air Corps, and the Army.

It is a little early to make such a statement, but in view of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois I am going to say this. That subcommittee of 12 men, consisting of men who came from both the Military and Naval Affairs Committees, including the senior members of those committees, have reached unanimous agreement on the so-called promotion bill for the Army and the Navy, the vital part of which is the number of officers and the billets in these services for the future.

In a large number of conferences the officers of the Army, the Navy, the Marine Corps, and the Air Corps have revealed a very fine spirit of cooperation looking to the reduction of high rank and the number of officers in high-rank positions in the future.

I do not suppose anybody who has not been in the service or who has not been in contact intimately with these departments, but knows of them only through the newspapers, can have any possible conception of what it means to reduce down in the services and, from an Army point of view, to realize the great responsibility resting on that service for the occupation in Europe and in Japan, and with the proposed setting up of the Air Corps as a separate organization, assuming the passage of the merger.

I say this subcommittee has given very considered opinion to all the billets for all the high officers, and I think it will be borne out by my friend the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], who is here, that we have been amazed at the willingness of the services to cooperate in the very direction which the gentleman's amendment purports to go without knowing the facts. You cannot possibly effect a great reduction in the rank beyond the present situation until July 1, 1948. We are in an occupation period that must of necessity last another year. I do not believe the average person here has any conception of the pipe line that must be kept going and of the numbers of men in training to feed up to MacArthur and the American forces in Europe, with the 1-year enlistment period still running, with no selective service, and voluntary enlistments having dropped to an average of about 20,000 a month.

You will be perfectly amazed when we bring the promotion bill for the Army and the Navy on the floor of this House at what we have been able to effect in a permanent reduction in rank, in the ceiling on those positions, and in the number of generals. You will find that the number of generals in the Army ground forces will be not to exceed 210, the number of generals in the Air Corps will be way below that, and the number of starred admirals from the top down in the Navy will be in proportion to those in the Army.

I feel that we have been highly successful in reaching these decisions with the members of the War Department, the Navy Department, and the various other branches, the Air Corps, and the Marine Corps.

This bill has been cut. I have great faith in the gentleman from Michigan. He is certainly minded to economy.

I think the gentleman from Michigan knows probably as much of the general picture concerning officer strength and enlisted strength of the Army, insofar as it is reflected in dollars and cents, as do we on the Committee on Armed Services. When it comes to billets and the idea that you can arbitrarily say that we are going to cut out that many more officers as represented by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, I say "No." The very fact that he offers an amendment, it seems to me, is a great contradiction of his usual habit of offering amendments based upon facts. This is the first time, I believe, that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] has seen fit to offer an amendment the result and operation of which he does not know. I am very glad at this time to yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY], one of the most active members of the Committee on Armed Services.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I agree thoroughly with what the gentleman from New York has said with reference to this proposed reduction, primarily as it relates to the pay of the Army. In the Subcommittee on Personnel of the Armed Services Committee we are working on a promotion bill and we are working on it without any idea of partisanship. I think that is one of the nicest things about my service in the House—having been a member of the old Committee on Military Affairs for 8 years and now a member of the Committee on Armed Services since the reorganization of the committees of Congress.

In each we have approached national defense matters with no partisanship, rarely, if ever, dividing along party lines.

The gentleman from New York, the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, stated what we hoped to do with reference to the flag rank or the so-called brass hats. You will be amazed when you see the extent to which we have cut. But when you consider the action taken in the departments you will find that at the termination of the war the Army had 1,500 generals of one-, two-, three-, four-, and five-star rank. Voluntarily, by their own action, they have reduced that to 500 generals. There seems to be a feeling throughout the country that the lower ranks have been cut but the general officers have not been cut. They have gone down through the administrative action of the department itself about two-thirds and we propose to reduce that figure by about half in the permanent establishment.

I feel very strongly that a nation that has just authorized $400,000,000 to assure the countries of Greece and Turkey that they can stand up against a powerful nation because a still more powerful nation will sustain them, cannot afford to make the cut as contemplated by the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois. What will be their reaction when they find a cut in the pay of the Army? And, more important, what will be the reaction of that great nation which they fear when, in the face of legislation which we have previously passed, we now take the position that we will not supply enough money to sustain a minimum army?

I understand from the press that the gentleman from Illinois has stated that the proposed reduction has some connection with deducting the support that was going to Greece and Turkey from Army funds. To my mind, that is a fallacy. We are sending food, equipment, and what not to them, but I am sure it was agreed on the floor that it was not contemplated that a large expeditionary force is to be sent. Therefore, reducing the appropriation for pay of the Army can have no connection with the aid we have voted for Greece and Turkey. The amendment should be defeated.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN] is so extremely convincing and we all have such a high regard for his great ability and his unquestioned sincerity that it is with considerable hesitation that I rise to oppose the amendment which he has offered.

I also realize that this opposition is not voiced in a popular cause. The Army and Navy have no votes back home. Their budgets traditionally have been soft spots where money could be saved, appropriations denied, and the taxpayers relieved of expense without endangering one's position with his constituency in any way.

I should not wish to be misunderstood. I do not ascribe to our distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], anything but the highest motives in proposing this amendment. His views are admittedly to be given great weight. It seems to me, however, that the subcommittee which has studied this subject so carefully and has presented us with hearings embracing 1,642 pages of printed record has had an unparalleled opportunity to arrive at a conclusion regarding this matter which strikes a proper balance between much-needed economy and adequacy in our national defense. I hope they have not gone too far in the cuts they have recommended. I have no reason to feel that they have.

On the other hand, entertaining a serious suspicion, as I do, that further reductions may jeopardize our national security in this hour so perilous and critical in our Nation's history, I find myself unable to support additional reductions with no more convincing evidence than has been presented here.

A question has been raised about the disproportionate ratio of officers to enlisted men provided in this bill. It is noteworthy that the subcommittee in the cuts it has already made has left the enlisted men at full strength, while eliminating 20,100 officers and warrant officers. The amendment now suggested would reduce officer personnel another 5,000 and enlisted strength 30,000.

It must be recognized that occupation duties which our forces are now faced with probably do require a higher percentage of officer personnel than is required for combat duty or a normal peacetime Army. I happen to have served during the war in a theater where logistics was the principal problem. We had to have a higher percentage of officer personnel than is normally required because the problems, like those of occupation, were of unusual complexity.

Then, too, in the field of research, in the push-button developments which we now hear so much about—perhaps too much, I might say—undoubtedly an extraordinarily large number of the personnel must be officer-trained. The same is, perhaps, true in the Air Forces. In other words, we must not gear our thinking and planning to the days of the musket and the Minié ball.

The statutory strength of the Army, as of July 1, 1947, is to be 1,070,000. This budget is based upon that number for the coming fiscal year. A reduction of some $106,000,000 has already been made by the subcommittee. It is, in my judgment, a false and dangerous economy to attempt to reduce this particular item further. At the very least, and even if this number of personnel should not be necessary—a result which I would be the first to welcome with enthusiasm—the inclusion in the budget of provision for the number of military personnel fixed by statute can do no harm, because if the statutory strength is not maintained, the men will not be paid and the money will not be spent. The committee has very wisely refrained from including in this bill any provision permitting the transfer of funds appropriated for one purpose to some entirely different purpose, as we witnessed last year when the Executive reached into the funds appropriated for research, impounding $75,000,000 and transferring it to some other purpose, thereby, as General LeMay testified, seriously delaying their program.

This is one place where, so far as I am concerned, my preference is to err, if at all, on the side of safety and security.

There is another point about this provision for the pay of the armed services. To adopt this amendment is to legislate by this appropriation bill a reduction in the authorized size of the Army established by Public Law 473 in the Seventy-ninth Congress, and to do so, I might say, upon inadequate evidence. I much prefer to make provision for an adequate professional force than to impress into service those who do not choose the Army as a career. It is possible that both may be necessary. We shall soon have to face that problem in a bill for some form of compulsory universal training. On that issue, I have not yet studied the evidence to be prepared to take a final position. What I do say, however, at this time, is that we should not by this amendment provide for a reduction in the authorized strength of the Army and next week, or next month, or next year turn around and require our youth to serve by compulsion when we, at that same time, deny the funds to provide pay for those who would serve voluntarily.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, in the absence of compelling evidence that the Army strength as now fixed is extravagant or wasteful, and in the light of the representations made to us both by the members of this subcommittee on War Department appropriations and also by my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], the chairman of the Committee on Armed Services, all of whom have given to this matter the benefit of their diligent study and wealth of experience, I feel compelled to join with them in opposing this amendment and cannot, in good conscience, give it the support of my vote. I hope it will be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KEATING] has expired.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, I am taking the floor in order that if possible we may get a little clearer picture of this situation. I am going to direct some questions to the chairman of the subcommittee.

It appears on page 31 of the hearings that there will be 360,000 men discharged during the fiscal year 1948. We are advised by the gentleman from New York [Mr. ANDREWS], that enlistments are presently running at the rate of 20,000 a month. In other words, if they continue on that basis, we would be 120,000 short of having the 1,070,000 men in the Army at the end of the fiscal year 1948. I am wondering what the gentleman from Michigan could tell us about that.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, it is my conviction that those figures are conservative. The enlistments will be higher for the Air Corps, but I am convinced that there will be a deficit of approximately 50,000 to 75,000 enlisted men in the Army during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, if we go into the year with 1,070,000.

Mr. TABER. Does that mean we will be short all the way through the year by an average of somewhere around 50,000?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. That is my judgment. When War Department representatives appeared before the Military Affairs Committee and asked authorization for an army of 1,070,000 men they placed a table in the record showing what they expected to have—and that was in April 1946. That table shows—and you will find it at page 162 of the hearings of July 1, 1946—Brigadier General Textor testifying. It shows that on July 1, 1947, the requirements and availabilities are as follows: Volunteer Army, enlisted men, 719,000; all officers, 100,000. A total of 819,000 officers and enlisted men. Inducted into the service, they figured 200,000. This makes the total available 1,019,000, or a deficit of 51,000 to make up the 1,070,000 officers and men. That is from the hearings of April a year ago, and those are accurate.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. DIRKSEN. That, of course, simply gives point to the observation I made in the first instance, that we can save conservatively 30,000 a year.

Mr. TABER. What bothers me, frankly, is this: If we are going to be 50,000 short all the way through the year of our goal of 1,070,000, what sense is there in appropriating money for more than we will have? That is the question that is bothering me, and that is what caused me to take the floor. I looked at these hearings and I looked at the picture and then wondered what point that could be in appropriating money for men we would not have. If that be the case we ought to take action.

Mr. DIRKSEN. And that is the point of my argument.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The gentleman's figuring would be entirely correct, of course, if we started the year with 1,070,000 men and we had 360,000 discharges and were recruiting only 240,000, but the facts are we are starting off the year with 1,020,000, or 1,145,000 as the figure that is used for the strength of the Army, the average pay strength within the year; and it will depend upon the rate at which discharges come about as to how far down they go. We have to take our January 1 figure, the mid-year period, and assume a level.

Mr. TABER. If we lose 10,000 a month and you had 1,140,000, you would drop down to 1,020,000 at the end of the year and the average strength would be below the figure provided for in the bill, as I understand.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. The chairman, of course, must not overlook the fact that the figures already reduce the pay money by 20,000.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. DIRKSEN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. TABER. I wonder if the gentleman from Michigan feels that the average strength of the Army will be down 50,000 from the 1,070,000?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I personally feel that it will be. The figures the gentleman from New York gave us are high. I do not think we are going to have that much of a deficit but I feel they are going to have a 50,000 deficit.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. I want to make it perfectly clear that the figure attributed to me was one that I took out of my head from memory. As I recall, it was the month of February in which the reenlistments ran about 20,000. I have not followed the reenlistment program as I should have, but there is nothing secure about the reenlistment program.

Mr. TABER. There is nothing secure about anything in connection with voluntary enlistments in an army, of course. It is a matter of guess. If it is true that they are going to be 50,000 short, on the average, of the number in the Army there is no question but what we should not provide more funds than there are folks in the Army.

Mr. ANDREWS of New York. Just as a general picture, and without knowing what goes on behind the offering of amendments, I would like to know if the Appropriations Committee can give me any idea how much they are providing for officers and men in the business of effecting the return to this country of 300,000 bodies from overseas.

Mr. TABER. I understood that that was a private operation separate from the War Department operation.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. That appropriation comes in the civil functions part of the War Department, and not in the military activities.

Mr. TABER. There is not a substantial number of soldiers found in that item. It is a contract job with morticians, as I understand it. I know we had that up in the deficiency committee and there were $93,000,000 in there for that job and that was a high figure. It rather appears from what the gentleman from Michigan has told us that there will be a 50,000 shortage in the number of men averaged throughout the year. If that is the picture, cutting out the pay for 30,000 would be a perfectly proper operation.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TABER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. It is true that if there is a deficiency the money will not be spent?

Mr. TABER. That is true. On the other hand, it is not up to us to provide more funds than can reasonably, under normal conditions, be used by any governmental institution.

Mr. KILDAY. The gentleman feels it would not affect the efforts of men who in good faith attempted to induce young men to go into the service when he knows that so far as action taken by the Congress is concerned the contract he is making will not be carried out?

Mr. TABER. Oh, there is no such thing as that involved at all because there are 360,000 enlistments expiring and they are running along at a rate of reenlistment that will not permit them to hold the strength up to the amount of money that would still be left in this bill after deducting the item that the gentleman from Illinois has suggested would still be enough to take care of all that they would have.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I do not claim to have any unusual knowledge on this subject, although I am, with certain other Members of this House, a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy and am consequently especially interested in the position of the national defense of our country. I have to say that this war is not over yet. The peace treaties have not been signed and whether they are signed or not we still have a long way to go to insure peace in the world. The United Nations organization is not perfected, as we all know.

While it is quite possible that the armed services may average 30,000 persons less during the period of the fiscal year 1948 than is said to be required for the proper defense attitude of our country, I would hate to think that the number that could be actually engaged up to the number stated to be required, 1,070,000, could not be engaged by virtue of the fact that no appropriation was made for them. It would seem to me much more wise on the part of the United States in its position in international affairs today to have the authorization there and to increase the recruiting program, insofar as possible to step up the recruiting, so that the number 1,070,000 shall not be gone below. I think that is the important aspect from which to view this situation, rather than from whether or not they may not have as many men as they need to have in the Army, and therefore reduce the appropriations. There may not be as many men in the Army as there should be, but if not, for God's sake let us go out and get them, recruit them into the service, and let the Army maintain its required strength. I think that is the important viewpoint to take.

Mr. SHORT. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last three words.

Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary, I think, for me to state to the Members of this body my position on economy. I can cut and slash and wield the broadax at times. I think the first line of defense of any country is really its financial solvency, and that sound economy is just as important as an army, a navy, and an air force. But in this very sad and sick world, with all the troubles and the uncertainties that hang over us, we certainly should move with great caution in cutting appropriations for the Army and the Navy.

Personally I think we cut too much out of the Navy bill, and instead of offering amendments to cut further into this Army appropriation, I would almost be in favor of voting to restore the cuts that have already been made. For many weeks we have held long and exhaustive hearings before Subcommittee No. 1 on personnel of the Armed Services Committee of the House, and Members on both sides of this aisle who are members of the committee know the difficult task that confronted us in cutting down rank and the number of officers. We have done a pretty good job and will have a report, I hope, within the next fortnight to give to the Members of this body.

I trust that this House today will not pass this amendment. I had hoped that my good friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN], with whom I agree about 95 percent of the time, would not offer this amendment. I told him so the other day as we lunched together. It is just utter foolishness for us to continue to bleed this country white and give hundreds of millions of dollars to foreign countries and then refuse to take care of our own defenses here at home. It is all right to trust God, but we had better keep our powder dry; speak softly, but carry a big stick. I will admit the only nation that is a great enigma and a big question mark so far as the future of the United Nations is concerned, or world peace, is difficult to understand. I do not claim to understand the Russians. I think they possess many admirable qualities, and certainly I want to get along with them, because I can imagine no greater tragedy than armed conflict between the two mightiest nations on this earth today. I think I know them well enough after having traveled through all European Russia back in 1931 that the only language they understand is the language of force. I know that, having lived under the heel of tyranny and the yoke of oppression for centuries, that they respect strength and they have only contempt for weakness.

Let us not weaken our defenses here at home until the United Nations organization becomes firmly established and until we can set up an international police force to carry out its decisions. I hope this Committee will vote down the amendment offered by my good friend from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SHORT. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. There is one point that should be kept in mind in connection with this bill. For the first time in many years this bill does not carry a transfer clause for the funds of the Army. In other words, when money is appropriated for pay of the Army it can be used only for that purpose, so that if we should not have the full strength as it averages up through the year the money cannot be spent for some other purpose. But if you do not provide the money you cannot recruit to the strength allowed.

Mr. SHORT. I am very glad the gentleman brought out that point. He is eminently correct. Let us not fiddle here and play with the safety and security of this great Nation in this hour of peril. We must remain strong on land, sea, and in the air. We do not want to lose the fruits of victory after so great a price.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. DIRKSEN].

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

For expenses necessary for the transportation of Army supplies, equipment, funds of the Army, including packing, crating, and unpacking; maintenance and operation of transportation facilities and installations, including the purchase, construction, alteration, operation, lease, repair, development, and maintenance of and research in transportation equipment, including boats, vessels, motor-propelled passenger-carrying vehicles and railroad equipment; personal services in the District of Columbia; procurement of supplies and equipment; printing and binding; communication service; maps; wharfage, tolls, ferriage, drayage and cartage; premiums and indemnification for risks insured pursuant to the act of April 11, 1942 (46 U. S. C. 1128–1128g); conducting instruction in Army transportation activities; transportation on Army vessels of privately owned automobiles of Army personnel upon change of station; $347,577,227: Provided, That during the fiscal year 1948 the cost of transportation from point of origin to the first point of storage or consumption of supplies, equipment, and material in connection with the manufacturing and purchasing activities of the Quartermaster Corps may be charged to the appropriations from which such supplies, equipment, and material are procured: Provided further, That vessels under the jurisdiction of the Maritime Commission, the War Department, or the Navy Department, may be transferred or otherwise made available without reimbursement to any of such agencies upon the request of the head of one agency and the approval of the agency having jurisdiction of the vessels concerned.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, in connection with the Army Transport Service covered by the paragraph just read, I believe the House should be informed of these circumstances:

On page 82 of the June issue of News Week there appears an article under the heading of "School ships" in which it is stated that—

> The Division of International Exchange of Persons of the State Department's Office of International Information and Cultural Affairs has secured the use of two Army transports—the Marine Jumper and the Marine Tiger—for the exchange of summer students between this country and Europe. Each ship, of 900-passenger capacity, will make four round trips.

As a matter of fairness to the Army Transport Service I wish to inform the House that this article is misleading in that the ships concerned are not in any way under the jurisdiction of the Army Transport Service, but, rather, are operating under private management. The term "Army transports," as used, is apparently intended only to mean that these vessels were used as such during the recent conflict, and should not be confused with the vessels of the present Army Transportation Service.

Also, I may say here that at the time the House had before it legislation which would authorize waivers of certain safety requirements for vessels being used by the Army, in the transportation of passengers, I stated that it had been brought out in the hearings that efforts might be made to persuade the Army to use some of the C–4's, then under consideration, for the transportation of displaced persons from Europe to South America and that I felt the War Department should not utilize vessels upon which waivers had been requested for the transportation of great numbers of people of all ages and sexes on long voyages to different parts of the world. I further stated that if there were a need for such transportation, and if the War Department felt itself to be the proper agency to provide it, I believed the Secretary of War should make request to the Congress for specific authority in the premises, rather than going into the passenger-carrying business with ships which do not comply with our minimum safety standards and for which we were authorizing waivers only to permit the accomplishment of the necessary business of the War Department.

I am now informed that the War Department is operating two of these C–4's between Europe and South America, carrying displaced persons, and that it is expected that a third ship will soon be put on the same run. Waivers on these ships are effective only until December 31, 1947, so at that time they must be withdrawn from this service unless further legislation is enacted, or the vessels transferred into the category of public vessels of the United States.

I am further informed that the War Department is being fully reimbursed for the expenses incurred in this transportation project.

In my opinion, the use of the ships for the purpose indicated is inadvisable in that, in the event of a marine disaster in which heavy loss of life should be incurred, the ultimate responsibility for allowing these ships to operate rests directly upon this Congress, which has countenanced their operation in violation of the normal safety requirements of our current laws. Such a disaster would reflect most unfavorably upon the merchant marine of the United States.

I trust that the War Department will not find it necessary to extend this service further and that it will discontinue the use of these ships, on which waivers of safety requirements have been granted, for the transportation of women and children on long voyages at the earliest practicable moment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> For creating, maintaining, and operating at established aviation and related schools courses of instruction for military personnel, including payment of tuition, cost of equipment and supplies necessary for instruction, and expenses of special lectures, purchase of tools, equipment, materials, machines, textbooks, scientific and professional papers, instruments, and materials for theoretical and practical instruction; for maintenance, repair, storage, and operation of airships, war balloons, and other aerial machines, and including instruments, materials, gas plants, hangars, and repair shops, and appliances of every sort and description necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of all types of aircraft, and all necessary spare parts and equipment connected therewith and the establishment of landing and take-off runways; for purchase of supplies and procurement of services for securing, developing, printing, and reproducing photographs and motion pictures in connection with aerial photography, including aerial mapping and charting; improvement, equipment, maintenance, and operation of plants for testing and experimental work, and procuring and introducing water, electric light and power, gas, and sewerage, including maintenance, operation, and repair of such utilities at such plants; for the procurement of helium gas; for travel of military and civilian personnel in connection with the administration of this appropriation, including travel by air or rail required in connection with the transportation of new aircraft from factory to first destination; salaries and wages of civilian employees; transportation of materials in connection with consolidation of Air Corps activities; experimental investigations and purchase and development of new types of aircraft, accessories thereto, and aviation engines, including plans, drawings, and specifications thereof; purchase, manufacture, and construction of aircraft, and instruments and appliances, including radio, radar, and electronic equipment, necessary for the operation, construction, or equipment of aircraft, and spare parts and equipment connected therewith; air crew and aircraft rescue and fire fighting equipment, including trucks and boats; marking of military airways where the purchase of land is not involved; purchase, manufacture, and issue of special clothing, wearing apparel, and similar equipment for aviation purposes; expenses connected with the sale or disposal of surplus or obsolete aeronautical equipment, and the rental of buildings and other facilities for the handling or storage of such equipment; services of not more than four consulting engineers at experimental stations of the Air Corps as the Secretary of War may deem necessary, at rates of pay to be fixed by him not to exceed $50 a day for not exceeding 40 days each and necessary traveling expenses; purchase of special apparatus and appliances, repairs, and replacements of same used in connection with special scientific medical and meteorological research in the Air Corps; maintenance and operation of Air Corps printing plants outside of the District of Columbia authorized in accordance with law; special furniture, supplies and equipment for offices, shops, and laboratories; special services, including the salvaging of wrecked aircraft; payment of claims resulting from the operation of aircraft, under the provisions of the act of July 3, 1943 (31 U. S. C. 223b), as amended, and the Federal Tort Claims Act of August 2, 1946 (Public Law 601); $733,332,508: Provided, That in addition to said appropriation the Secretary may, prior to July 1, 1948, enter into contracts for procurement and construction of aircraft and equipment, spare parts and accessories, to an amount not in excess of $280,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amendment offered by Mr. MAHON: On page 25, line 22, strike out "$733,332,508" and insert in lieu thereof "$773,332,508."

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, there is nothing complicated or difficult about the amendment which is now before you. It is simply a question of whether or not the Congress is going to give to the Air Forces for the airplane-procurement program the amount of money approved by the Budget, requested by the President, and plead for before our committee by General Spaatz, Chief of the Army Air Forces. It is a clear-cut issue. It only involves $40,000,000. This bill provides savings below the budget estimate of $475,000,000. This will not make an appreciable reduction in the savings. It will reduce the saving by only $40,000,000. There will then remain a $435,000,000 saving.

While this amendment involves only a few millions of dollars, I think it is perhaps one of the most significant matters that will be presented to the Congress during this session. I think it may be that the vote on this amendment may be one of the most important votes in this House within a decade. Why would I make that statement? I make that statement because of this fact: If we are willing now to begin a course which leads inevitably to a loss of supremacy in the air; if we begin that course today, we will have taken the first step toward the disintegration of the Air Forces, toward the loss of our power in the air, and in the world; toward national peril, fear, and insecurity. If we cut the funds for the airplane-procurement program for the Air Forces below the sum requested by the President; if we take this step today, mark you well in succeeding years this vote may possibly be referred to as the beginning of that period of our post-war history that led to World War No. III. We must not go in that direction.

The readers of history can look back and see that following World War I we began to impoverish our Air Forces, impoverish our Army and Navy. We know that one of the major reasons why war struck us in the 1940's was that we had impoverished ourselves and did not have the respect of those nations which only understood the language of force.

Of course, I agree with the chairman of the Committee on Armed Forces when he says in effect, "Let us not reduce the authorized strength of the Army for the present; it is dangerous business." By the same token, it is dangerous business to reduce the power of the Air Forces. We are dealing with countries that understand most of all and best of all the language of force.

When General Marshall has sat at the conference table in Moscow and elsewhere, those who sat across the table from him looked beyond him to the power of the Nation which he represented. If they look beyond General Marshall at the conference tables in the future and think or say, "Why, General, you do not represent a proud Nation that had the world's greatest Army and Air Forces and the greatest Navy—the military might that won World War II. You represent a Nation that in a military sense is in a period of disintegration and we do not take you too seriously."

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAHON. I yield.

Mr. CHELF. Is it not true that we are today about a third-rate nation insofar as the Air Forces are concerned?

Mr. MAHON. I will not have the time to discuss the details of that question. There are some who question the supremacy of our Air Forces. I do know that the Air Forces came before us and asked for money for 932 planes. Later they advised that the funds they requested would provide only 749 planes. The action of the committee in reducing the request for planes by the sum of $40,000,000 has cut it further. The $40,000,000 cut represents a loss of 188 combat aircraft. So out of the money in this bill we could construct but 561 planes. Think of it. A great Nation like ours and a meager aircraft program like that. Think of how big we talk and how little will become the stick which we carry, if we start today a course which will lead to the disintegration of our Air Forces. We must not start that downward course.

We project our interests over into the Mediterranean Sea and Congress votes $400,000,000 for Greece and Turkey. I am only asking that you restore 10 percent of $400,000,000, the sum $40,000,000 for our own United States Army Air Forces.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. MAHON. Yes; I am only asking that we restore to this bill $40,000,000, which would be merely 10 percent of the Greek-Turkish loan. If we are going to talk with power and persuasion in the councils of the world, let us talk in that language knowing that we possess the power to back up the firm language which we speak.

There are those who will say, "But the Air Forces have more than $400,000,000." Certainly. They will have in excess of $1,000,000,000 for the airplane-production program for last year, this year, and next year. The planes that are provided for in this bill will not come off the assembly lines for about 2 or 3 years.

As I pointed out to the House yesterday, we must keep up our plane-procurement program, this program of manufacturing military aircraft at a reasonably steady flow, if we are to do other than invite disaster to the military aviation industry of this country.

There is some confusion in the House of Representatives at the moment and there may be some who do not hear my voice. What we say is perhaps not important, but what we do on this matter today will be heard around the world. Other nations are watching America, and they will quickly become aware of whether we are willing to stand by our Air Forces or whether we begin today to chop away at the foundations of the greatest air force in the world.

If other nations observe that Congress a few months after the end of World War II denies the plea of the Air Forces and the President for 742 planes, the number requested this year, they will have cause to feel that America is on the road to military weakness. Other nations may well feel that the likelihood of World War III is increased and that freedom-loving people are approaching a time of peril and fear. Such a downward course of action shall not be taken with my vote.

The number of planes provided for in this bill is fewer than the number of planes provided for in the Navy bill. We provided 575 planes for a much smaller force in the Navy, but this bill provides only 561 planes for the Army. I say to you that the number of planes provided in both these bills is inadequate. Instead of weakening our Air Forces we ought to be increasing their power.

The statement made by the able gentleman from South Dakota yesterday should not go unnoticed by those who are thinking seriously on this amendment which may mark the turning point in the Congress on the question of national defense. The gentleman, as will be shown by the RECORD, said yesterday:

> As the gentleman knows, because he was in the committee, I was not enthusiastic about this particular reduction at this time.

If the gentlemen who have studied this legislation, as the gentleman from South Dakota has, have some misgivings about it, I assure you that there is ample reason why all Members should have some misgiving about taking the responsibility of reducing the airplane-procurement program by 20 percent in numbers below that requested by the Air Forces and the Bureau of the Budget. It is a step that America cannot afford to take in this critical hour in our history. I trust that Members on both sides of the aisle will forget any partisanship. It will be all right to be conscious of economy, because $40,000,000 spent here and the policy established here may eventually contribute to the saving of billions of dollars, because it will indicate the trend of America in the field of national defense in the years that are to come. But if we take this first step toward becoming a second-rate power today it will be a very sad day in our history and in the history of the world. We must not take it, and I hope the House will approve my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has again expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON].

Mr. Chairman, it is passingly strange to me that it makes a difference as to who does the cutting. I was very much interested in the statement of my very dear friend and colleague, also coworker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON], who has just addressed you so eloquently. However, I want to call your attention to the fact that the President of the United States transferred $30,000,000 in airplane money to pay of the Army out of the 1947 Appropriations Committee bill. I did not hear anyone, not even the gentleman from Texas, say one word in protest. The $401,000,000 which the committee gave to the Air Forces for the present fiscal year was cut down to $371,000,000.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MAHON. I am advised by General Rawlings, budget officer of the Air Forces, that recent savings which have been effected will mean that the Air Forces will not lose any money in the amount approved by the Congress for the airplane procurement program for the fiscal year 1947. The action of the President, of course, in recommending certain savings, was later approved by the Congress.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. That is not the testimony before the committee.

The President cut $75,000,000 from the budget on research and development. Let us see what Gen. Curtis E. LeMay, former commander of the Twentieth Air Force, said. He said when that $75,000,000 cut came, and which the President made, it was the straw that broke the camel's back.

Did I hear a protest from the gentleman from Texas? Did I hear any squawks? I did not even hear a squeak or a squeaklet. He took $135,000,000, Mr. Chairman, from the Air Forces that we had given them and transferred it over to pay of the Army. I did not hear any squawk or a squeak or squeaklet, not even from the gentleman from Texas, my very dear and good friend. So it makes a difference, Mr. Chairman, as to who does the cutting.

Let us see what we have. I was told by the War Department that we are going to have 632 planes out of the 1948 funds as reduced. The gentleman from Texas says 580. He spoke about Navy planes. The question is not the number of planes. You can cut that down to 500 or 400 if you consider nothing but fighters, not heavy bombers. It is a question of amount of money.

Mr. Chairman, when you talk about airplanes for the Navy, you are talking about carrier planes. You are not talking about the B–36's which cost millions of dollars.

The 1948 Air Forces budget provides for $440,000,000 for airplanes, spare engines, and spare parts as against $371,000,000 the President left them after cutting off $30,000,000. Your committee reduced this amount to $396,000,000 or $25,000,000 more than they had left after the President's cut. We gave them $145,000,000 for research and development, all in 1948.

The Air Forces, Mr. Chairman, will have for 1948 $3,372,330,000 in all, or 56 percent of the total appropriated and contract authorization budgets of the Army.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Pay comes out of finance of the Army. Rations, clothing, and subsistence comes out of the Quartermaster. Various other items come from other services. But, the total for the Air Forces for 1948 is $3,752,000,000, 56 percent of the total Army budget. Let us see what they have in planes. They have 30,566 complete aircraft, 60,000 motors and spare parts, the inventory price of which is over $7,000,000,000. If these are not the latest wartime planes, Mr. Chairman, it is because the Army gave too many away. They have a backlog of 1945 production money amounting to $342,000,000 with 733 planes to be delivered. They have $288,000,000 of 1946 production money and $371,000,000 of 1947 production money. If this bill is passed as reported, they will have $396,000,000 for the fiscal year 1948, or $25,000,000 more than they had left in 1947 after the President took $30,000,000 from them. All for the latest and most modern planes. For heaven's sake, what do they want? I am getting tired of having the Executive, Mr. Chairman, cut airplanes, research, and the Army funds with nobody saying a word—but when the Congress tries to make a cut, immediately a cry goes to high heaven that we are wrecking the Air Forces. Did I hear any of my Democratic brethren object? When the Secretary of War, Mr. Chairman, cut the Air Forces from 401,000 to 375,000—and that is his testimony—did I hear any squawk or squeak or squeaklet from anybody? Not one word was said; ot one solitary word.

Mr. Chairman, I want to express my profound gratitude to the Democratic members of the committee, including the gentleman from Texas [Mr. MAHON]. I want to express my profound gratitude to the other gentleman, particularly to the gentleman from North Carolina, Judge KERR, and say that this is not a political question. The decision on this question was not made on a political basis. We were practically evenly divided insofar as party was concerned. I ask the committee to stand by this bill as it is. The committee worked hard on it. When you talk in terms of percentages as to the amount of the cut, it is a mighty small cut for them to take, Mr. Chairman. I believe in an air force. I know the Air Forces. I know them from A to Z. I have worked on that ever since 1937. I want a good national defense, Mr. Chairman. I went through the dark days of Dunkirk when we gave everything we had to England; we had to. We did not have enough powder to wad a shotgun to carry on an offensive for 1 day on one front, and I sat there sweating blood. I want an adequate national defense, and I believe we can have an adequate national defense, under this bill as it is. I have been criticized because the cut was not enough; because the Navy had an 11 percent cut and this is 8.3.

Mr. Chairman, we took every item separately and voted on it. No one considered what the Navy did. That had nothing to do with it, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that this House stand by the committee.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. THOMAS of New Jersey. The question was asked by the gentleman from Texas as to whether our Air Forces were not a third-rate air force in the world. I would like to ask approximately the same question of the chairman of the committee. How does our air force compare with the air force of Russia and the air force of Great Britain?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. As far as Great Britain is concerned, we have a complete interchange of scientific knowledge and have had all during the war, so we are on a par with research and development. I know that we have more planes than they have. I do not know what the production is.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. As I said on the floor of the House yesterday, if someone, I do not care who he is or where he is, can tell me how we can get information or tell us a system or method of getting information as to what Russia is doing behind her iron curtain, he will make a great contribution toward the national defense of this Nation. No one knows what Russia has.

Mr. CHELF. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. CHELF. Why should we take any chances? If we do not know what Russia has, why should we take any chances by cutting our Air Forces? That is all the more reason we should be careful about it.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. The same argument the gentleman makes would have us have an Air Forces production program of $3,000,000,000. I know Russia does not have what we have.

Mr. CHELF. How does the gentleman know that she does not have?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Because she did not have it during the war.

Mr. CHELF. The gentleman cannot be too sure of it. They are manufacturing day and night over there.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. We know that Russia at the conclusion of the war had an ineffective air force, because of what happened? If it had not been for our Air Forces at the end of the war they would have had a terrible time. The hearings before our committee showed time and again that it was our Air Forces that destroyed the material behind the German lines. If conditions in the air force in Russia are known to the gentleman, I would like to know where he gets his information. There is not any information on Russia. We are trying to find out now what her air force is.

Mr. CHELF. I repeat that we should not take a chance.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word, and ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, it may be true that the budget officer of the War Department is in the gallery, but I think it is quite apparent that the manicured and tailored gentlemen who were here last week speaking as farmers are not here today. I think you will also be aware of the fact that the polyglot, nondescript CIO's who have prowled our halls and our private offices are not here today. We come now to a question which concerns the well-being of our Nation and that alone. The way you decide on the question involved here will be dictated by the voice of conscience and patriotic devotion to your country without regard to the pressure groups that might come forward. This is a matter between you and your conscience.

I have been amazed today at the manner in which history repeats itself. I remember so well back in 1939 when the Committee on Military Affairs brought out a bill authorizing 5,500 airplanes for the entire Army, training planes, bombers, fighter planes, and what not, and we wrangled here for days and days and in conference for weeks about whether it should be 3,400 or 5,500. On that occasion I saw some of my very dear friends on this side of the aisle go off supporting

3,400 airplanes. They went off on that point following gentlemen who spoke here and who got very red in the face, who knew what the condition was in Europe better than the administration or the State Department or the War Department.

One of those gentleman said that he had better information from the inside of Germany than the Government of the United States had and there would be no war in Europe, and yet it was a matter of only weeks before the war which he denied would take place was very much in existence.

Mr. TABER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. TABER. Does the gentleman understand that at that time none of these 5,500 planes were built and that the proposition to cut the 1,900 planes was accompanied by a proposal to add $10,000,000 for a research fund which was beaten by many of you people voting against it and as a result the flying program was delayed almost a year?

Mr. KILDAY. Let me give you the facts. The gentleman is entirely in error. The point was that under the training program there would not be air crews sufficient to man the 5,500 airplanes, but there would be air crews sufficient, and many of you recall it, to man 3,400 of them, and the 2,100 were to be in reserve and held as auxiliaries. That was the issue that we fought out at that time. I cannot yield further to the gentleman.

Mr. TABER. There were no designs ready to build the planes and none of those were built.

Mr. KILDAY. When you argue that, you kill the opposition to this amendment. I want you to know that not one airplane, the designs for which went on the drawing boards after Pearl Harbor ever took part in the last world war. Understand that. I will say it again. Not one airplane the designs for which went on the drawing boards after Pearl Harbor ever participated in the last war. The point is that you must first have your experimentation and development. Then you must develop your industry, so that they will have experience in quantity production. Then you have to get young men to fly these jet-propelled planes and should we ever get to atomic-energy-propelled planes the men must be trained as well for that. You must develop your industry and personnel as well as have your scientific research and development.

But I said a while ago about how some of my very good friends here went off following the 3,400 plane idea on the assurance of men whose faces were very, very red and whose tempers rose quite high. I was with them in Namur, Belgium, in 1944. We stood there listening to one of those tremendous bomber raids that passed over from England on its way into Germany in those final attacks that knocked Germany out of the war. Raids consisting of about 1,000 bombers and escort planes bringing the total number to more than 3,400 planes. I thought I detected upon their faces a rather sheepish look. I do not believe that those friends of mine are going to go off again today on a thing of the same character backed by the same type of argument.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

Mr. KILDAY. The figures that the War Department submitted through the Bureau of the Budget contemplated 932 aircraft for a 400,000-man air force. I should say on the face of it that that would be a minimum. But by the time the bill reached here the number of planes that amount of money would have bought, because of the increase in price, had been reduced to 749 planes. The bill proposes to give the Army Air Forces, which is stabilized at 400,000 men, 561 airplanes. Are you going to be able to vote to cut the production of airplanes in this great Nation which has said that we are going to stop communism at the borders of the countries into which communism is trying to intrude itself? Are you going to say to the people whom you expect to stand up against communism, against Russia, if you please, that this great powerful Nation, is going to cut the production of airplanes? Are we going to say to the Russian Bear that we are now producing planes at the tremendous rate of 561 a year, including fighters, bombers, and what not.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDAY. I yield.

Mr. MITCHELL. You mention the figure 500 planes.

Mr. KILDAY. I said 561.

Mr. MITCHELL. Why do you not say whether they are fighters or whether they are $5,000,000 bombers?

Mr. KILDAY. I will ask that you tell me that. I yield to the gentleman to tell me that.

Mr. MITCHELL. I am asking you to tell me.

Mr. KILDAY. Yes, of course, you do not know; yet, you are going to vote to cut it down to 561 airplanes, even though they be puddle-jumpers. You do not know and you are willing to vote to cut it down.

Mr. MITCHELL. I know they are not puddle-jumpers. I know that you are trying to confuse the issue.

Mr. KILDAY. I leave that to the gentlemen who have served with me longer and who know my reputation for confusing the issue. But I do submit that the powerful United States is going to be held up to the world now as the protector of small nations against communism, as the great Nation which produced 561 airplanes, bombers, if you please, or 561 fighters.

I would not vote to appropriate money for the large-scale production of even B–29's. Whether some of you think otherwise or not, I still think it is the best heavy bomber in the world. I would not vote for a dollar for the production of P–51's or P–47's, but I do know our jet-propelled planes did not get into the last war because we did not get started on their production and their use in time. I know that atomic energy may be or may not be susceptible of such use, but I see where Willi Messerschmidt said we had approached him, as the greatest aeronautical engineer of Germany, to come here and work on atomic-propelled airplanes. I do not know whether his statement is true or whether he is coming or not. If he does not do it, somebody ought to. All I know is that my own country cannot afford in these crucial hours to say that 561 airplanes is the maximum production we are going to have during the ensuing year. I hope the amendment is adopted.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. KILDAY] has again expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to consider some aspects of the aircraft industry itself and to realize a few of the basic facts.

In the first place, the air-frame industry is divided into two general parts. There is, first, that section which produces a very large number of small-type aircraft, generally for personal use. That includes the airplanes such as the Piper Cub and all the rest of those planes which are relatively quite small. The balance of the air-frame industry is the part that produces the metal aircraft, built for special performance, whether it be of the fighter type or the bomber type, the cargo- or passenger-carrying transport type. There are also the instrument, accessory, and radio manufacturers, without whose efforts toward production, the entire industry must fail.

The engine industry is similarly divided into two sections: First, that section which produces the small-type engines for the planes first mentioned; and, secondly, that section which produces the large-type engines for the military and transport types.

In the engine industry we have two principal reciprocating engine companies, Pratt & Whitney and Wright. Engaged in the manufacture of jet aircraft engines, we have the General Electric Co. and the Westinghouse Co. I understand that Pratt & Whitney is soon to engage in jet-engine manufacture also under British license.

In the jet field it is acknowledged by all concerned that the British are about 2 years ahead of the United States in the design and manufacture of the jet-type engines. That was testified to before our committee in its consideration of our air-navigational problems, and we are very well aware of it. We are also well aware of another thing, namely, that the British have sold 100 of their best and most modern-type engines to the Soviet Government. It is also well known that several hundred of the very finest scientists and engineers who worked for the Nazi Government have been taken inside Russia, and many of them are now working on the improvement of the jet engine.

As I said, many of the former German scientists are now working for the Soviet Government in the improvement of that engine, which is already 2 years ahead of ours. We have had to even go so far as to take a license from the British for the manufacture of their advanced jet-type engines. The Pratt & Whitney Co., I understand, is now taking over that license to manufacture the British jet engines.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. If this bill passes, the Air Forces will have available for research and development with 1948 and prior year funds $553,000,000 to take care of exactly what the gentleman is speaking about. There was not one dollar for research and development, there was not one employee—and they have 7,000 employees in research and development—that was cut out of the Air Forces.

Mr. HINSHAW. I appreciate very much the gentleman's statement. It is no doubt correct, and I think the amount of funds requested of and allowed by the committee are quite appropriate under the circumstances. I have no argument to make on that score.

I want to recall a time when a number of us were here, the years 1939 and 1940. We came here one morning and found that the United States had on hand and on order a certain amount of military equipment. About 95 percent of it was on order and 5 percent on hand. The Members who were here then will remember that we had on hand something like 1,952 military aircraft. Of that 1,952 military aircraft that were on hand in our Air Forces, exactly 52 of them—the then model of the B–17—were fit for combat duty. We started this last war with 52 then modern aircraft, although we had some 1,900 obsolete aircraft on hand. I think no one will disagree with that statement.

I do not care how many planes we have on hand that were left over from this last World War, there is hardly one of them that is fit to serve in any national defense effort that we may have to exert in the near future. We have a few jets, some P–80's that happen to be made in my own part of the United States, that are now being used for test and training purposes by the Army, but beyond the P–80 there is the P–82, the P–83, and the P–84. When it comes to bombers the B–29 is now a medium-type bomber that is no longer the largest type. There is the B–35, the B–36, the B–45, the B–46, the B–47, and the B–48, which have jet-type propulsion motors.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. HINSHAW. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for three additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. HINSHAW. Some time ago it was the privilege of my committee to visit the installation at Muroc Dry Lake where tests are made on modern type aircraft. We saw the B–46 that was undergoing tests in 1947. It is a prototype aircraft. It is not yet in production; as a matter of fact all of the tests on it are not completed. But, remember, that is a class of aircraft we need to have in production. We also saw the B–35 and the B–36 and other aircraft that were there. Those are going to be the aircraft of the near future. In that case we should have no further use for the types we used in the past World War. They are obsolete. I do not care how many of them we might have in storage, they are not going to be of much use to us except on a temporary basis in any emergency of the immediate future. We might just as well give them to China or Siam or any other nation that wants to train its fliers to operate them. The safety of the United States will largely depend on keeping up the production facilities for the modern type of aircraft. The modern aircraft-production industry cannot be turned off and on like a spigot; it needs 5 years to develop an airplane. When you shut down the aircraft industry it will take 2 years to get it going again. And I tell you this right here and now, there is no nation who might feel like becoming an aggressor in this world who does not know that if it is going to be successful it is going to have to attack the United States first this time, not last; and I think that it is up to the United States for the protection of the peace of the world to maintain its aircraft industry and its production at the highest possible peacetime rate.

I appreciate the necessity for research and development; it is absolutely necessary, but you must keep your production lines going, you have got to keep them going or your trained and skilled personnel in that industry are going to drift away from it and the industry itself will then bog down. To keep this industry up to a point sufficient to support the needs of national defense requires that they build 3,600 planes a year for the armed services. You have now got it cut down to about 1,200. Remember that in the event of a national emergency you cannot turn the aircraft industry on and off like a spigot and have them begin at once to turn out jet-type aircraft; it is an industry that has to be kept going at an operating level all the time. If you think otherwise you are crazy, and I do not mind telling you so.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield.

Mr. RIVERS. Does the gentleman believe this bill is adequate to keep the industry going in performing condition?

Mr. HINSHAW. That I do not believe. I will just say this, that the President cut funds from the appropriation made last year for the production of airplanes and transferred the funds to other uses.

I do not know why my side of the committee did not protest against that cut as well as the other side. I think both sides should have protested it and hollered to high heaven about those transfers that were made by the President.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HINSHAW. I yield to the gentleman from South Dakota.

Mr. CASE of South Dakota. I would suggest that the gentleman read the hearings and he will find that some Members on his side of the aisle have several pages in the record calling attention to what that cut was and what it did.

Mr. HINSHAW. I appreciate that. I have not had the time to read 1,600 pages as carefully as I should. I have only been able to glance through them, but I appreciate the viewpoint because it is correct, as the gentleman has stated it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. WORLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I thought that the Congress of the United States had at last learned what we should have learned after the First World War and certainly what we should have learned from our experience before and during World War II, that is the near-fatal philosophy of too little too late. It seems to me that we are repeating today, or at least this is one of the first steps in repeating, that same dangerous philosophy of not having enough when we need it.

A good bit of discussion has been had about the relative strength of our own Air Forces compared with those of other countries of the world. I do not know how absolutely accurate the statement is I am going to read to the Committee, but it was carried in the Washington Post on or about April 10, 1947, as a news item. It is reported by the United Press, which is a reliable news-gathering association, and it reads as follows:

SOVIET PLANE OUTPUT SET AT 100,000

Russia will produce 100,000 military and civilian planes this year and is fast overcoming American air dominance, Collier's magazine reported last night.

Soviet figures disclosed in the article exceed America's wartime best and virtually triple this country's 1946 output.

Reporting "Soviet leaders are staking everything on air preparations," the article said Russia has shifted emphasis from fighters to bombers.

The 100,000 figure compares with 36,204 planes produced here in 1946. In 1944, America, fully mobilized, produced 96,369 military planes.

The article reported the Red civil air fleet has become a "Kremlin pet," under Air Marshal Fedor Astakhov. Air lines in satellite countries have Russian financial, equipment, and technical aid, with the surviving personnel of the old German air lines, Deutsche Lufthansa, now working for Russia, it said. They work with a "bottomless purse."

The satellites, it said, obtain air agreements with America, paving the way for Russian-dominated air lines to fly here without permitting our lines to enter Russia.

I hope the Committee will pay particular attention to the concluding paragraph:

The Red air force was said to have 10 airborne divisions and plans for 35. The United States has one.

We cannot make a mistake, Mr. Chairman, today, in supporting the amendment offered by the gentleman from Texas, but I am firmly convinced that we will make a serious mistake if we reject this restitution of the aircraft for which the War Department is pleading.

Mr. RIVERS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, as a member of the Armed Services Committee, I, like you, feel my responsibility in the passage of this bill and its over-all effect on us now and in the future. I want you to know that the source of my information is the source where the Committee on Appropriations gets theirs. We had the same access to records as did the Committee on Appropriations, and surely we have the same responsibility as any committee or any Member of Congress. At the same time, I fully realize that our sincerity and our patriotism are no better than yours.

The passage of this bill today will determine what we will have by way of air strength and by way of an Army, so far as that is concerned, in the future. We know from experts that today we are No. 3 with an air force, and in a little while we are going to vote for "uniexpansion," not "unification." We will have a separate air force, I hope, and we will not be content to have a third-rate air force. Your vote today will determine where you are going tomorrow. If you are satisfied with a third-rate air force, vote to dismantle it. We did a pretty good job sinking the Navy the other day. For God's sake, do not shoot down all of our airplanes by your vote today.

Remember this, that you have to have an air force in this country that can strike a long ways off immediately. It has always got to be in readiness. As the distinguished gentleman from Texas told you with a master's voice, not one airplane that was designed after Pearl Harbor ever got in the air. The B–29's never got to Europe; the few we had went to the Pacific. It takes about 5 years to get an airplane in the air, and those now on the drawing boards, the prototype airplanes, will never satisfy the needs.

My good friend from North Carolina, the Honorable CARL DURHAM, when he came back from Europe recently, told us an alarming story regarding a great airplane installation, a missile factory, 32 miles underground. That airplane factory was tunnelled by the resourceful Germans 32 miles underground, rock-ribbed and secure. Every inch of that V–2 factory fell into the hands of the Russians, with the know-how that goes with it, and it is loaded to the gills with machinery that came from Milwaukee. Those Russians have the know-how on guided missiles, they have the know-how on jet-propelled airplanes. I know, if you can believe anything the people in the Air Forces tell you, that we are behind on the jet airplane. These are straws in the wind. We are paying those fellows and they had better be telling the truth. I for one prefer to believe them.

We hear a lot about the GI's who served in this war and served gloriously. Many of them flew, like my good friend from Mississippi. I hope some of them will get up here and tell us.

I am not satisfied with this bill. I believe it is bad. I do not care what you say about the interchange of scientific development, I know that those who are in charge of scientific development out there at Wright Field in Ohio are not satisfied.

I do not care what President Truman did by way of his rescission of $500,000,000. That is his responsibility, but I tell you today it is my responsibility, today it is mine, and I propose to vote against dismantling our Air Forces. I am not satisfied with this bill. I believe we need more money. On any occasion where I can vote to give them more, I propose to do it. I do not think 561 airplanes are enough. I do not think a willingness to give them more is enough. The thing to do is to give it to them, because when they strike they are going to strike hard and fast. Let us have an airplane ready to strike a lot further away than anybody has had an airplane or guided missile go. If you do that, your responsibility will have been discharged and discharged well. The question is, where do you want to stand? As far as I am concerned, I want to stand where I know that my responsibiilty has been carried out. I tell you, in the next war, he who comes out second will not come out at all.

Mr. JOHNSON of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last 7 words.

Mr. Chairman, the trouble with frittering away the money we must have for airplanes to be adequately prepared, is that you will never know your folly until long after we have left this House. I saw a little air force in the First World War, which I thought would be the pattern for what would be future warfare if we ever had another war. I came out of the first war firmly convinced that the world's great nations would never engage in a folly like war again during my lifetime. I lived to see the day when the American Air Force became the spearhead of our entire defense system. It is the planes that will turn the victory, as numerous speakers have mentioned here today. It takes a long time to build an airplane. The B–29 got out of the blueprint stage in 1935 but they were not on the front until 1944. The unborn planes and plans that were in our laboratories and factories at the end of this war are the ones that are going to come out in the near future.

One point I want to make to you today is that I am convinced to the point of an obsession, that measured by the present destructive capacity of the human race and the armies and navies today the world cannot stand another war. You and I know the world is still governed by force. The big men of the large nations will listen to the representative of a nation that has force behind it, stark, brute, military and industrial force. When our Secretary of State talks, his words are exactly as convincing or exactly as weak as we are strong or we are weak in a military way. We must take advice from the men who have the trusteeship of our national defense, whose duty it is to provide the protection of our national life against any aggression by any power or combination of powers.

The Air Forces asked for a force of 400,000 men, which was concurred in by the Chief of Staff and the Secretary of War. The request was cut down to 375,000. The same group also asked for over 900 airplanes, and a system of production where we would have continuous production lines that would have no interruption. When you fritter those requests down to five-hundred-plus planes you are liable to destroy that continuous flow of production that is essential in modern warfare and thus lose our industrial potential, as to airplanes, so essential in this air age.

Mr. KILDAY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. KILDAY. May I ask my friend if he would not agree that when word goes out over the world that our Army people, that is, the administration dealing with those foreign nations, ask for 932 airplanes and wind up with 561, that constitutes repudiation by the Congress of the United States of the people who are trying to be stern with the aggressors of Europe?

Mr. JOHNSON of California. I do not know that it constitutes a repudiation but it is notice to the world that we are disintegrating to a certain extent and that we are not going to back up our strong words with a strong military and production force.

Another point I would like to make to you is that our best gamble for peace and our best gamble to restore peace to a world which is in chaos and trouble and turmoil is for America to remain strong. All the people who have studied international problems tell us that if America remains strong we have the potentiality of leading this troubled world into an era of peace. If we disintegrate we are laying the groundwork for the war that our sons and grandsons may have to fight 20 or 30 or 35 years from today.

As I say, the key to the whole American defense system is the Air Force of the United States. It was the power that brought about victory by mass raids and mass destruction of the production and communications system of Germany, Italy, and Japan. We must be ready in the future. In the future we will not have time to get ready as we did in the last two wars. The troubles of the world will be in our lap at once. There will be no declaration of war. There will be no warning of war until flying over our great American industrial centers we see the guided missiles and the great airplanes that will lay us low with one single blast before we can get ready to defend our country, if we are foolish and weak enough not to be on the alert, ready to defend or strike when the storm breaks.

That is why I am so anxious to see you restore this forty or fifty million dollars. It may be a mere drop in the bucket considering the benefits that we will reap, but it is the amount that we need to keep the Air Force at a strength which the experts on the subject of our national defense, the Air Force officers and Air Force men, tell us is absolutely essential for our national security.

Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will be adopted.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to restore to the bill the $40,000,000 for airplanes which was taken out of it.

Mr. Chairman, for fully two decades we have fought this same fight—the fight to attempt to depreciate the value of aircraft. Consciously or unconsciously, it has a good deal to do with this particular appropriation today.

I served on the old Committee on Military Affairs, and I am now serving on the Committee on Armed Services of the House. I saw this selfsame fight carried on from the time of the organization of our Air Forces and from the fight of Billy Mitchell to obtain a place in the sun for the Air Forces. The fight has gone on. Back in the thirties we saw the fight in the Congress and in the Committee on Military Affairs to hold down the size of the Air Forces and the number of airplanes.

My good friend and colleague from the State of Texas [Mr. KILDAY] has referred you to the bill which was passed in 1939 authorizing the purchase of 6,000 airplanes as the sum total of airplanes for the Army Air Forces. I recall very vividly the fight which was made then in the Committee on Military Affairs and the fight that was made on this floor. As it has been said, the fight was to reduce that 6,000 airplanes down to 3,500 airplanes. When that effort became a failure, a fight was made to reduce the number from 6,000 down to 5,500, and for a time the bill contained an amendment reducing the sum total of the air strength to 5,500. Then someone presented an amendment which was placed in the bill for a time to stagger the purchase of these airplanes over a period of 5 years so that we would not get our air force loaded down with what they said was the huge number of 5,500 airplanes. All of that time over there in the skies of Europe dark clouds were working up and anyone with any foresight at all could see a war in the offing. Here on the floor of the House in Washington we were fighting over an amendment as to whether or not we would authorize the purchase of 5,500 airplanes at one time or whether we would stagger the purchase of them over a period of 5 years, one-fifth each year.

This fight still goes on. I think unconsciously sometimes and consciously at other times, those who oppose increasing the strength of the air force are doing so to the serious detriment of the safety of our country. The men who today recommend to the Congress the purchase of 932 airplanes are to a large extent the same men who handled our air forces in Europe and in the Pacific during the war. We had confidence in those men as our leaders at that time. They did a magnificent job in Europe. They did a grand job in the Pacific. They were backed up by skilled, trained airmen, and they did the job that was necessary to win. They tell us today that we need 932 airplanes. The sole question before this Congress is, Shall we get 932 airplanes or shall we again depreciate the value of the air service and reduce that number to some 580? That is the question that the Congress has the responsibility for answering today. In the light of history and in the light of the fight that has gone on in the past, we should give the air forces what it says is needed as the irreducible minimum for our air strength.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. BROOKS] has expired.

Mr. FISHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last five words.

Mr. Chairman, I asked for this time in order to read a paragraph from a letter which I received last February from a very eminent authority on the subject of national defense in this country. It was learned last February that Lt. Gen. Ira C. Eaker planned to retire on the 15th of June. In response to an expression of regret, he wrote me a letter, one paragraph of which I think it would be interesting for everyone to hear and one which I think every American should read and remember.

As I stated a moment ago, this letter is from General Eaker, who commanded the American Air Forces in the ETO during the war and who is recognized as one of the most brilliant strategists to come out of this war and one of our most distinguished soldiers. I would like to have this expression of General Eaker considered by the House in connection with the pending amendment and this appropriation bill. Of course, it does not refer to any appropriation bill in particular, but it does refer in general to the vital defense and the future security of this country.

I have been a fairly close student for many years of history in the making. This interest and knowledge of the subject were greatly heightened during the years I was abroad in the Second World War. As a result of my analysis of the situation, I am as certain as I am of anything that rough weather lies ahead for our country. I think this may not be entirely because of the antagonism of any foreign power. I believe the lack of interest and concern on the part of our citizens will be a more immediate cause of our undoing. What I see happening today is a clear carbon copy of what happened in the years from 1919 to 1939. I think the result will be the same with this difference. In the First and Second World Wars we were given 2 years or more to gear from a very depreciated peacetime military strength to a tremendous potential for all-out war. Our industrial capacity and our manpower were undisturbed by foreign weapons during that period. The enemy had no weapon which could reach our industrial areas and attack our manpower while we got ready. The next time this fortunate circumstance will not apply. There will be a weapon in the hands of the enemy, the long-range bomber and the long-range guided missile, with which he can attack our industrial cities and depreciate our manpower while we are struggling back from a low level to the height of our potential.

Any aggressor of the future will have learned from the last two world wars that he must attack the United States first and prevent its manpower and weapon-making capacity from building to full scale if he is to win. Therefore, it is inevitable that any war of the future will be heralded by initial attacks by long-range weapons on the factories and cities of the United States. We will never have 2 to 3 years in the future to get ready; we will be cut down before we have that opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, this letter comes from a man who was quoted in the press a few months ago as saying that a second-best air force in modern warfare is of the same value as a second-best poker hand.

Mr. THOMASON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FISHER. I yield.

Mr. THOMASON. I wish to join my colleague in paying deserved tribute to a great American and a great Texan. The gentleman and I both know the stock from which General Eaker comes. His parents live in the gentleman's district and the general's brother, Claude Eaker, lives in my district at Fort Stockton and we have known the family for many years. I recall that as a young rancher, which General Eaker was before World War I, he enlisted as a private in the armed services in my home city of El Paso, at Fort Bliss. From then until today his rise has been steady and deserved. I regard him as one of the greatest officers who has come out of two world wars, and whether he is in the Army or out of it, he is a great citizen and a great American. He carries with him in his retirement the affection of the people of his native State of Texas and the admiration and gratitude of all the patriotic and peace-loving people of our great Nation.

Mr. FISHER. I thank the gentleman for his contribution. General Eaker, as we all know, has served 30 years quite brilliantly, and in the Air Corps he certainly contributed tremendously to the winning of the war and to the security of this Nation. His views on this subject are worthy of consideration and study by the American people, and will be widely respected now and in the future by all thinking people who are devoted to the future of our country.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, in order to see if we can arrive at an agreement to limit debate on this amendment I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close in 1 hour, the last 10 minutes to be reserved to the committee.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, how much time will that give the Members wishing to be heard on the amendment?

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. I have allowed 5 minutes to each Member indicating a desire to be heard.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. ENGEL of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. MICHENER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 3678) making appropriations for the Military Establishment for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. DIRKSEN asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS ACT, 1947

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes; and I ask unanimous consent that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the full report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the conference report.

The Clerk read the conference report.

The conference report and statement are as follows:

CONFERENCE REPORT

The comittee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes, having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the text of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the Senate amendment insert the following:

"SHORT TITLE AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

"SECTION 1. (a) This Act may be cited as the 'Labor Management Relations Act, 1947'.

"(b) Industrial strife which interferes with the normal flow of commerce and with the full production of articles and commodities for commerce, can be avoided or substantially minimized if employers, employees, and labor organizations each recognize under law one another's legitimate rights in their relations with each other, and above all recognize under law that neither party has any right in its relations with any other to engage in acts or practices which jeopardize the public health, safety, or interest.

"It is the purpose and policy of this Act, in order to promote the full flow of commerce, to prescribe the legitimate rights of both employees and employers in their relations affecting commerce, to provide orderly and peaceful procedures for preventing the interference by either with the legitimate rights of the other, to protect the rights of individual employees in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to define and proscribe practices on the part of labor and management which affect commerce and are inimical to the general welfare, and to protect the rights of the public in connection with labor disputes affecting commerce.

"TITLE I—AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

"SEC. 101. The National Labor Relations Act is hereby amended to read as follows:

"'FINDINGS AND POLICIES

"'SECTION 1. The denial by some employers of the right of employees to organize and the refusal by some employers to accept the procedure of collective bargaining lead to strikes and other forms of industrial strife or unrest, which have the intent or the necessary effect of burdening or obstructing commerce by (a) impairing the efficiency, safety, or operation of the instrumentalities of commerce; (b) occurring in the current of commerce; (c) materially affecting, restraining, or controlling the flow of raw materials or manufactured or processed goods from or into the channels of commerce, or the prices of such materials or goods in commerce; or (d) causing diminution of employment and wages in such volume as substantially to impair or disrupt the market for goods flowing from or into the channels of commerce.

"'The inequality of bargaining power between employees who do not possess full freedom of association or actual liberty of contract, and employers who are organized in the corporate or other forms of ownership association substantially burdens and affects the flow of commerce, and tends to aggravate recurrent business depressions, by depressing wage rates and the purchasing power of wage earners in industry and by preventing the stabilization of competitive wage rates and working conditions within and between industries.

"'Experience has proved that protection by law of the right of employees to organize and bargain collectively safeguards commerce from injury, impairment, or interruption, and promotes the flow of commerce by removing certain recognized sources of industrial strife and unrest, by encouraging practices fundamental to the friendly adjustment of industrial disputes arising out of differences as to wages, hours, or other working conditions, and by restoring equality of bargaining power between employers and employees.

"'Experience has further demonstrated that certain practices by some labor organizations, their officers, and members have the intent or the necessary effect of burdening or obstructing commerce by preventing the free flow of goods in such commerce through strikes and other forms of industrial unrest or through concerted activities which impair the interest of the public in the free flow of such commerce. The elimination of such practices is a necessary condition to the assurance of the rights herein guaranteed.

"'It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to eliminate the causes of certain substantial obstructions to the free flow of commerce and to mitigate and eliminate these obstructions when they have occurred by encouraging the practice and procedure of collective bargaining and by protecting the exercise by workers of full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of their own choosing, for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of their employment or other mutual aid or protection.

"'DEFINITIONS

"'SEC. 2. When used in this Act—

"'(1) The term "person" includes one or more individuals, labor organizations, partnerships, associations, corporations, legal representatives, trustees, trustees in bankruptcy, or receivers.

"'(2) The term "employer" includes any person acting as an agent of an employer, directly or indirectly, but shall not include the United States or any wholly owned Government corporation, or any Federal Reserve Bank, or any State or political subdivision thereof, or any corporation or association operating a hospital, if no part of the net earnings inures to the benefit of any private shareholder or individual, or any person subject to the Railway Labor Act, as amended from time to time, or any labor organization (other than when acting as an employer), or anyone acting in the capacity of officer or agent of such labor organization.

"'(3) The term "employee" shall include any employee, and shall not be limited to the employees of a particular employer, unless the Act explicitly states otherwise, and shall include any individual whose work has ceased as a consequence of, or in connection with, any current labor dispute or because of any unfair labor practice, and who has not obtained any other regular and substantially equivalent employment, but shall not include any individual employed as an agricultural laborer, or in the domestic service of any family or person at his home, or any individual employed by his parent or spouse, or any individual having the status of an independent contractor, or any individual employed as a supervisor, or any individual employed by an employer subject to the Railway Labor Act, as amended from time to time, or by any other person who is not an employer as herein defined.

"'(4) The term "representatives" includes any individual or labor organization.

"'(5) The term "labor organization" means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.

"'(6) The term "commerce" means trade, traffic, commerce, transportation, or communication among the several States, or between the District of Columbia or any Territory of the United States and any State or other Territory, or between any foreign country and any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia, or within the District of Columbia or any Territory, or between points in the same State but through any other State or any Territory or the District of Columbia or any foreign country.

"'(7) The term "affecting commerce" means in commerce, or burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce, or having led or tending to lead to a labor dispute burdening or obstructing commerce or the free flow of commerce.

"'(8) The term "unfair labor practice" means any unfair labor practice listed in section 8.

"'(9) The term "labor dispute" includes any controversy concerning terms, tenure or conditions of employment, or concerning the associaton or representation of persons in negotiating, fixing, maintaining, changing, or seeking to arrange terms or conditions of employment, regardless of whether the disputants stand in the proximate relation of employer and employee.

"'(10) The term "National Labor Relations Board" means the National Labor Relations Board provided for in section 3 of this Act.

"'(11) The term "supervisor" means any individual having authority, in the interest of the employer, to hire, transfer, suspend, lay off, recall, promote, discharge, assign, reward, or discipline other employees, or responsibly to direct them, or to adjust their grievances, or effectively to recommend such action, if in connection with the foregoing the exercise of such authority is not of a merely routine or clerical nature, but requires the use of independent judgment.

"'(12) The term "professional employee" means—

"'(a) any employee engaged in work (i) predominantly intellectual and varied in character as opposed to routine mental, manual, mechanical, or physical work; (ii) involving the consistent exercise of discretion and judgment in its performance; (iii) of such a character that the output produced or the result accomplished cannot be standardized in relation to a given period of time; (iv) requiring knowledge of an advanced type in a field of science or learning customarily acquired by a prolonged course of specialized intellectual instruction and study in an institution of higher learning or a hospital, as distinguished from a general academic education or from an apprenticeship or from training in the performance of routine mental, manual, or physical processes; or

"'(b) any employee, who (i) has completed the courses of specialized intellectual instruction and study described in clause (iv) of paragraph (a), and (ii) is performing related work under the supervision of a professional person to qualify himself to become a professional employee as defined in paragraph (a).

"'(13) In determining whether any person is acting as an "agent" of another person so as to make such other person responsible for his acts, the question of whether the specific acts performed were actually authorized or subsequently ratified shall not be controlling.

"'NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS BOARD

"'SEC. 3. (a) The National Labor Relations Board (hereinafter called the "Board") created by this Act prior to its amendment by the Labor Management Relations Act, 1947, is hereby continued as an agency of the United States, except that the Board shall consist of five instead of three members, appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. Of the two additional members so provided for, one shall be appointed for a term of five years and the other for a term of two years. Their successors, and the successors of the other members, shall be appointed for terms of five years each, excepting that any individual chosen to fill a vacancy shall be appointed only for the unexpired term of the member whom he shall succeed. The President shall designate one member to serve as Chairman of the Board. Any member of the Board may be removed by the President, upon notice and hearing, for neglect of duty or malfeasance in office, but for no other cause.

"'(b) The Board is authorized to delegate to any group of three or more members any or all of the powers which it may itself exercise. A vacancy in the Board shall not impair the right of the remaining members to exercise all of the powers of the Board, and three members of the Board shall, at all times, constitute a quorum of the Board, except that two members shall constitute a quorum of any group designated pursuant to the first sentence hereof. The Board shall have an official seal which shall be judicially noticed.

"'(c) The Board shall at the close of each fiscal year make a report in writing to Congress and to the President stating in detail the cases it has heard, the decisions it has rendered, the names, salaries, and duties of all employees and officers in the employ or under the supervision of the Board, and an account of all moneys it has disbursed.

"'(d) There shall be a General Counsel of the Board who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of four years. The General Counsel of the Board shall exercise general supervision over all attorneys employed by the Board (other than trial examiners and legal assistants to Board members) and over the officers and employees in the regional offices. He shall have final authority, on behalf of the Board, in respect of the investigation of charges and issuance of complaints under section 10 and in respect of the prosecution of such complaints before the Board, and shall have such other duties as the Board may prescribe or as may be provided by law.

"'SEC. 4. (a) Each member of the Board and the General Counsel of the Board shall receive a salary of $12,000 a year, shall be eligible for reappointment, and shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment. The Board shall appoint an executive secretary, and such attorneys, examiners, and regional directors, and such other employees as it may from time to time find necessary for the proper performance of its duties. The Board may not employ any attorneys for the purpose of reviewing transcripts of hearings or preparing drafts of opinions except that any attorney employed for assignment as a legal assistant to any Board member may for such Board member review such transcripts and prepare such drafts. No trial examiner's report shall be reviewed, either before or after its publication, by any person other than a member of the Board or his legal assistant, and no trial examiner shall advise or consult with the Board with respect to exceptions taken to his findings, rulings, or recommendations. The Board may establish or utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and utilize such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. Attorneys appointed under this section may, at the direction of the Board, appear for and represent the Board in any case in court. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to authorize the Board to appoint individuals for the purpose of conciliation or mediation, or for economic analysis.

"'(b) All of the expenses of the Board, including all necessary traveling and subsistence expenses outside the District of Columbia incurred by the members or employees of the Board under its orders, shall be allowed and paid on the presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Board or by any individual it designates for that purpose.

"'SEC. 5. The principal office of the Board shall be in the District of Columbia, but it may meet and exercise any or all of its powers at any other place. The Board may, by one or more of its members or by such agents or agencies as it may designate, prosecute any inquiry necessary to its functions in any part of the United States. A member who participates in such an inquiry shall not be disqualified from subsequently participating in a decision of the Board in the same case.

"'SEC. 6. The Board shall have authority from time to time to make, amend, and rescind, in the manner prescribed by the Administrative Procedure Act, such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

"'RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

'SEC. 7. Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized in section 8 (a) (3).

"'UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

"'SEC. 8. (a) It shall be an unfair labor practice for an employer—

"'(1) to interfere with, restrain, or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7;

"'(2) to dominate or interfere with the formation or administration of any labor organization or contribute financial or other support to it: Provided, That subject to rules and regulations made and published by the Board pursuant to section 6, an employer shall not be prohibited from permitting employees to confer with him during working hours without loss of time or pay;

"'(3) by discrimination in regard to hire or tenure of employment or any term or condition of employment to encourage or discourage membership in any labor organization: Provided, That nothing in this Act, or in any other statute of the United States, shall preclude an employer from making an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined in section 8 (a) of this Act as an unfair labor practice) to require as a condition of employment membership therein on or after the thirtieth day following the beginning of such employment or the effective date of such agreement, whichever is the later, (i) if such labor organization is the representative of the employees as provided in section 9 (a), in the appropriate collective-bargaining unit covered by such agreement when made; and (ii) if, following the most recent election held as provided in section 9 (e) the Board shall have certified that at least a majority of the employees eligible to vote in such election have voted to authorize such labor organization to make such an agreement: Provided further, That no employer shall justify any discrimination against an employee for nonmembership in a labor organization (A) if he has reasonable grounds for believing that such membership was not available to the employee on the same terms and conditions generally applicable to other members, or (B) if he has reasonable grounds for believing that membership was denied or terminated for reasons other than the failure of the employee to tender the periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership;

"'(4) to discharge or otherwise discriminate against an employee because he has filed charges or given testimony under this Act;

"'(5) to refuse to bargain collectively with the representatives of his employees, subject to the provisions of section 9 (a).

"'(b) It shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents—

"'(1) to restrain or coerce (A) employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7: Provided, That this paragraph shall not impair the right of a labor organization to prescribe its own rules with respect to the acquisition or retention of membership therein; or (B) an employer in the selection of his representatives for the purposes of collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances;

"'(2) to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of subsection (a) (3) or to discriminate against an employee with respect to whom membership in such organization has been denied or terminated on some ground other than his failure to tender the periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership;

"'(3) to refuse to bargain collectively with an employer, provided it is the representative of his employees subject to the provisions of section 9 (a);

"'(4) to engage in, or to induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal in the course of their employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services, where an object thereof is: (A) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or any employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person; (B) forcing or requiring any other employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees unless such labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9; (C) forcing or requiring any employer to recognize or bargain with a particular labor organization as the representative of his employees if another labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9; (D) forcing or requiring any employer to assign particular work to employees in a particular labor organization or in a particular trade, craft, or class rather than to employees in another labor organization or in another trade, craft, or class, unless such employer is failing to conform to an order or certification of the Board determining the bargaining representative for employees performing such work: Provided, That nothing contained in this subsection (b) shall be construed to make unlawful a refusal by any person to enter upon the premises of any employer (other than his own employer), if the employees of such employer are engaged in a strike ratified or approved by a representative of such employees whom such employer is required to recognize under this Act;

"'(5) to require of employees covered by an agreement authorized under subsection (a) (3) the payment, as a condition precedent to becoming a member of such organization, of a fee in an amount which the Board finds excessive or discriminatory under all the circumstances. In making such a finding, the Board shall consider, among other relevant factors, the practices and customs of labor organizations in the particular industry, and the wages currently paid to the employees affected; and

"'(6) to cause or attempt to cause an employer to pay or deliver or agree to pay or deliver any money or other thing of value, in the nature of an exaction, for services which are not performed or not to be performed.

"(c) The expressing of any views, argument, or opinion, or the dissemination thereof, whether in written, printed, graphic, or visual form, shall not constitute or be evidence of an unfair labor practice under any of the provisions of this Act, if such expression contains no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit.

"'(d) For the purposes of this section, to bargain collectively is the performance of the mutual obligation of the employer and the representative of the employees to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours, and other terms and conditions of employment, or the negotiation of an agreement, or any question arising thereunder, and the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if requested by either party, but such obligation does not compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of a concession: Provided, That where there is in effect a collective-bargaining contract covering employees in an industry affecting commerce, the duty to bargain collectively shall also mean that no party to such contract shall terminate or modify such contract, unless the party desiring such termination or modification—

"'(1) serves a written notice upon the other party to the contract of the proposed termination or modification sixty days prior to the expiration date thereof, or in the event such contract contains no expiration date, sixty days prior to the time it is proposed to make such termination or modification;

"'(2) offers to meet and confer with the other party for the purpose of negotiating a new contract or a contract containing the proposed modifications;

"'(3) notifies the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service within thirty days after such notice of the existence of a dispute, and simultaneously therewith notifies any State or Territorial agency established to mediate and conciliate disputes within the State or Territory where the dispute occurred, provided no agreement has been reached by that time; and

"'(4) continues in full force and effect, without resorting to strike or lock-out, all the terms and conditions of the existing contract for a period of sixty days after such notice is given or until the expiration date of such contract, whichever occurs later:

The duties imposed upon employers, employees, and labor organizations by paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) shall become inapplicable upon an intervening certification of the Board, under which the labor organization or individual, which is a party to the contract, has been superseded as or ceased to be the representative of the employees subject to the provisions of section 9 (a), and the duties so imposed shall not be construed as requiring either party to discuss or agree to any modification of the terms and conditions contained in a contract for a fixed period, if such modification is to become effective before such terms and conditions can be reopened under the provisions of the contract. Any employee who engages in a strike within the sixty-day period specified in this subsection shall lose his status as an employee of the employer engaged in the particular labor dispute, for the purposes of sections 8, 9, and 10 of this Act, as amended, but such loss of status for such employee shall terminate if and when he is reemployed by such employer.

"'REPRESENTATIVES AND ELECTIONS

"'SEC. 9. (a) Representatives designated or selected for the purposes of collective bargaining by the majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for such purposes, shall be the exclusive representatives of all the employees in such unit for the purposes of collective bargaining in respect to rates of pay, wages, hours of employment, or other conditions of employment: Provided, That any individual employee or a group of employees shall have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer and to have such grievances adjusted, without the intervention of the bargaining representative, as long as the adjustment is not inconsistent with the terms of a collective-bargaining contract or agreement then in effect: Provided further, That the bargaining representative has been given opportunity to be present at such adjustment.

"'(b) The Board shall decide in each case whether, in order to assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed by this Act, the unit appropriate for the purposes of collective bargaining shall be the employer unit, craft unit, plant unit, or subdivision thereof: Provided, That the Board shall not (1) decide that any unit is appropriate for such purposes if such unit includes both professional employees and employees who are not professional employees unless a majority of such professional employees vote for inclusion in such unit; or (2) decide that any craft unit is inappropriate for such purposes on the ground that a different unit has been established by a prior Board determination, unless a majority of the employees in the proposed craft unit vote against separate representation or (3) decide that any unit is appropriate for such purposes if it includes, together with other employees, any individual employed as a guard to enforce against employees and other persons rules to protect property of the employer or to protect the safety of persons on the employer's premises; but no labor organization shall be certified as the representative of employees in a bargaining unit of guards if such organization admits to membership, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with an organization which admits to membership, employees other than guards.

"'(c) (1) Whenever a petition shall have been filed, in accordance with such regulations as may be prescribed by the Board—

"'(A) by an employee or group of employers or any individual or labor organization acting in their behalf alleging that a substantial number of employees (i) wish to be represented for collective bargaining and that their employer declines to recognize their representative as the representative defined in section 9 (a), or (ii) assert that the individual or labor organization, which has been certified or is being currently recognized by their employer as the bargaining representative, is no longer a representative as defined in section 9 (a); or

"'(B) by an employer, alleging that one or more individuals or labor organizations have presented to him a claim to be recognized as the representative defined in section 9 (a);

the Board shall investigate such petition and if it has reasonable cause to believe that a question of representation affecting commerce exists shall provide for an appropriate hearing upon due notice. Such hearing may be conducted by an officer or employee of the regional office, who shall not make any recommendations with respect thereto. If the Board finds upon the record of such hearing that such a question of representation exists, it shall direct an election by secret ballot and shall certify the results thereof.

"'(2) In determining whether or not a question of representation affecting commerce exists, the same regulations and rules of decision shall apply irrespective of the identity of the persons filing the petition or the kind of relief sought and in no case shall the Board deny a labor organization a place on the ballot by reason of an order with respect to such labor organization or its predecessor not issued in conformity with section 10 (c).

"'(3) No election shall be directed in any bargaining unit or any subdivision within which, in the preceding twelve-month period, a valid election shall have been held. Employees on strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall not be eligible to vote. In any election where none of the choices on the ballot receives a majority, a run-off shall be conducted, the ballot providing for a selection between the two choices receiving the largest and second largest number of valid votes cast in the election.

"'(4) Nothing in this section shall be construed to prohibit the waiving of hearings by stipulation for the purpose of a consent election in conformity with regulations and rules of decision of the Board.

"'(5) In determining whether a unit is appropriate for the purposes specified in subsection (b) the extent to which the employees have organized shall not be controlling.

"'(d) Whenever an order of the Board made pursuant to section 10 (c) is based in whole or in part upon facts certified following an investigation pursuant to subsection (c) of this section, and there is a petition for the enforcement or review of such order, such certification and the record of such investigation shall be included in the transcript of the entire record required to be filed under section 10 (e) or 10 (f), and thereupon the decree of the court enforcing, modifying, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board shall be made and entered upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript.

"'(e) (1) Upon the filing with the Board by a labor organization, which is the representative of employees as provided in section 9 (a), of a petition alleging that 30 per centum or more of the employees within a unit claimed to be appropriate for such purposes desire to authorize such labor organization to make an agreement with the employer of such employees requiring membership in such labor organization as a condition of employment in such unit, upon an appropriate showing thereof the Board shall, if no question of representation exists, take a secret ballot of such employees, and shall certify the results thereof to such labor organization and to the employer.

"'(2) Upon the filing with the Board, by 30 per centum or more of the employees in a bargaining unit covered by an agreement between their employer and a labor organization made pursuant to section 8 (a) (3) (ii), of a petition alleging they desire that such authority be rescinded, the Board shall take a secret ballot of the employees in such unit, and shall certify the results thereof to such labor organization and to the employer.

"'(3) No election shall be conducted pursuant to this subsection in any bargaining unit or any subdivision within which, in the preceding twelve-month period, a valid election shall have been held.

"'(f) No investigation shall be made by the Board of any question affecting commerce concerning the representation of employees, raised by a labor organization under subsection (c) of this section, no petition under section 9 (e) (1) shall be entertained, and no complaint shall be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under subsection (b) of section 10, unless such labor organization and any national or international labor organization of which such labor organization is an affiliate or constituent unit (A) shall have prior thereto filed with the Secretary of Labor copies of its constitution and bylaws and a report, in such form as the Secretary may prescribe, showing—

"'(1) the name of such labor organization and the address of its principal place of business;

"'(2) the names, titles, and compensation and allowances of its three principal officers and of any of its other officers or agents whose aggregate compensation and allowances for the preceding year exceeded $5,000, and the amount of the compensation and allowances paid to each such officer or agent during such year;

"'(3) the manner in which the officers and agents referred to in clause (2) were elected, appointed, or otherwise selected;

"'(4) the initiation fee or fees which new members are required to pay on becoming members of such labor organization;

"'(5) the regular dues or fees which members are required to pay in order to remain members in good standing of such labor organization;

"'(6) a detailed statement of, or reference to provisions of its constitution and bylaws showing the procedure followed with respect to, (a) qualification for or restrictions on membership, (b) election of officers and stewards, (c) calling of regular and special meetings, (d) levying of assessments, (e) imposition of fines, (f) authorization for bargaining demands, (g) ratification of contract terms, (h) authorization for strikes, (i) authorization for disbursement of union funds, (j) audit of union financial transactions, (k) participation in insurance or other benefit plans, and (l) expulsion of members and the grounds therefor; and (B) can show that prior thereto it has—

"'(1) filed with the Secretary of Labor, in such form as the Secretary may prescribe, a report showing all of (a) its receipts of any kind and the sources of such receipts, (b) its total assets and liabilities as of the end of its last fiscal year, (c) the disbursements made by it during such fiscal year, including the purposes for which made; and

"'(2) furnished to all of the members of such labor organizations copies of the financial report required by paragraph (1) hereof to be filed with the Secretary of Labor.

"'(g) It shall be the obligation of all labor organizations to file annually with the Secretary of Labor, in such form as the Secretary of Labor may prescribe, reports bringing up to date the information required to be supplied in the initial filing by subsection (f) (A) of this section, and to file with the Secretary of Labor and furnish to its members annually financial reports in the form and manner prescribed in subsection (f) (B). No labor organization shall be eligible for certification under this section as the representative of any employees, no petition under section 9 (e) (1) shall be entertained, and no complaint shall issue under section 10 with respect to a charge filed by a labor organization unless it can show that it and any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliate or constituent unit has complied with its obligation under this subsection.

"'(h) No investigation shall be made by the Board of any question affecting commerce concerning the representation of employees, raised by a labor organization under subsection (c) of this section, no petition under section 9 (e) (1) shall be entertained, and no complaint shall be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under subsection (b) of section 10, unless there is on file with the Board an affidavit executed contemporaneously or within the preceding twelve-month period by each officer of such labor organization and the officers of any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliate or constituent unit that he is not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party, and that he does not believe in, and is not a member of or supports any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods. The provisions of section 35 A of the Criminal Code shall be applicable in respect to such affidavits.

"'PREVENTION OF UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

"'SEC. 10. (a) The Board is empowered, as hereinafter provided, to prevent any person from engaging in any unfair labor practice (listed in sec. 8) affecting commerce. This power shall not be affected by any other means of adjustment or prevention that has been or may be established by agreement, law, or otherwise: Provided, That the Board is empowered by agreement with any agency of any State or Territory to cede to such agency jurisdiction over any cases in any industry (other than mining, manufacturing, communications, and transportation except where predominantly local in character) even though such cases may involve labor disputes affecting commerce, unless the provision of the State or Territorial statute applicable to the determination of such cases by such agency is inconsistent with the corresponding provision of this act or has received a construction inconsistent therewith.

"'(b) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, the Board, or any agent or agency designated by the Board for such purposes, shall have power to issue and cause to be served upon such person a complaint stating the charges in that respect, and containing a notice of hearing before the Board or a member thereof, or before a designated agent or agency, at a place therein fixed, not less than 5 days after the serving of said complaint: Provided, That no complaint shall issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than 6 months prior to the filing of the charge with the Board and the service of a copy thereof upon the person against whom such charge is made, unless the person aggrieved thereby was prevented from filing such charge by reason of service in the armed forces, in which event the 6-month period shall be computed from the day of his discharge. Any such complaint may be amended by the member, agent, or agency conducting the hearing or the Board in its discretion at any time prior to the issuance of an order based thereon. The person so complained of shall have the right to file an answer to the original or amended complaint and to appear in person or otherwise and give testimony at the place and time fixed in the complaint. In the discretion of the member, agent, or agency conducting the hearing or the Board, any other person may be allowed to intervene in the said proceeding and to present testimony. Any such proceeding shall, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the rules of civil procedure for the district courts of the United States, adopted by the Supreme Court of the United States pursuant to the act of June 19, 1934 (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 723–B, 723–C).

"'(c) The testimony taken by such member, agent, or agency or the Board shall be reduced to writing and filed with the Board. Thereafter, in its discretion, the Board upon notice may take further testimony or hear argument. If upon the preponderance of the testimony taken the Board shall be of the opinion that any person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue and cause to be served on such person an order requiring such person to cease and desist from such unfair labor practice, and to take such affirmative action including reinstatement of employees with or without back pay, as will effectuate the policies of this act: Provided, That where an order directs reinstatement of an employee, back pay may be required of the employer or labor organization, as the case may be, responsible for the discrimination suffered by him: And provided further, That in determining whether a complaint shall issue alleging a violation of section 8 (a) (1) or section 8 (a) (2), and in deciding such cases, the same regulations and rules of decision shall apply irrespective of whether or not the labor organization affected is affiliated with a labor organization national or international in scope. Such order may further require such person to make reports from time to time showing the extent to which it has complied with the order. If upon the preponderance of the testimony taken the Board shall not be of the opinion that the person named in the complaint has engaged in or is engaging in any such unfair labor practice, then the Board shall state its findings of fact and shall issue an order dismissing the said complaint. No order of the Board shall require the reinstatement of any individual as an employee who has been suspended or discharged, or the payment to him of any back pay, if such individual was suspended or discharged for cause. In case the evidence is presented before a member of the Board, or before an examiner or examiners thereof, such member, or such examiner or examiners, as the case may be, shall issue and cause to be served on the parties to the proceeding a proposed report, together with a recommended order, which shall be filed with the Board, and if no exceptions are filed within 20 days after service thereof upon such parties, or within such further period as the Board may authorize, such recommended order shall become the order of the Board and become effective as therein prescribed.

"'(d) Until a transcript of the record in a case shall have been filed in a court, as hereinafter provided, the Board may at any time, upon reasonable notice and in such manner as it shall deem proper, modify or set aside, in whole or in part, any finding or order made or issued by it.

"'(e) The Board shall have power to petition any circuit court of appeals of the United States (including the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia), or if all the circuit courts of appeals to which application may be made are in vacation, any district court of the United States (including the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia), within any circuit or district, respectively, wherein the unfair labor practice in question occurred or wherein such person resides or transacts business, for the enforcement of such order and for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order, and shall certify and file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceedings, including the pleadings and testimony upon which such order was entered and the findings and order of the Board. Upon such filing, the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction of the proceeding and of the question determined therein, and shall have power to grant such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and to make and enter upon the pleadings, testimony, and proceedings set forth in such transcript a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board. No objection that has not been urged before the Board, its member, agent, or agency, shall be considered by the court, unless the failure or neglect to urge such objection shall be excused because of extraordinary circumstances. The findings of the Board with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive. If either party shall apply to the court for leave to adduce additional evidence and shall show to the satisfaction of the court that such additional evidence is material and that there were reasonable grounds for the failure to adduce such evidence in the hearing before the Board, its member, agent, or agency, the court may order such additional evidence to be taken before the Board, its members, agent, or agency, and to be made a part of the transcript. The Board may modify its findings as to the facts, or make new findings, by reason of additional evidence so taken and filed, and it shall file such modified or new findings, which findings with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall be conclusive, and shall file its recommendations, if any, for the modification or setting aside of its original order. The jurisdiction of the court shall be exclusive and its judgment and decree shall be final, except that the same shall be subject to review by the appropriate circuit court of appeals if application was made to the district court as hereinabove provided, and by the Supreme Court of the United States upon writ of certiorari or certification as provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judicial Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, secs. 346 and 347).

"'(f) Any person aggrieved by a final order of the Board granting or denying in whole or in part the relief sought may obtain a review of such order in any circuit court of appeals of the United States in the circuit wherein the unfair labor practice in question was alleged to have been engaged in or wherein such person resides or transacts business, or in the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, by filing in such court a written petition praying that the order of the Board be modified or set aside. A copy of such petition shall be forthwith served upon the Board, and thereupon the aggrieved party shall file in the court a transcript of the entire record in the proceeding, certified by the Board, including the pleading and testimony upon which the order complained of was entered, and the findings and order of the Board. Upon such filing, the court shall proceed in the same manner as in the case of an application by the Board under subsection (e), and shall have the same exclusive jurisdiction to grant to the Board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper, and in like manner to make and enter a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified or setting aside in whole or in part the order of the Board; the findings of the Board with respect to questions of fact if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole shall in like manner be conclusive.

"'(g) The commencement of proceedings under subsection (e) or (f) of this section shall not, unless specifically ordered by the court, operate as a stay of the Board's order.

"'(h) When granting appropriate temporary relief or a restraining order, or making and entering a decree enforcing, modifying, and enforcing as so modified, or setting aside in whole or in part an order on the Board, as provided in this section, the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity shall not be limited by the Act entitled "An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes", approved March 23, 1932 (U. S. C., Supp. VII, title 29, secs. 101–115).

"'(i) Petitions filed under this Act shall be heard expeditiously, and if possible within ten days after they have been docketed.

"'(j) The Board shall have power, upon issuance of a complaint as provided in subsection (b) charging that any person has engaged in or is engaging in an unfair labor practice, to petition any district court of the United States (including the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia), within any district wherein the unfair labor practice in question is alleged to have occurred or wherein such person resides or transacts business, for appropriate temporary relief or restraining order. Upon the filing of any such petition the court shall cause notice thereof to be served upon such person, and thereupon shall have jurisdiction to grant to the Board such temporary relief or restraining order as it deems just and proper.

"'(k) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in an unfair labor practice within the meaning of paragraph (4) (D) of section 8 (b), the Board is empowered and directed to hear and determine the dispute out of which such unfair labor practice shall have arisen, unless, within ten days after notice that such charge has been filed, the parties to such dispute submit to the Board satisfactory evidence that they have adjusted, or agreed upon methods for the voluntary adjustment of, the dispute. Upon compliance by the parties to the dispute with the decision of the Board or upon such voluntary adjustment of the dispute, such charge shall be dismissed.

"'(l) Whenever it is charged that any person has engaged in an unfair labor practice within the meaning of paragraph (4) (A), (B), or (C) of section 8 (b), the preliminary investigation of such charge shall be made forthwith and given priority over all other cases except cases of like character in the office where it is filed or to which it is referred. If, after such investigation, the officer or regional attorney to whom the matter may be referred has reasonable cause to believe such charge is true and that a complaint should issue, he shall, on behalf of the Board, petition any district court of the United States (including the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia) within any district where the unfair labor practice in question has occurred, is alleged to have occurred, or wherein such person resides or transacts business, for appropriate injunctive relief pending the final adjudication of the Board with respect to such matter. Upon the filing of any such petition the district court shall have jurisdiction to grant such injunctive relief or temporary restraining order as it deems just and proper, notwithstanding any other provision of law: Provided further, That no temporary restraining order shall be issued without notice unless a petition alleged that substantial and irreparable injury to the charging party will be unavoidable and such temporary restraining order shall be effective for no longer than five days and will become void at the expiration of such period. Upon filing of any such petition the courts shall cause notice thereof to be served upon any person involved in the charge and such person, including the charging party, shall be given an opportunity to appear by counsel and present any relevant testimony: Provided further, That for the purposes of this subsection district courts shall be deemed to have jurisdiction of a labor organization (1) in the district in which such organization maintains its principal office, or (2) in any district in which its duly authorized officers or agents are engaged in promoting or protecting the interests of employee members. The service of legal process upon such officer or agent shall constitute service upon the labor organization and make such organization a party to the suit. In situations where such relief is appropriate the procedure specified herein shall apply to charges with respect to section 8 (b) (4) (D).

"'INVESTIGATORY POWERS

"'SEC. 11. For the purpose of all hearings and investigations, which, in the opinion of the Board, are necessary and proper for the exercise of the powers vested in it by section 9 and section 10—

"'(1) The Board, or its duly authorized agents or agencies, shall at all reasonable times have access to, for the purpose of examination, and the right to copy any evidence of any person being investigated or proceeded against that relates to any matter under investigation or in question. The Board, or any member thereof, shall upon application of any party to such proceedings, forthwith issue to such party, subpenas requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses or the production of any evidence in such proceeding or investigation requested in such application. Within five days after the service of a subpena on any person requiring the production of any evidence in his possession or under his control, such person may petition the Board to revoke, and the Board shall revoke, such subpena if in its opinion that evidence whose production is required does not relate to any matter under investigation, or any matter in question in such proceedings, or if in its opinion such subpena does not describe with sufficient particularity the evidence whose production is required. Any member of the Board, or any agent or agency designated by the Board for such purposes, may administer oaths and affirmations, examine witnesses, and receive evidence. Such attendance of witnesses and the production of such evidence may be required from any place in the United States or any Territory or possession thereof, at any designated place of hearing.

"'(2) In case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpena issued to any person, any district court of the United States or the United States courts of any Territory or possession, or the District Court of the United States for the District of Columbia, within the jurisdiction of which the inquiry is carried on or within the jurisdiction of which said person guilty of contumacy or refusal to obey is found or resides or transacts business, upon application by the Board shall have jurisdiction to issue to such person an order requiring such person to appear before the Board, its member, agent, or agency, there to produce evidence if so ordered, or there to give testimony touching the matter under investigation or in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by said court as a contempt thereof.

"'(3) No person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, records, correspondence, documents, or other evidence in obedience to the subpena of the Board, on the ground that the testimony or evidence required of him may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture; but no individual shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter, or thing concerning which he is compelled, after having claimed his privilege against self-incrimination, to testify or produce evidence, except that such individual so testifying shall not be exempt from prosecution and punishment for perjury committed in so testifying.

"'(4) Complaints, orders, and other process and papers of the Board, its member, agent, or agency, may be served either personally or by registered mail or by telegraph or by leaving a copy thereof at the principal office or place of business of the person required to be served. The verified return by the individual so serving the same setting forth the manner of such service shall be proof of the same, and the return post office receipt or telegram receipt therefor when registered and mailed or telegraphed as aforesaid shall be proof of service of the same. Witnesses summoned before the Board, its member, agent, or agency, shall be paid the same fees and mileage that are paid witnesses in the courts of the United States, and witnesses whose depositions are taken and the persons taking the same shall severally be entitled to the same fees as are paid for like services in the courts of the United States.

"'(5) All process of any court to which application may be made under this Act may be served in the judicial district wherein the defendant or other person required to be served resides or may be found.

"'(6) The several departments and agencies of the Government, when directed by the President, shall furnish the Board, upon its request, all records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any matter before the Board.

"'SEC. 12. Any person who shall willfully resist, prevent, impede, or interfere with any member of the Board or any of its agents or agencies in the performance of duties pursuant to this Act shall be punished by a fine of not more than $5,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"'LIMITATIONS

"'SEC. 13. Nothing in this Act, except as specifically provided for herein, shall be construed so as either to interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike, or to affect the limitations or qualifications on that right.

"'SEC. 14. (a) Nothing herein shall prohibit any individual employed as a supervisor from becoming or remaining a member of a labor organization, but no employer subject to this Act shall be compelled to deem individuals defined herein as supervisors as employees for the purpose of any law, either national or local, relating to collective bargaining.

"'(b) Nothing in this Act shall be construed as authorizing the execution or application of agreements requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment in any State or Territory in which such execution or application is prohibited by State or Territorial law.

"'SEC. 15. Wherever the application of the provisions of section 272 of chapter 10 of the Act entitled "An Act to establish a uniform system of bankruptcy throughout the United States", approved July 1, 1898, and Acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto (U. S. C., title 10, sec. 672), conflicts with the application of the provisions of this Act, this Act shall prevail: Provided, That in any situation where the provisions of this Act cannot be validly enforced, the provisions of such other Acts shall remain in full force and effect.

"'SEC. 16. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstances, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby.

"'SEC. 17. This Act may be cited as the "National Labor Relations Act".'

"EFFECTIVE DATE OF CERTAIN CHANGES

"SEC. 102. No provision of this title shall be deemed to make an unfair labor practice any act which was performed prior to the date of the enactment of this Act which did not constitute an unfair labor practice prior thereto, and the provisions of sections 8 (a) (3) and section 8 (b) (2) of the National Labor Relations Act as amended by this title shall not make an unfair labor practice the performance of any obligation under a collective-bargaining agreement entered into prior to the date of the enactment of this Act, or (in the case of an agreement for a period of not more than one year) entered into or after such date of enactment, but prior to the effective date of this title, if the performance of such obligation would not have constituted an unfair labor practice under section 8 (3) of the National Labor Relations Act prior to the effective date of this title, unless such agreement was renewed or extended subsequent thereto.

"SEC. 103. No provisions of this title shall affect any certification of representatives or any determination as to the appropriate collective-bargaining unit, which was made under section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act prior to the effective date of this title until one year after the date of such certification or if, in respect of any such certification, a collective-bargaining contract was entered into prior to the effective date of this title, until the end of the contract period or until one year after such date, whichever first occurs.

"SEC. 104. The amendments made by this title shall take effect sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that the authority of the President to appoint certain officers conferred upon him by section 3 of the National Labor Relations Act as amended by this title may be exercised forthwith.

"TITLE II—CONCILIATION OF LABOR DISPUTES IN INDUSTRIES AFFECTING COMMERCE; NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

"SEC. 201. That it is the policy of the United States that—

"(a) sound and stable industrial peace and the advancement of the general welfare, health, and safety of the Nation and of the best interests of employers and employees can most satisfactorily be secured by the settlement of issues between employers and employees through the processes of conference and collective bargaining between employers and the representatives of their employees;

"(b) the settlement of issues between employers and employees through collective bargaining may be advanced by making available full and adequate governmental facilities for conciliation, mediation, and voluntary arbitration to aid and encourage employers and the representatives of their employees to reach and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, hours, and working conditions, and to make all reasonable efforts to settle their differences by mutual agreement reached through conferences and collective bargaining or by such methods as may be provided for in any applicable agreement for the settlement of disputes; and

"(c) certain controversies which arise between parties to collective-bargaining agreements may be avoided or minimized by making available full and adequate governmental facilities for furnishing assistance to employers and the representatives of their employees in formulating for inclusion within such agreements provision for adequate notice of any proposed changes in the terms of such agreements, for the final adjustment of grievances or questions regarding the application or interpretation of such agreements, and other provisions designed to prevent the subsequent arising of such controversies.

"SEC. 202. (a) There is hereby created an independent agency to be known as the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (herein referred to as the "Service", except that for sixty days after the date of the enactment of this Act such term shall refer to the Conciliation Service of the Department of Labor). The Service shall be under the direction of a Federal Mediation and Conciliation Director (hereinafter referred to as the "Director"), who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director shall receive compensation at the rate of $12,000 per annum. The Director shall not engage in any other business, vocation, or employment.

"(b) The Director is authorized, subject to the civil-service laws, to appoint such clerical and other personnel as may be necessary for the execution of the functions of the Service, and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, and may, without regard to the provisions of the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, appoint and fix the compensation of such conciliators and mediators as may be necessary to carry out the functions of the Service. The Director is authorized to make such expenditures for supplies, facilities, and services as he deems necessary. Such expenditures shall be allowed and paid upon presentation of itemized vouchers therefor approved by the Director or by any employee designated by him for that purpose.

"(c) The principal office of the Service shall be in the District of Columbia, but the Director may establish regional offices convenient to localities in which labor controversies are likely to arise. The Director may by order, subject to revocation at any time, delegate any authority and discretion conferred upon him by this Act to any regional director, or other officer or employee of the Service. The Director may establish suitable procedures for cooperation with State and local mediation agencies. The Director shall make an annual report in writing to Congress at the end of the fiscal year.

"(d) All mediation and conciliation functions of the Secretary of Labor or the United States Conciliation Service under section 8 of the Act entitled 'An Act to create a Department of Labor', approved March 4, 1913 (U. S. C., title 29, sec. 51), and all functions of the United States Conciliation Service under any other law are hereby transferred to the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service, together with the personnel and records of the United States Conciliation Service. Such transfer shall take effect upon the sixtieth day after the date of enactment of this Act. Such transfer shall not affect any proceedings pending before the United States Conciliation Service or any certification, order, rule, or regulation theretofore made by it or by the Secretary of Labor. The Director and the Service shall not be subject in any way to the jurisdiction or authority of the Secretary of Labor or any official or division of the Department of Labor.

"FUNCTIONS OF THE SERVICE

"SEC. 203. (a) It shall be the duty of the Service, in order to prevent or minimize interruptions of the free flow of commerce growing out of labor disputes, to assist parties to labor disputes in industries affecting commerce to settle such disputes through conciliation and mediation.

"(b) The Service may proffer its services in any labor dispute in any industry affecting commerce, either upon its own motion or upon the request of one or more of the parties to the dispute, whenever in its judgment such dispute threatens to cause a substantial interruption of commerce. The Director and the Service are directed to avoid attempting to mediate disputes which would have only a minor effect on interstate commerce if State or other conciliation services are available to the parties. Whenever the Service does proffer its services in any dispute, it shall be the duty of the Service promptly to put itself in communication with the parties and to use its best efforts, by mediation and conciliation, to bring them to agreement.

"(c) If the Director is not able to bring the parties to agreement by conciliation within a reasonable time, he shall seek to induce the parties voluntarily to seek other means of settling the dispute without resort to strike, lock-out, or other coercion, including submission to the employees in the bargaining unit of the employer's last offer of settlement for approval or rejection in a secret ballot. The failure or refusal of either party to agree to any procedure suggested by the Director shall not be deemed a violation of any duty or obligation imposed by this Act.

"(d) Final adjustment by a method agreed upon by the parties is hereby declared to be the desirable method for settlement of grievance disputes arising over the application or interpretation of an existing collective-bargaining agreement. The Service is directed to make its conciliation and mediation services available in the settlement of such grievance disputes only as a last resort and in exceptional cases.

"SEC. 204. (a) In order to prevent or minimize interruptions of the free flow of commerce growing out of labor disputes, employers and employees and their representatives, in any industry affecting commerce, shall—

"(1) exert every reasonable effort to make and maintain agreements concerning rates of pay, hours, and working conditions, including provision for adequate notice of any proposed change in the terms of such agreements;

"(2) whenever a dispute arises over the terms or application of a collective-bargaining agreement and a conference is requested by a party or prospective party thereto, arrange promptly for such a conference to be held and endeavor in such conference to settle such dispute expeditiously; and

"(3) in case such dispute is not settled by conference, participate fully and promptly in such meetings as may be undertaken by the Service under this Act for the purpose of aiding in a settlement of the dispute.

"SEC. 205. (a) There is hereby created a National Labor-Management Panel which shall be composed of twelve members appointed by the President, six of whom shall be selected from among persons outstanding in the field of management and six of whom shall be selected from among persons outstanding in the field of labor. Each member shall hold office for a term of three years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring prior to the expiration of the term for which his predecessor was appointed shall be appointed for the remainder of such term, and the terms of office of the members first taking office shall expire, as designated by the President at the time of appointment, four at the end of the first year, four at the end of the second year, and four at the end of the third year after the date of appointment. Members of the panel, when serving on business of the panel, shall be paid compensation at the rate of $25 per day, and shall also be entitled to receive an allowance for actual and necessary travel and subsistence expenses while so serving away from their places of residence.

"(b) It shall be the duty of the panel, at the request of the Director, to advise in the avoidance of industrial controversies and the manner in which mediation and voluntary adjustment shall be administered, particularly with reference to controversies affecting the general welfare of the country.

"NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

"SEC. 206. Whenever in the opinion of the President of the United States, a threatened or actual strike or lock-out affecting an entire industry or a substantial part thereof engaged in trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or with foreign nations, or engaged in the production of goods for commerce, will, if permitted to occur or to continue, imperil the national health or safety, he may appoint a board of inquiry to inquire into the issues involved in the dispute and to make a written report to him within such time as he shall prescribe. Such report shall include a statement of the facts with respect to the dispute, including each party's statement of its position but shall not contain any recommendations. The President shall file a copy of such report with the Service and shall make its contents available to the public.

"SEC. 207. (a) A board of inquiry shall be composed of a chairman and such other members as the President shall determine, and shall have power to sit and act in any place within the United States and to conduct such hearings either in public or in private, as it may deem necessary or proper, to ascertain the facts with respect to the causes and circumstances of the dispute.

"(b) Members of a board of inquiry shall receive compensation at the rate of $50 for each day actually spent by them in the work of the board, together with necessary travel and subsistence expenses.

"(c) For the purpose of any hearing or inquiry conducted by any board appointed under this title, the provisions of sections 9 and 10 (relating to the attendance of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents) of the Federal Trade Commission Act of September 16, 1914, as amended (U. S. C. 19, title 15, secs. 49 and 50, as amended), are hereby made applicable to the powers and duties of such board.

"SEC. 208. (a) Upon receiving a report from a board of inquiry the President may direct the Attorney General to petition any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties to enjoin such strike or lock-out or the continuing thereof, and if the court finds that such threatened or actual strike or lock-out—

"(i) affects an entire industry or a substantial part thereof engaged in trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communication among the several States or with foreign nations, or engaged in the production of goods for commerce; and

"(ii) if permitted to occur or to continue, will imperil the national health or safety, it shall have jurisdiction to enjoin any such strike or lock-out, or the continuing thereof, and to make such other orders as may be appropriate.

"(b) In any case, the provisions of the Act of March 23, 1932, entitled 'An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes,' shall not be applicable.

"(c) The order or orders of the court shall be subject to review by the appropriate circuit court of appeals and by the Supreme Court upon writ of certiorari or certification provided in sections 239 and 240 of the Judical Code, as amended (U. S. C., title 29, secs. 346 and 347).

"SEC. 209 (a) Whenever a district court has issued an order under section 208 enjoining acts or practices which imperil or threaten to imperil the national health or safety, it shall be the duty of the parties to the labor dispute giving rise to such order to make every effort to adjust and settle their differences, with the assistance of the Service created by this Act. Neither party shall be under any duty to accept, in whole or in part, any proposal of settlement made by the Service.

"(b) Upon the issuance of such order, the President shall reconvene the board of inquiry which has previously reported with respect to the dispute. At the end of a sixty-day period (unless the dispute has been settled by that time), the board of inquiry shall report to the President the current position of the parties and the efforts which have been made for settlement, and shall include a statement by each party of its position and a statement of the employer's last offer of settlement. The President shall make such report available to the public. The National Labor Relations Board within the succeeding fifteen days, shall take a secret ballot of the employees of each employer involved in the dispute on the question of whether they wish to accept the final offer of settlement made by their employer as stated by him and shall certify the results thereof to the Attorney General within five days thereafter.

"SEC. 210. Upon the certification of the results of such ballot or upon a settlement being reached, whichever happens sooner, the Attorney General shall move the court to discharge the injunction, which motion shall then be granted and the injunction discharged. When such motion is granted, the President shall submit to the Congress a full and comprehensive report of the proceedings, including the findings of the board of inquiry and the ballot taken by the National Labor Relations Board, together with such recommendations as he may see fit to make for consideration and appropriate action.

"COMPILATION OF COLLECTIVE-BARGAINING AGREEMENTS, ETC.

"SEC. 211. (a) For the guidance and information of interested representatives of employers, employees, and the general public, the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor shall maintain a file of copies of all available collective bargaining agreements and other available agreements and actions thereunder settling or adjusting labor disputes. Such file shall be open to inspection under appropriate conditions prescribed by the Secretary of Labor, except that no specific information submitted in confidence shall be disclosed.

"(b) The Bureau of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor is authorized to furnish upon request of the Service, or employers, employees, or their representatives, all available data and factual information which may aid in the settlement of any labor dispute, except that no specific information submitted in confidence shall be disclosed.

"EXEMPTION OF RAILWAY LABOR ACT

"SEC. 212. The provisions of this title shall not be applicable with respect to any matter which is subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act, as amended from time to time.

"TITLE III

"SUITS BY AND AGAINST LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

"SEC. 301 (a) Suits for violation of contracts between an employer and a labor organization representing employees in an industry affecting commerce as defined in this Act, or between any such labor organizations, may be brought in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, without respect to the amount in controversy or without regard to the citizenship of the parties.

"(b) Any labor organization which represents employees in an industry affecting commerce as defined in this Act and any employer whose activities affect commerce as defined in this Act shall be bound by the acts of its agents. Any such labor organization may sue or be sued as an entity and in behalf of the employees whom it represents in the courts of the United States. Any money judgment against a labor organization in a district court of the United States shall be enforceable only against the organization as an entity and against its assets, and shall not be enforceable against any individual member or his assets.

"(c) For the purposes of actions and proceedings by or against labor organizations in the district courts of the United States, district courts shall be deemed to have jurisdiction of a labor organization (1) in the district in which such organization maintains its principal office, or (2) in any district in which its duly authorized officers or agents are engaged in representing or acting for employee members.

"(d) The service of summons, subpena, or other legal process of any court of the United States upon an officer or agent of a labor organization, in his capacity as such, shall constitute service upon the labor organization.

"(e) For the purposes of this section, in determining whether any person is acting as an "agent" of another person so as to make such other person responsible for his acts, the question of whether the specific acts performed were actually authorized or subsequently ratified shall not be controlling.

"RESTRICTIONS ON PAYMENTS TO EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

"SEC. 302. (a) It shall be unlawful for any employer to pay or deliver, or to agree to pay or deliver, any money or other thing of value to any representative of any of his employees who are employed in an industry affecting commerce.

"(b) It shall be unlawful for any representative of any employees who are employed in an industry affecting commerce to receive or accept, or to agree to receive or accept, from the employer of such employees any money or other thing of value.

"(c) The provisions of this section shall not be applicable (1) with respect to any money or other thing of value payable by an employer to any representative who is an employee or former employee of such employer, as compensation for, or by reason of, his services as an employee of such employer; (2) with respect to the payment or delivery of any money or other thing of value in satisfaction of a judgment of any court of a decision or award of an arbitrator or impartial chairman or in compromise, adjustment, settlement or release of any claim, complaint, grievance, or dispute in the absence of fraud or duress; (3) with respect to the sale or purchase of an article or commodity at the prevailing market price in the regular course of business; (4) with respect to money deducted from the wages of employees in payment of membership dues in a labor organization: Provided, That the employer has received from each employee, on whose account such deductions are made, a written assignment which shall not be irrevocable for a period of more than one year, or beyond the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, whichever occurs sooner; or (5) with respect to money or other thing of value paid to a trust fund established by such representative, for the sole and exclusive benefit of the employees of such employer, and their families and dependents (or of such employees, families, and dependents jointly with the employees of other employers making similar payments, and their families and dependents): Provided, That (A) such payments are held in trust for the purpose of paying, either from principal or income or both, for the benefit of employees, their families and dependents, for medical or hospital care, pensions on retirement or death of employees, compensation for injuries or illness resulting from occupational activity or insurance to provide any of the foregoing, or unemployment benefits or life insurance, disability and sickness insurance, or accident insurance; (B) the detailed basis on which such payments are to be made is specified in a written agreement with the employer, and employees and employers are equally represented in the administration of such fund, together with such neutral persons as the representatives of the employers and the representatives of the employees may agree upon and in the event the employer and employee groups deadlock on the administration of such fund and there are no neutral persons empowered to break such deadlock, such agreement provides that the two groups shall agree on an impartial umpire to decide such dispute, or in event of their failure to agree within a reasonable length of time, an impartial umpire to decide such dispute shall, on petition of either group, be appointed by the district court of the United States for the district where the trust fund has its principal office, and shall also contain provisions for an annual audit of the trust fund, a statement of the results of which shall be available for inspection by interested persons at the principal office of the trust fund and at such other places as may be designated in such written agreement; and (C) such payments as are intended to be used for the purpose of providing pensions or annuities for employees are made to a separate trust which provides that the funds held therein cannot be used for any purpose other than paying such pensions or annuities.

"(d) Any person who willfully violates any of the provisions of this section shall, upon conviction thereof, be guilty of a misdemeanor and be subject to a fine of not more than $10,000 or to imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

"(e) The district courts of the United States and the United States courts of the Territories and possessions shall have jurisdiction, for cause shown, and subject to the provisions of section 17 (relating to notice to opposite party) of the Act entitled 'An Act to supplement existing laws against unlawful restraints and monopolies, and for other purposes', approved October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 28, sec. 381), to restrain violations of this section, without regard to the provisions of sections 6 and 20 of such Act of October 15, 1914, as amended (U. S. C., title 15, sec. 17, and title 29, sec. 52), and the provisions of the Act entitled 'An Act to amend the Judicial Code and to define and limit the jurisdiction of courts sitting in equity, and for other purposes', approved March 23, 1932 (U. S. C., title 29, secs. 101–115).

"(f) This section shall not apply to any contract in force on the date of enactment of this Act, until the expiration of such contract, or until July 1, 1948, whichever first occurs.

"(g) Compliance with the restrictions contained in subsection (c) (5) (B) upon contributions to trust funds, otherwise lawful, shall not be applicable to contributions to such trust funds established by collective agreement prior to January 1, 1946, nor shall subsection (c) (5) (A) be construed as prohibiting contributions to such trust funds if prior to January 1, 1947, such funds contained provisions for pooled vacation benefits.

"BOYCOTTS AND OTHER UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS

"SEC. 303. (a) It shall be unlawful, for the purposes of this section only, in an industry or activity affecting commerce, for any labor organization to engage in, or to induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal in the course of their employment to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities or to perform any services, where an object thereof is—

"(1) forcing or requiring any employer or self-employed person to join any labor or employer organization or any employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of any other producer, processor, or manufacturer, or to cease doing business with any other person;

"(2) forcing or requiring any other employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization as the representative of his employees unless such labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act;

"(3) forcing or requiring any employer to recognize or bargain with a particular labor organization as the representative of his employees if another labor organization has been certified as the representative of such employees under the provisions of section 9 of the National Labor Relations Act;

"(4) forcing or requiring any employer to assign particular work to employees in a particular labor organization or in a particular trade, craft, or class rather than to employees in another labor organization or in another trade, craft, or class unless such employer is failing to conform to an order or certification of the National Labor Relations Board determining the bargaining representative for employees performing such work. Nothing contained in this subsection shall be construed to make unlawful a refusal by any person to enter upon the premises of any employer (other than his own employer), if the employees of such employer are engaged in a strike ratified or approved by a representative of such employees whom such employer is required to recognize under the National Labor Relations Act.

"(b) Whoever shall be injured in his business or property by reason of any violation of subsection (a) may sue therefor in any district court of the United States subject to the limitations and provisions of section 301 hereof without respect to the amount in controversy, or in any other court having jurisdiction of the parties, and shall recover the damages by him sustained and the cost of the suit.

"RESTRICTIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

"SEC. 304. Section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act, 1925 (U. S. C., 1940 edition, title 2, sec. 251; Supp. V, title 50, App., sec. 1509), as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 313. It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election to any political office, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any political office, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in, or a Delegate or Resident Commissioner to Congress are to be voted for, or in connection with any primary election or political convention or caucus held to select candidates for any of the foregoing offices, or for any candidate, political committee, or other persons to accept or receive any contribution prohibited by this section. Every corporation or labor organization which makes any contribution or expenditure in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $5,000; and every officer or director of any corporation, or officer of any labor organization, who consents to any contribution or expenditure by the corporation or labor organization, as the case may be, in violation of this section shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both. For the purposes of this section "labor organization" means any organization of any kind, or any agency or employee representation committee or plan, in which employees participate and which exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, rates of pay, hours of employment, or conditions of work.'

"STRIKES BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

"SEC. 305. It shall be unlawful for any individual employed by the United States or any agency thereof including wholly owned Government corporations to participate in any strike. Any individual employed by the United States or by any such agency who strikes shall be discharged immediately from his employment, and shall forfeit his civil service status, if any, and shall not be eligible for reemployment for three years by the United States or any such agency.

"TITLE IV

"CREATION OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND REPORT ON BASIC PROBLEMS AFFECTING FRIENDLY LABOR RELATIONS AND PRODUCTIVITY

"SEC. 401. There is hereby established a joint congressional committee to be known as the Joint Committee on Labor-Management Relations (hereafter referred to as the committee), and to be composed of seven Members of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and seven Members of the House of Representatives Committee on Education and Labor, to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives. A vacancy in membership of the committee shall not affect the powers of the remaining members to execute the functions of the committee, and shall be filled in the same manner as the original selection. The committee shall select a chairman and a vice chairman from among its members.

"SEC. 402. The committee, acting as a whole or by subcommittee, shall conduct a thorough study and investigation of the entire field of labor-management relations, including but not limited to—

"(1) the means by which permanent friendly cooperation between employers and employees and stability of labor relations may be secured throughout the United States;

"(2) the means by which the individual employee may achieve a greater productivity and higher wages, including plans for guaranteed annual wages, incentive profit-sharing and bonus systems;

"(3) the internal organization and administration of labor unions, with special attention to the impact on individuals of collective agreements requiring membership in unions as a condition of employment;

"(4) the labor relations policies and practices of employers and associations of employers;

"(5) the desirability of welfare funds for the benefit of employees and their relation to the social-security system;

"(6) the methods and procedures for best carrying out the collective-bargaining processes, with special attention to the effects of industry-wide or regional bargaining upon the national economy;

"(7) the administration and operation of existing Federal laws relating to labor relations; and

"(8) such other problems and subjects in the field of labor-management relations as the committee deems appropriate.

"SEC. 403. The committee shall report to the Senate and the House of Representatives not later than March 15, 1948, the results of its study and investigation, together with such recommendations as to necessary legislation and such other recommendations as it may deem advisable, and shall make its final report not later than January 2, 1949.

"SEC. 404. The committee shall have the power, without regard to the civil-service laws and the Classification Act of 1923, as amended, to employ and fix the compensation of such officers, experts, and employees as it deems necessary for the performance of its duties, including consultants who shall receive compensation at a rate not to exceed $35 for each day actually spent by them in the work of the committee, together with their necessary travel and subsistence expenses. The committee is further authorized, with the consent of the head of the department or agency concerned, to utilize the services, information, facilities, and personnel of all agencies in the executive branch of the Government and may request the governments of the several States, representatives of business, industry, finance, and labor, and such other persons, agencies, organizations, and instrumentalities as it deems appropriate to attend its hearings and to give and present information, advice, and recommendations.

"SEC. 405. The committee, or any subcommittee thereof, is authorized to hold such hearings; to sit and act at such times and places during the sessions, recesses, and adjourned periods of the Eightieth Congress; to require by subpena or otherwise the attendance of such witnesses and the production of such books, papers, and documents; to administer oaths; to take such testimony; to have such printing and binding done; and to make such expenditures within the amount appropriated therefor; as it deems advisable. The cost of stenographic services in reporting such hearings shall not be in excess of 25 cents per one hundred words. Subpenas shall be issued under the signature of the chairman or vice chairman of the committee and shall be served by any person designated by them.

"SEC. 406. The members of the committee shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties vested in the committee, other than expenses in connection with meetings of the committee held in the District of Columbia during such times as the Congress is in session.

"SEC. 407. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated the sum of $150,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, to carry out the provisions of this title, to be disbursed by the Secretary of the Senate on vouchers signed by the chairman.

"TITLE V

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 501. When used in this Act—

"(1) The term "industry affecting commerce" means any industry or activity in commerce or in which a labor dispute would burden or obstruct commerce or tend to burden or obstruct commerce or the free flow of commerce.

"(2) The term 'strike' includes any strike or other concerted stoppage of work by employees (including a stoppage by reason of the expiration of a collective-bargaining agreement) and any concerted slow-down or other concerted interruption of operations by employees.

"(3) The terms 'commerce', 'labor disputes', 'employer', 'employee', 'labor organization', 'representative', 'person', and 'supervisor' shall have the same meaning as when used in the National Labor Relations Act as amended by this Act.

"SAVING PROVISION

"SEC. 502. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to require an individual employee to render labor or service without his consent, nor shall anything in this Act be construed to make the quitting of his labor by an individual employee an illegal act; nor shall any court issue any process to compel the performance by an individual employee of such labor or service, without his consent; nor shall the quitting of labor by an employee or employees in good faith because of abnormally dangerous conditions for work at the place of employment of such employee or employees be deemed a strike under this Act.

"SEPARABILITY

"SEC. 503. If any provision of this Act, or the application of such provision to any person or circumstance, shall be held invalid, the remainder of this Act, or the application of such provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is held invalid, shall not be affected thereby."

And the Senate agree to the same.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill, and agree to the same.

STATEMENT

The managers on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes, submit the following statement in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the conferees and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

SHORT TITLE

The House bill provided that it was to be cited as the "Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947." The Senate amendment (section 504) provided that it was to be cited as the "Federal Labor Relations Act of 1947." The conference agreement adopts the short title of the House bill.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

The House bill (section 1 (b)) contained an over-all declaration of policy covering all of the various matters dealt with in the bill. There was no corresponding over-all declaration of policy in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement contains the declaration of policy of the House bill, with one omission. One of the policies declared in the House bill was to encourage the peaceful settlement of labor disputes affecting commerce by giving the employees themselves a direct voice in the bargaining arrangements with their employers. Since under the conference agreement the provisions relating to a secret ballot on the employer's last offer of settlement (as will be hereafter explained) are not made mandatory, this particular item has been omitted from the over-all declaration of policy in the conference agreement.

TITLE I—AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment in title I amended the National Labor Relations Act in numerous respects.

In amending section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act (the policy thereof) the House bill omitted from the present law all of the so-called findings of fact some of which have been so severely criticized as being inaccurate and entirely one-sided. The Senate amendment rewrote the findings and policies contained in section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act so that those findings will not hereafter constitute an indictment of all employers. At the same time the Senate amendment inserted in the findings of fact a paragraph to the effect that experience has demonstrated that certain practices by some labor organizations have the effect of burdening commerce through strikes and other forms of industrial unrest or through concerted activities which impair the interest of the public in the free flow of commerce. The Senate amendment further declared the elimination of such practices to be a necessary condition to the assurance of the rights herein guaranteed. Thus under the Senate amendment the findings and policies of the amended National Labor Relations Act are to be "two-sided". The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment in this respect.

DEFINITIONS

Section 2 of the National Labor Relations Act contains definitions of the terms used therein. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment amended section 2.

(1) Person: In defining the term person, the House bill added labor organizations to the definition contained in existing law in order that there might be no question but that labor organizations were to be considered as persons within the meaning of the new, amended Act. The Senate amendment also added labor organizations to the definition of person, but included in addition thereto their officers and employees or members. Since officers, employees and members of labor organizations are individuals, and the term person already is defined to include individuals, the conference committee deemed it unnecessary to include officers, employees and members of labor organizations in specific terms, and thus the conference agreement adopts the definition of person contained in the House bill.

(2) Employer: In defining the term employer, the House bill changed the definition of existing law in the following respects:

(A) Under existing law employer is defined to include any person acting in the interest of an employer. The House bill changed this so as to include as an employer only persons acting as agents of an employer. This was done for the reason that the Board has on numerous occasions held an employer responsible for the acts of subordinate employees and others although not acting within the scope of any authority from the employer, real or apparent.

(B) The House bill excluded from the definition of employer instrumentalities of the United States.

(C) The House bill also excluded from the definition of employer all religious, charitable, scientific, and educational organizations not organized or operated for profit.

The Senate amendment changed the definition of employer contained in existing law in but two respects:

(A) The Senate amendment excluded from the definition of employer nonprofit corporations and associations operating hospitals.

(B) The Senate amendment also provided that for the purposes of section 9 (b) of the Labor Act (the section authorizing the Board to determine the appropriate collective bargaining unit) the term employer was not to include a group of employers unless they had voluntarily associated themselves together for the purposes of collective bargaining.

The conference agreement follows the provisions of the House bill in the matter of agents of an employer, and follows the Senate amendment in the matter of exclusion of nonprofit corporations and associations operating hospitals. The other nonprofit organizations excluded under the House bill are not specifically excluded in the conference agreement, for only in exceptional circumstances and in connection with purely commercial activities of such organizations have any of the activities of such organizations or of their employees been considered as affecting commerce so as to bring them within the scope of the National Labor Relations Act. In the case of instrumentalities of the United States, the conference agreement limits the exclusion to wholly owned Government corporations and to Federal reserve banks, the latter for the reason that such banks, by their issuance of currency and their acting as fiscal agents of the Treasury, perform a vital governmental function. The treatment in the Senate amendment of the term employer for the purposes of section 9 (b) is omitted from the conference agreement, since it merely restates the existing practice of the Board in the fixing of bargaining units containing employees of more than one employer, and it is not thought that the Board will or ought to change its practice in this respect.

(3) Employee: The House bill changed the definition of employee contained in the existing law in several respects:

(A) Under the existing definition of employee the Board has treated employees striking or wages, hours or working conditions differently from employees striking because of an alleged unfair labor practice on the part of the employer. In the former case the Board has said that the individual striker retains his status as an employee under the Act only until he is replaced, whereas in the latter case the Board has said that the individual striker retains his status as an employee so long as the labor dispute is "current". This Board practice has had the effect of treating more favorably employees striking to remedy practices for which the National Labor Relations Act itself provides a peaceful administrative remedy, than employees who are striking merely to better their terms of employment. The House bill in the definition of employee provided in specific terms that these two classes of striking employees should be treated in the same fashion, i. e., they were to retain their employee status until replaced.

(B) The House bill excluded supervisors from the definition of employee.

(C) The House bill also excluded from the definition of employee any individual engaged in "agricultural labor", as that term is defined for the purposes of the Social Security Act taxes.

(D) The House bill excluded from the definition of employee individuals having the status of independent contractors. Although independent contractors can in no sense be considered to be employees, the Supreme Court in N. L. R. B. v. Hearst Publications, Inc. (1944), 322 U. S. 111, held that the ordinary tests of the law of agency could be ignored by the Board in determining whether or not particular occupational groups were "employees" within the meaning of the Labor Act. Consequently it refused to consider the question of whether certain categories of persons whom the Board had deemed to be "employees" were not in fact and in law really independent contractors.

(E) The House bill contained a clarifying provision to the effect that no individual was to be considered an employee for the purposes of the act unless he was employed by an employer as defined in the act.

In defining employee, the Senate amendment followed the provisions of existing law with three exceptions:

(A) The Senate amendment excluded supervisors from the definition of employee.

(B) The Senate amendment excluded "individuals employed in agriculture" as distinguished from the existing exemption of individuals employed as "agricultural laborers."

(C) The Senate amendment excluded individuals employed by any person subject to the Railway Labor Act (one of the categories of persons not treated as employers for the purposes of the act).

The conference agreement in general follows the provisions of the Senate amendment, with the following exceptions:

(A) Since the matter of the "agricultural" exemption has for the past two years been dealt with in the Appropriation Act for the National Labor Relations Board, the conference agreement does not disturb existing law in this respect.

(B) The conference agreement follows the provisions of the House bill in excluding from the definition of employee all individuals employed by persons who do not come within the definition of employers, not limiting this exclusion, as did the Senate amendment, to employees of persons subject to the Railway Labor Act.

(C) The conference agreement does not contain the specific provisions of the House bill dealing with the status of "unfair labor practice" strikers. Since the different treatment of unfair labor practice strikers and economic strikers is simply a practice of the Board which the Board can change within the framework of the existing law, it was thought by the House managers that the Board should be given an opportunity to change this practice itself rather than needlessly complicating the definition of the term employee.

In the National Silver Company case (71 N. L. R. B. 87) (1946), at least one member of the Board thought that the Board's policy should be to so use its powers as to encourage employees and their organizations to use the peaceful procedures under the Act instead of resorting to the strike weapon. Such a policy would seem to be more in accord with the stated purpose of the Act.

(D) The conference agreement follows the House bill in the matter of persons having the status of independent contractors.

(4) The terms "representative," "labor organization," "commerce," "affecting commerce," and "unfair labor practice" were the same in both the House bill and the Senate amendment. The conference agreement does not make any change in these definitions.

(5) The House bill omitted the definition which is contained in existing law of the term "labor dispute" since a definition of that term was not considered necessary under the structure of the House bill. The Senate amendment contained the definition contained in the existing law. The conference agreement follows the provision of the Senate amendment in this respect.

(6) The definitions in the House bill and in the Senate amendment relating to the Board and the administration of the Act are hereafter discussed in connection with the explanation of the conference agreement dealing with section 3 of the National Labor Relations Act.

(7) The House bill contained a definition of the term "bargain collectively" for the purposes of the duties imposed on both parties in the amended section 8 of the Labor Act to bargain collectively with the other. By reason of a number of decisions of the Board which in effect required an employer to make or offer concessions to show that he was bargaining in good faith, the House definition proposed an objective test for determining what constituted bargaining collectively. It required first that the parties follow the procedure specified in an agreement between the parties if such an agreement was in effect, and if no such agreement was in effect, discussion between the parties at a stated number of meetings of the various proposals and counterproposals. If agreement was reached the agreement was to be put in writing. Neither party was to be required to reach an agreement, accept any proposal or counterproposal or submit counterproposals.

In addition, neither party was to be required, under his duty to bargain collectively, to discuss any matter other than those (which were set out in detail in the House bill) which the House considered to be within the proper scope of compulsory bargaining.

As part of the procedure of collective bargaining, the House bill required that the employees themselves, in a secret ballot, vote on the question of whether to reject the employer's last offer of settlement, and made it a violation of the duty to bargain to call a strike or lockout unless upon such ballot a majority of the employees eligible to vote were in favor of such rejection.

The Senate amendment did not, in the definition section, contain any definition of collective bargaining, but did contain (section 8 (d)) a provision stating what collective bargaining was to consist of for the purposes of section 8. It was stated as the performance of the mutual obligation of the parties to meet at reasonable times and confer in good faith with respect to wages, hours and other terms and conditions of employment, or with respect to the negotiation of an agreement, or with respect to any question arising thereunder; and the execution of a written contract incorporating any agreement reached if desired by either party. This mutual obligation was not to compel either party to agree to a proposal or require the making of any concession. Hence, the Senate amendment, while it did not prescribe a purely objective test of what constituted collective bargaining, as did the House bill, had to a very substantial extent the same effect as the House bill in this regard, since it rejected, as a factor in determining good faith, the test of making a concession and thus prevented the Board from determining the merits of the positions of the parties.

The Senate amendment also required, as part of the bargaining procedure, that no party to any collective bargaining contract should terminate or modify the contract unless the party desiring such termination or modification (A) served a written sixty-day notice of the proposed termination or modification on the other party, (B) offered to meet and confer with the other party with respect thereto, (C) notified the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service (a new independent agency later discussed) within thirty days after such notice of the existence of the dispute, if agreement had not been reached by that time, and (D) continued in full force and effect, without strike or lockout, all the terms and conditions of the existing contract for a period of sixty days after the notice of desired termination or modification was given or until the expiration date of the contract, whichever occurred later.

An employee who engaged in a strike within the 60-day period just described lost his status as an employee of the particular employer for the purposes of sections 8, 9, and 10 of the act.

The conference agreement, like the Senate amendment, does not contain a definition as such of collective bargaining, but does, in section 8 (d) of the amended Labor Act, contain provisions similar to those of the Senate amendment, with certain clarifying changes. One of the important changes is the inclusion of a provision indicating that the duty to bargain is not to be construed as requiring either party to discuss or agree to any modification of the terms and conditions contained in a contract for a fixed period, if such modification is to become effective before such terms and conditions can be reopened under the provisions of the contract. In addition the conference agreement omits from the Senate amendment words that were contained therein which might have been construed to require compulsory settlement of grievance disputes and other disputes over the interpretation or application of the contract.

(8) Supervisors: As heretofore stated, both the House bill and the Senate amendment excluded supervisors from the individuals who are to be considered employees for the purposes of the act. The House bill defined as supervisors, however, certain categories of employees who were not treated as supervisors under the Senate amendment. These were generally (A) certain personnel who fix the amount of wages earned by other employees, such as inspectors, checkers, weighmasters, and time-study personnel, (B) labor relations personnel, police, and claims personnel, and (C) confidential employees. The Senate amendment confined the definition of supervisor to individuals generally regarded as foremen and persons of like or higher rank.

The conference agreement, in the definition of supervisor, limits such term to those individuals treated as supervisors under the Senate amendment. In the case of persons working in the labor relations personnel and employment departments, it was not thought necessary to make specific provision, as was done in the House bill, since the Board has treated, and presumably will continue to treat, such persons as outside the scope of the Act. This is the prevailing Board practice with respect to such people as confidential secretaries as well, and it was not the intention of the conferees to alter this practice in any respect. The conference agreement does not treat time-study personnel or guards as supervisors, as did the House bill. Since, however, time-study employees may qualify as professional personnel, the special provisions of the Senate amendment (hereafter discussed) applicable with respect to professional employees will cover many in this category. In the case of guards, the conference agreement does not permit the certification of a labor organization as the bargaining representative of guards if it admits to membership, or is affiliated with any organization that admits to membership, employees other than guards. The provision dealing with the certification of bargaining units for guards is dealt with in section 9 (b) of the conference agreement, and the individuals who are to be considered as guards therein set forth.

(9) The House bill did not contain any definition of the term "professional employee," but section 9 (f) (2) thereof gave professional personnel and other distinguishable groups of employees an opportunity to exclude themselves from larger bargaining units in which it was proposed that they be included. The Senate amendment accorded a similar treatment to professional employees and defined that term. This definition in general covers such persons as legal, engineering, scientific, and medical personnel together with their junior professional assistants. The conference agreement contains the same definition of professional employee as that contained in the Senate amendment, and accords to this category the same treatment which was provided for them in section 9 (f) (3) of the House bill.

(10) Since the terms "sympathy strike," "illegal boycott," "jurisdictional strike," "monopolistic strike," and "featherbedding practice" do not appear as such in the conference agreement, the definitions of them are omitted and the treatment of the matters covered thereby are discussed in connection with the appropriate sections of the conference agreement.

(11) As heretofore stated, the conference agreement does not contain any definition of "agricultural laborer," "agriculture" or "agricultural labor." This matter has previously been discussed in connection with the definition of "employee" in the House bill, the Senate amendment, and the conference agreement.

(12) The conference agreement contains in the definition section a rule to be applied for the purpose of determining when a person is acting as an "agent" of another person so as to make such other person responsible for his acts. A provision having the same effect was contained in section 12 of the House bill, under which the Norris-LaGuardia Act was made inapplicable in connection with certain activities dealt with in that section. One of the provisions of that Act which was thus made inapplicable was section 6 thereof which provides that no employer or labor organization participating or interested in a labor dispute shall be held responsible for the "unlawful" acts of its agents except upon clear proof of actual authorization of the particular acts performed, or subsequent ratification thereof after knowledge. Hence, under the conference agreement, as under the House bill, both employers and labor organizations will be responsible for the acts of their agents in accordance with the ordinary common law rules of agency (and only ordinary evidence will be required to establish the agent's authority).

ADMINISTRATION

The House bill (sections 3, 4, and 102) abolished the existing National Labor Relations Board, created a new board of three members, not more than two of whom were to be members of the same political party, and limited the new board to the performance of the quasi-judicial functions under the Act. The investigating and prosecuting functions under the Act were to be performed by an Administrator, a new independent office which was created by section 4 of the House bill. The Senate amendment (section 3 of the amended Labor Act) retained the existing board but increased its membership to seven and provided that the Board could assign its duties to groups of not less than three members each. The conference agreement (section 3 (a)) retains the existing Board but increases its membership to five. Of the two additional members, who are to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, one is to be appointed for a term of two years and one for a term of five years. The conference agreement does not make provision for an independent agency to exercise the investigating and prosecuting functions under the Act, but does provide that there shall be a General Counsel of the Board, who is to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of four years. The General Counsel is to have general supervision and direction of all attorneys employed by the Board (excluding the trial examiners and the legal assistants to the individual members of the Board), and of all the officers and employees in the Board's regional offices, and is to have the final authority to act in the name of, but independently of any direction, control, or review by, the Board in respect of the investigation of charges and the issuance of complaints of unfair labor practices, and in respect of the prosecution of such complaints before the Board. He is to have, in addition, such other duties as the Board may prescribe or as may be provided by law. By this provision responsibility for what takes place in the Board's regional offices is centralized in one individual who is ultimately responsible to the President and Congress.

The House bill, in the section providing for the Administrator, provided that the regional directors and the chief regional attorneys were to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. It was believed that better administration will result in having responsibility lodged in one person rather than having it diffused through numerous regional directors and regional attorneys, and the conference agreement omits this provision.

Section 4 of the conference agreement provides that each member of the Board and the General Counsel of the Board shall receive a salary at the rate of $12,000 per annum. This section also provides that the Board may not employ any attorneys for the purpose of reviewing transcripts of hearings or preparing drafts of opinions, with the exception that any attorney employed for assignment as a legal assistant to any Board member may, for such member, review transcripts and prepare such drafts. There was a provision in the House bill and also in the Senate amendment having the same effect. This section of the conference agreement also provides that no trial examiner's report can be reviewed either before or after its publication by any person other than a member of the Board or his legal assistant, and in addition trial examiners are prohibited from advising or consulting with the Board with respect to exceptions taken to their findings, rulings, or recommendations. A similar provision was contained in the Senate amendment, but there was no such provision in the House bill. The combination of the provisions dealing with the authority of the General Counsel, the provision abolishing the Board's review division, and the provisions relating to the trial examiners and their reports effectively limits the Board to the performance of quasi-judicial functions.

Section 5 of the conference agreement is the same as section 5 of the existing National Labor Relations Act and also section 5 of the amended Labor Act in the Senate amendment. Section 5 of the amended Labor Act in the House bill had the same effect insofar as the Board was concerned, but its provisions were also applicable to the Administrator which, as heretofore stated, is not provided for in the conference agreement.

Section 6 of the conference agreement gives the Board general power to prescribe regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of the Act. There was a similar provision in section 6 of the amended Labor Act in the House bill and also in the Senate amendment. The only change in this section from existing law is the insertion of the words "in the manner prescribed by the Administrative Procedure Act". This insertion appeared in the House bill but not in the Senate amendment. It is made to assure that the subsequent amendment of the National Labor Relations Act without changing this section will not supersede the general rules prescribed in the Administrative Procedure Act which are now applicable to the Board's powers to promulgate regulations.

RIGHTS OF EMPLOYEES

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment in amending the National Labor Relations Act preserved the right under section 7 of that Act of employees to self-organization, to form, join, or assist any labor organization, and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. The House bill, however, made two changes in that section of the Act. First, it was stated specifically that the rights set forth were not to be considered as including the right to commit or participate in unfair labor practices, unlawful concerted activities, or violations of collective bargaining contracts. Second, it was specifically set forth that employees were also to have the right to refrain from self-organization, etc., if they chose to do so.

The first change in section 7 of the Act made by the House bill was inserted by reason of early decisions of the Board to the effect that the language of section 7 protected concerted activities regardless of their nature or objectives. An outstanding decision of this sort was the one involving a "sit down" strike wherein the Board ordered the reinstatement of employees who engaged in this unlawful activity. Later the Board ordered the reinstatement of certain employees whose concerted activities constituted mutiny. In both of the above instances, however, the decision of the Board was reversed by the Supreme Court. More recently, a decision of the Board ordering the reinstatement of individuals who had engaged in mass picketing was reversed by the Circuit Court of Appeals (Indiana Desk Co. v. N. L. R. B. (149 Fed. (2d) 987) (1944)).

Thus the courts have firmly established the rule that under the existing provisions of section 7 of the National Labor Relations Act, employees are not given any right to engage in unlawful or other improper conduct. In its most recent decisions the Board has been consistently applying the principles established by the courts. For example, in the American News Company Case (55 N. L. R. B. 1302) (1944) the Board held that employees had no right which was protected under the Act to strike to compel an employer to violate the wage stabilization laws. Again, in the Scullin Steel Case (65 N. L. R. B. 1294) and in the Dyson Case (decided February 7, 1947), the Board held that strikes in violation of collective bargaining contracts were not concerted activities protected by the Act, and refused to reinstate employees discharged for engaging in such activities. In the second Thompson Products case (decided February 21, 1947), the Board held that strikes to compel the employer to violate the Act and rulings of the Board thereunder were not concerted activities protected by the provisions of section 7. The reasoning of these recent decisions appears to have had the effect of overruling such decisions of the Board as that in Matter of Berkshire Knitting Mills (46 N. L. R. B. 955 (1943)), wherein the Board attempted to distinguish between what it considered as major crimes and minor crimes for the purpose of determining what employees were entitled to reinstatement.

By reason of the foregoing, it was believed that the specific provisions in the House bill excepting unfair labor practices, unlawful concerted activities, and violation of collective bargaining agreements from the protection of section 7 were unnecessary. Moreover, there was real concern that the inclusion of such a provision might have a limiting effect and make improper conduct not specifically mentioned subject to the protection of the Act.

In addition, other provisions of the conference agreement deal with this particular problem in general terms. For example, in the declaration of policy to the amended National Labor Relations Act adopted by the conference committee, it is stated in the new paragraph dealing with improper practices of labor organizations, their officers, and members, that the "elimination of such practices is a necessary condition to the assurance of the rights herein guaranteed." This in and of itself demonstrates a clear intention that these undesirable concerted activities are not to have any protection under the Act, and to the extent that the Board in the past has accorded protection to such activities, the conference agreement makes such protection no longer possible. Furthermore, in section 10 (c) of the amended Act as proposed in the conference agreement, it is specifically provided that no order of the Board shall require the reinstatement of any individual or the payment to him of any back pay if such individual was suspended or discharged for cause, and this, of course, applies with equal force whether or not the acts constituting the cause for discharge were committed in connection with a concerted activity. Again, inasmuch as section 10 (b) of the Act as proposed to be amended by the conference agreement requiries that the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts shall, so far as practicable, be followed and applied by the Board, proof of acts of unlawful conduct cannot hereafter be limited to proof of confession or conviction thereof.

The second change made by the House bill in section 7 of the Act (which is carried into the conference agreement) also has an important bearing on the kinds of concerted activities which are protected by section 7. That provision, as heretofore stated, provides that employees are also to have the right to refrain from joining in concerted activities with their fellow employees if they choose to do so. Taken in conjunction with the provisions of section 8 (b) (1) of the conference agreement (which will be hereafter discussed) wherein it is made an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in section 7, it is apparent that many forms and varieties of concerted activities which the Board, particularly in its early days, regarded as protected by the Act will no longer be treated as having that protection, since obviously persons who engage in or support unfair labor practices will not enjoy immunity under the Act.

UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment amended section 8 of the National Labor Relations Act by adding thereto unfair labor practices on the part of labor organizations. The practices which under existing law are treated as unfair labor practices on the part of the employer were changed in only two respects by the House bill and in only one respect by the Senate amendment, as will hereafter appear.

Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment changed the first unfair labor practice on the part of an employer, namely, interfering with, restraining, or coercing employees in the exercise of their rights guaranteed in section 7. What these rights are has already been discussed. The conference agreement contains the provisions of the House bill and the Senate amendment in this respect.

The House bill amended section 8 (2) of the present National Labor Relations Act—the provision making it an unfair labor practice for an employer to dominate the formation or administration of labor organizations for the purpose of according some protection to labor organizations which were not affiliated with one of the national or international labor organizations. This provision of the House bill had the effect of permitting an employer to do the same kind of things for independent unions which the Board has permitted him to do for the affiliated union. The Senate amendment did not change the words of section 8 (2) in existing law.

There were contained, however, in both the House bill and the Senate amendment—in the amendments to sections 9 and 10 of the Labor Act—provisions requiring the Board to treat independent unions in the same manner in which it treats unions which are affiliated with or constitute units of labor organizations national or international in scope. These provisions acted as a limitation on the power of the Board in holding activities to be unfair labor practices under section 8 (a) (2) of the House bill and the Senate amendment. The Board has, for example, in the case of affiliated unions permitted employers to provide bulletin boards in their plants for the union's use, to give union officials preferred treatment in laying off workers and calling them back, and to allow shop stewards without losing pay to confer not only with the employer but with the employees as well, and to transact other union business in the plant. The Board has not permitted the employer to do the same things for non-affiliated unions, and it was the purpose of the House provision to provide for equality of treatment in this respect.

Since this matter is adequately dealt with in the provisions in sections 9 and 10, the conference agreement omits the provisions of the House bill which amended section 8 (2) of the existing law, and adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment, in rewriting the present provisions of section 8 (3) of the Act, abolished the closed shop. The union shop and maintenance of membership, however, were permitted both under the House bill (section 8 (d) (4)) and under the Senate amendment (proviso to section 8 (a) (3)). The House bill and the Senate amendment differed in the required procedures for securing the union shop or maintenance of membership. These differences will be hereafter discussed. The conference agreement adopts the language of the Senate amendment in section 8 (a) (3) of the Labor Act with one clarifying omission. Under the provisions of the conference agreement an employer is permitted to enter into an agreement with a labor organization (not established, maintained, or assisted by any action defined as an unfair labor practice) whereby the employer agrees that he will employ only employees who on and after thirty days from the date of their employment (or from the date of the agreement, if that is later) are members of the labor organization concerned. This permission, however, is granted only if, upon the most recent election held under later provisions of the conference agreement (section 9 (e)) a majority of the employees in the bargaining unit in question eligible to vote have authorized the union to make such an agreement.

As a protection to the individual worker against arbitrary action by the union, it is further provided that an employer is not justified in discriminating against an employee with respect to whom the employer has reason to believe membership in the union was not available on the same terms as those generally applicable to other mmm bers, or with respect to whom the employer has reason to believe membership was denied or terminated for reasons other than failure of the employee to tender the periodic dues and the initiation fees uniformly required as a condition of acquiring or retaining membership. In determining whether membership was available on the same terms as those generally applicable to other members, it must be borne in mind that in some unions the dues and initiation fees of persons who became members many years ago may have been more or less than those currently in effect, or the terms or conditions of membership may have been different. The conference agreement hence does not contemplate availability of membership on the same terms as those applicable to all of the members, nor does it disturb arrangements in the nature of those approved by the Board in Larus & Brother Co. (62 N. L. R. B. 1075 (1945)).

Neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment changed the wording of the provisions of section 8 (4) of the existing Act, and the conference agreement in section 8 (a) (4) follows the provisions of existing law. The same is true in the case of section 8 (5) of existing law which makes it an unfair labor practice for an employer to refuse to bargain collectively with the representative of his employees, subject to the provisions of section 9 (a).

The Senate amendment contained a provision which does not appear in section 8 of existing law. This provision would have made it an unfair labor practice to violate the terms of a collective bargaining agreement or an agreement to submit a labor dispute to arbitration. The conference agreement omits this provision of the Senate amendment. Once parties have made a collective bargaining contract the enforcement of that contract should be left to the usual processes of the law and not to the National Labor Relations Board.

UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES OF LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment defined, in a new section 8 (b) of the National Labor Relations Act, unfair labor practices on the part of labor organizations and their agents. The House bill also made the unfair labor practices described unfair labor practices on the part of employees.

Under the House bill the following unfair labor practices were set forth:

(1) Intimidating practices to interfere with the exercise by employees of rights guaranteed in section 7 or to compel or seek to compel any individual to be a member of a labor organization.

(2) To refuse to bargain collectively with the employer.

(3) To call or participate in any strike or other concerted interference with an employer's operations, an object of which was to compel the employer to accede to the inclusion in a collective bargaining agreement of matters which under the House bill were not treated as within the proper scope of compulsory bargaining.

Under the new section 8 (b) of the Senate amendment, the following unfair labor practices on the part of labor organizations and their agents were defined:

(1) To restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in section 7, or to restrain or coerce an employer in the selection of his representatives for collective bargaining or the adjustment of grievances. This provision of the Senate amendment in its general terms covered all of the activities which were prescribed in section 12 (a) (1) of the House bill as unlawful concerted activities and some of the activities which were proscribed in the other paragraphs of section 12 (a). While these restraining and coercive activities did not have the same treatment under the Senate amendment as under the corresponding provisions of the House bill, participation in them, as explained in the discussion of section 7, is not a protected activity under the Act. Under the House bill, these activities could be enjoined upon suit by a private employer, specific provision was made for suits for damages on the part of any person injured thereby, and employees participating therein were subject to deprivation of their rights under the Act. The conference agreement, while adopting section 8 (b) (1) of the Senate amendment, does not by specific terms contain any of these sanctions, but an employee who is discharged for participating in them will not, as explained in the discussion of section 7, be entitled to reinstatement. Furthermore, since in section 302 (b), unions are made suable, unions that engage in these practices to the injury of another may subject themselves to liability under ordinary principles of law. Then too, under the provisions of section 10 (k) of the conference agreement the Board can seek a temporary injunction enjoining these practices pending its decision on the merits.

In applying section 8 (1) of the existing law, the Board has not held to be unfair labor practices acts which constituted "interference" that did not also constitute restraint or coercion. Section 8 (1) of the present law is written in broad terms, and only by long continued administrative practice has its scope been adequately and properly defined. Concern has heretofore been expressed as to whether such practice would carry over into a corresponding provision of the new section 8 (b) (1), and presumably because of this concern the words "interference with" were omitted from the proposed new section. Omission of these words from the proposed new section was not, however, intended to broaden the scope of section 8 (a) (1) as heretofore defined by the long continued practice of the Board.

(2) To discriminate against an employee to whom membership in a labor organization has been denied or terminated on some ground other than non-payment of dues or initiation fees. The purpose of this provision of the Senate amendment was obvious.

(3) To refuse to bargain collectively with an employer, provided the labor organization is the representative of his employees subject to section 9 (a). This provision of the Senate amendment imposed upon labor organizations the same duty to bargain which under section 8 (a) (5) of the Senate amendment was imposed upon employers. What bargaining consists of has already been discussed supra.

(4) To engage in, or induce or encourage the employees of any employer to engage in, a strike or a concerted refusal to use, manufacture, process, transport, or otherwise handle or work on any goods, articles, materials, or commodities, or to perform any services in the course of their employment, if the purpose thereof was to force the doing of certain things. The proscribed purposes or objectives were described in clauses (A), (B), (C), and (D) of this provision of the Senate amendment.

Under clause (A) strikes or boycotts, or attempts to induce or encourage such action, were made unfair labor practices if the purpose was to force an employer or other person to cease using, selling, handling, transporting, or otherwise dealing in the products of another, or to cease doing business with any other person. Thus it was made an unfair labor practice for a union to engage in a strike against employer A for the purpose of forcing that employer to cease doing business with employer B. Similarly it would not be lawful for a union to boycott employer A because employer A uses or otherwise deals in the goods of, or does business with, employer B.

Clause (B) of this provision of the Senate amendment covered strikes and boycotts conducted for the purpose of forcing another employer to recognize or bargain with a labor organization that has not been certified as the exclusive representative. It is to be observed that the primary strike for recognition (without a Board certification) was not prohibited. Moreover, strikes and boycotts for recognition were not prohibited if the union had been certified as the exclusive representative.

Strikes and boycotts having as their purpose forcing any employer to disregard his obligation to recognize and bargain with a certified union and in lieu thereof to bargain with or recognize another union were made unfair labor practices under clause (C).

Clause (D) covered strikes or boycotts having as their purpose forcing an employer to assign work tasks to members of one union when he has assigned them to members of another union. If the employer against whom the strike or boycott was directed was failing to conform to a determination of the Board fixing the representation of employees performing the work tasks, then the strike or boycott was not an unfair labor practice.

The matters covered by section 8 (b) (4) in the Senate amendment were dealt with in section 12 of the House bill and in the definitions of illegal boycott and jurisdictional strike.

The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with clarifying changes, and with one addition to the category of unlawful objectives. Under the conference agreement a strike or boycott to force an employer or self-employed person to become a member of a labor organization will be treated in the same manner as other boycotts.

(5) To violate the terms of a collective bargaining agreement to submit a labor dispute to arbitration.

From the above description of the House bill and the Senate amendment dealing with unfair labor practices on the part of labor organizations and their agents, it is apparent the Senate amendment was broader in its scope than the corresponding provisions of the House bill. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with the following changes therein:

(1) Section 8 (b) (2) is expanded so as to prohibit all attempts by a labor organization or its agents to cause an employer to discriminate against an employee in violation of section 8 (a) (3). The latter section, as heretofore explained, prohibits an employer from discriminating against an employee by reason of his membership or non-membership in a labor organization, except to the extent that he obligates himself to do so under the terms of a permitted union shop or maintenance of membership contract. This provision contained in the conference agreement would, for example, prevent a labor organization from seeking to compel an employer to hire only union foremen or to discharge foremen who were not members of the union, and in this respect it covers matters which, among others, were dealt with under section 12 of the House bill.

(2) A provision which was contained in the Senate amendment in section 8 (b) (2), designed to prevent an employer from discriminating against an employee covered by a union shop agreement who had been expelled from the union for activities in behalf of another representative, is omitted as unnecessary since there is nothing in the conference agreement which permits an employer to discriminate against an employee who has been expelled for this reason.

(3) Section 8 (b) (4) of the conference agreement has been expanded to cover a matter which was covered by section 12 of the House bill, namely, concerted activity by a union or its agents to compel an employer or self-employed person to become a member.

(4) Two additional unfair labor practices are added which were not contained in the Senate amendment but were contained in the House bill. The first would make it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents having in effect a permitted union shop or maintenance of membership agreement to require the payment of an initiation fee in an amount which the Board finds excessive or discriminatory under all the circumstances. A similar provision, though broader in its scope, was contained in section 8 (c) (2) of the amended Labor Act in the House bill. It is also made an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to cause or attempt to cause an employer to pay any money or thing of value, in the nature of an exaction, for services which are not performed or not to be performed. This provision derives from the provisions of the House bill relating to "featherbedding" practices.

(5) Both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions designed to protect the right of both employers and labor organizations to free speech. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House bill in this respect with one change derived from the Senate amendment. It is provided that expressing any views, argument, or opinion or the dissemination thereof, whether in written, printed, graphic or visual form, is not to constitute or be evidence of an unfair labor practice if such expression contains no threat of force or reprisal or promise of benefit. The practice which the Board has had in the past of using speeches and publications of employers concerning labor organizations and collective bargaining arrangements as evidence, no matter how irrelevant or immaterial, that some later act of the employer had an illegal purpose gave rise to the necessity for this change in the law. The purpose is to protect the right of free speech when what the employer says or writes is not of a threatening nature or does not promise a prohibited favorable discrimination.

(6) Section 8 (d) (2) of the amended Labor Act in the House bill contains a provision which is found in section 8 (2) of the existing law and in section 8 (a) (2) of the Senate amendment and the conference agreement. This provides that an employer is not to be prohibited from permitting employees to confer with him during working hours without loss of time or pay. This contemplates payments not only to individual employees but also to employees acting in a representative capacity in conferring with the employer.

Section 8 (d) (3) of the amended Labor Act in the House bill provided that nothing in the act was to be construed as prohibiting an employer from forming or maintaining a committee of employees and discussing with it matters of mutual interest, if the employees did not have a bargaining representative. This provision is omitted from the conference agreement since the act by its own terms permits individual employees and groups of employees to meet with the employer and section 9 (a) of the conference agreement permits employers to answer their grievances.

Section 8 (c) of the House bill contained detailed provisions dealing with the relations of labor organizations with their members. One of the more important provisions of this section—that limiting the initiation fees which a labor organization may impose where a permitted union shop or maintenance of membership agreement is in effect—is included in the conference agreement (section 8 (b) (5)) and has already been discussed. The other parts of this subsection are omitted from the conference agreement as unfair labor practices, but section 9 (f) (6) of the conference agreement requires labor organizations to make periodic reports with respect to many of these matters as a condition of certification and other benefits under the Act.

Section 8 (d) of the conference agreement (stating what constitutes collective bargaining) has been discussed supra in connection with the treatment of the definition of collective bargaining which was contained in the House bill.

REPRESENTATIVES AND ELECTIONS

Except in one respect, neither the House bill nor the Senate amendment made any change in the provisions of section 9 (a) of the existing Act (excluding minor textual changes). That section of existing law provides that representatives designated or selected for the purpose of collective bargaining by a majority of the employees in a unit appropriate for that purpose are to be the exclusive representatives of all of the employees in such unit for collective bargaining. The existing law further provides that an individual employee or group of employees will have the right at any time to present grievances to their employer. But as pointed out in the committee report on the bill in the House, this provision has not been construed by the Board as authorizing the employer to settle grievances thus presented.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment amended section 9 (a) of the existing law to specifically authorize employers to settle grievances presented by individual employees or groups of employees, so long as the settlement is not inconsistent with any collective bargaining contract in effect. The Senate amendment contained a further proviso, however, to the effect that the bargaining representative be given opportunity to be present at the adjustment of such grievances.

The conference agreement follows the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 9 (b) of the existing law—under which the Board is given power to decide the unit which is appropriate for the purpose of collective bargaining—was amended both by the House bill and the Senate amendment. In the Senate amendment the limitations which were described on the Board's powers in establishing such units were contained in a proviso to section 9 (b), while in the House bill the applicable limitations were contained in section 9 (f).

Under section 9 (f) of the House bill the powers of the Board were circumscribed as follows:

(1) With certain exceptions, the Board was prevented from certifying as the representative of employees of one employer a representative that had been certified as the representative of employees of a competing employer. It was this provision of the House bill which, among others, dealt with the question of industry-wide bargaining. It is omitted from the conference agreement.

(2) Under section 9 (f) (2) in the House bill provision was made, upon application of any interested person, for a separate ballot for any craft, department, trade, calling, profession, or other distinguishable group, and the Board was directed to exclude any such group from the bargaining unit proposed to be established if less than a majority of the employees in it who cast ballots voted for the representative certified by the Board for the rest of the unit. The Board has heretofore, under the so-called "Globe doctrine" (3 N. L. R. B. 294 (1937)) provided for separate ballots for crafts and it sometimes applies the same principle to groups other than crafts. It also regularly excludes from larger units groups and individuals whose circumstances differ materially from those of the more numerous members of the unit. The provisions of section 9 (f) (2) of the House bill were designed to establish this principle in the law itself and broaden its application so as to give to groups of employees having common characteristics and interests different from those of the more numerous members of a proposed unit a greater freedom of choice in selecting their representatives than has heretofore been permitted.

The conference agreement, in section 9 (c) (2), covers in specific terms the matter of crafts and professional employees. In the case of the former the conference agreement provides that the Board cannot decide that a craft unit is inappropriate for collective bargaining on the ground that a different unit has been established by a prior Board determination, unless a majority of the employees in the proposed craft unit vote against separate representation. In the case of the latter the Board cannot include both professional employees and employees who are not professional employees in the same unit unless a majority of the professional employees vote for inclusion therein.

Neither the omission from the conference agreement of section 9 (f) (2) of the House bill, nor the particular limitations on the power of the Board under section 9 (b) of the conference agreement, are intended to indicate that only in the specified cases should the Board establish separate units or exclude employees from units for which it certifies representatives. It must be emphasized that one of the principal purposes of the National Labor Relations Act is to give employees full freedom to choose or not to choose representatives for collective bargaining. As has already been pointed out in the discussion of section 7, the conference agreement guarantees in express terms the right of employees to refrain from collective bargaining or concerted activities if they choose to do so. This additional guaranty—recognizing and protecting, as it does, the rights and interests of individuals and minorities—will, it is believed, through wise administration result in a substantially larger measure of protection of those rights when bargaining units are being established than has heretofore been the practice.

The conference agreement, in section 9 (b), contains one further provision covering a particular classification of employees who were dealt with in the House bill in the definition of supervisor. Under that definition individuals employed for police duties came within the definition of supervisor. The conference agreement represents a compromise on this matter. It provides that the Board cannot decide that any unit is appropriate for collective bargaining if it includes, together with other employees, any individual employed as a guard to enforce against employees and other persons rules to protect property belonging to the employer or for which he is responsible, or to protect the safety of persons on the employer's premises. It is further provided that no labor organization can be certified as the representative of employees in a bargaining unit of guards if such organization admits to membership, or is affiliated directly or indirectly with an organization which admits to membership, employees other than guards.

(3) Under section 9 (f) (3) in the House bill, it was provided that in determining whether a unit is appropriate for collective bargaining, the extent to which employees had organized should not be controlling. There was no comparable provision in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement, in section 9 (c), contains this provision of the House bill.

(4) Under the House bill, in section 9 (f) (4), it was provided that the Board was to apply the same regulations and rules of decision, in determining whether a question of representation affecting commerce exists, regardless of the identity of the person or persons filing the application or the kind of relief sought. It was further provided that employees were not to be denied the right to designate or select a representative of their own choosing by reason of an order of the Board with respect to such representative or its predecessor that would not have issued in similar circumstances with respect to a labor organization national or international in scope, or affiliated with such an organization. The Senate amendment, in section 9 (c) (2), contained a provision having the same purpose. Both the House provision and the Senate provision were directed to the practice of the Board in denying employees the right to vote for independent labor organizations in respect of which orders had been issued by the Board under section 8 (1) or 8 (2) finding employer domination where under similar circumstances it did not apply the same rule to unions affiliated with one of the national labor organizations. Under the House bill and the Senate amendment, the Board was directed to apply the same rules to both. The conference agreement, in section 9 (c) (2), contains a provision having the same purpose and effect.

(5) The House bill, in section 9 (f) (5), provided a new rule for run-off elections. A run-off was not permitted unless within sixty days following the first election a representative receiving votes in the first election furnished to the Board satisfactory evidence that it represented more than 50 per centum of the employees in the bargaining unit in question. The run-off was to be between such representative and no representative. The Senate amendment, in section 9 (c) (3), directed that where a run-off election was conducted, the ballot should provide for a selection between the two choices receiving the largest and second largest number of valid votes cast in the previous election. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

(6) Under the House bill, in section 9 (f) (6) no labor organization could be certified if one or more of its national or international officers, or one or more of the officers of the organization designated on the ballot, was or ever had been a member of the Communist Party or by reason of active and consistent promotion or support of the policies of the Communist Party could reasonably be regarded as being a member of or affiliated with such party, or believed in or was or ever had been a member of or supported any organization that believed in or taught the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods. The Senate amendment, in section 9 (h), contained a similar provision, differing from the House bill only in not imposing the requirement that an officer "never has been" one of the described individuals. The conference agreement, in section 9 (h), contains a provision directed to this problem covered by both the House bill and the Senate amendment, and provides that no investigation shall be made by the Board of any question affecting commerce concerning the representation of employees raised by a labor organization under section 9 (c), no union shop or maintenance of membership agreement petition can be entertained under section 9 (e) (1) (hereafter discussed), and no complaint can be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under section 10 (b), unless there is on file with the Board an affidavit executed contemporaneously or within the preceding 12-month period by each officer of the labor organization in question and the officers of any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliated or constituent unit, that he is not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party, and that he does not believe in, and is not a member of or support any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods. The provisions of section 35 A of the Criminal Code (prescribing penalties for false statements made to induce official action) are to be applicable in respect to such affidavits, and if an officer of a labor organization files a false affidavit with the Board, he will be subject to the penalties prescribed in section 35 A of the Criminal Code.

The "ever has been" test that was included in the House bill is omitted from the conference agreement as unnecessary, since the Supreme Court has held that if an individual has been proved to be a member of the Communist Party at some time in the past, the presumption is that he is still a member in the absence of proof to the contrary.

(7) Under the House bill, in section 9 (f) (7), it was provided that no election could be directed in any bargaining unit or any subdivision thereof within which, in the preceding 12-month period, a valid election had been held, except upon a petition by employees requesting a "de-certification" of a representative. The Senate amendment, in section 9 (c) (3), contained a similar provision without the exception. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment. The Senate amendment also contained a provision that employees on strike who were not entitled to reinstatement should not be permitted to vote unless the strike involved an unfair labor practice on the part of the employer. This provision is also included in section 9 (c) of the conference agreement with the "unless" clause omitted. The inclusion of such clause would have had the effect of precluding the Board from changing its present practice with respect to the treatment of "unfair labor practice" strikers as distinguished from that accorded to "economic" strikers.

(8) Under the House bill, in section 9 (f) (8), it was provided that if a new representative were chosen while a collective bargaining agreement was in effect with another representative, certification of the new representative should not become effective unless such new representative become a party to such contract and agreed to be bound by its terms for the remainder of the contract period. Since the inclusion of such a provision might give rise to an inference that the practice of the Board with respect to conducting representation elections while collective bargaining contracts are in effect should not be continued, it is omitted from the conference agreement.

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment in section 9 (c) of the amended Labor Act provided that petitions under section 9 could be filed by employees or labor organizations wishing an election to designate a representative, by employees or labor organizations wishing to provide for the "de-certification" of an existing representative, and by an employer to whom a representative has presented a claim requesting recognition as the representative for collective bargaining. Investigations of such petitions under the House bill were conducted by the Administrator provided in the House bill. Under the Senate amendment investigations were conducted by the Board. Both under the House bill and the Senate amendment if there was reasonable cause to believe that a question of representation affecting commerce existed a hearing was to be held. Under the Senate amendment it was provided that such hearing could be conducted by an officer or employee in the regional office who, when he reported to the Board with respect thereto, was prohibited from making any recommendations. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment provided that if the Board found upon the hearing that a question of representation existed a secret ballot should be held and the results thereof certified.

The conference agreement, in section 9 (c), follows the provisions of the Senate amendment, most of which, as indicated, were also contained in the House bill. The remaining portions of section 9 (c) of the conference agreement have already been discussed in connection with the treatment of the provisions which were contained in section 9 (f) of the House bill.

Section 9 (d) in the conference agreement, except for clerical changes, is the same as section 9 (e) in the House bill, section 9 (d) in the Senate amendment, and section 9 (d) of existing law.

Section 9 (g) in the House bill provided for the so-called union-shop election. This provision, together with the provisions of section 8 (d) (4) in the House bill, provided a somewhat different procedure for authorization of union shop and maintenance of membership contracts than did the Senate amendment. Under the House bill the employer had to agree to a union shop or maintenance of membership provision in the contract before an election with respect thereto could be held. An election under section 9 (g) was for the purpose of authorizing such provision to be carried into effect. The petition for the election was required to be filed under oath and had to state that the agreement of the employer was not secured, either directly or indirectly, by means of a strike or a threat thereof. The provisions of the agreement providing for a union shop could be carried out only if upon a secret ballot taken a majority of all of the employees in the bargaining unit in question voted in favor thereof, and the election was effective only for the period of the contract in which the union shop agreement was included, or for 2 years if the contract was for a longer period. Under the Senate amendment (section 9 (e)) the union shop election was to be held for the purpose of authorizing the labor organization to make a union shop or maintenance of membership agreement with the employer and did not have the effect of preventing strikes to secure such an agreement. Like the House bill, the agreement was exempted from the general prohibitions of section 8 (a) (3) (prohibiting discrimination by reason of membership or nonmembership in labor organizations) only if a majority of the employees eligible to vote had authorized the labor organization in question to make such an agreement. Under the Senate amendment, once this authorization had been given, it continued in effect until, upon a secret ballot conducted as a result of the filing of a deauthorization petition, a majority of the employees eligible to vote had not voted in favor of the authorization. As in the case of the representation elections, the Senate amendment in section 9 (e) provided that no election in respect of the union shop could be conducted in any bargaining unit or any subdivision thereof within which, in the preceding 12-month period, a valid election had been held.

The conference agreement (section 9 (e)) follows the pattern of the Senate amendment with two clarifying changes. The conference agreement requires that the petition for the election (which includes a deauthorization petition) must be filed by or on behalf of not less than 30 percent of the employees in the bargaining unit. The conference agreement further provides that the Board can order an election under these provisions only if no question of representation exists. The particular problem dealt with in this latter clarification was provided for in the House bill by the requirement that only certified bargaining agents could make union-shop agreements and petition for elections to authorize their execution.

Section 9 (f) of the Senate amendment required labor organizations to file certain information and financial reports with the Secretary of Labor in order to be eligible for certification or have charges processed in their behalf. It was further provided that copies of the financial report be furnished to all members of the labor organization. Provision was made that such information be kept current by annual reports.

The House bill (section 303) also contained a provision requiring reports by labor organizations, but did not make the filing of such reports a condition of certification or other benefits.

The conference agreement (section 9 (f) and (g)) adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with three changes therein.

First, the filing of the information and reports is made a condition of eligibility for requesting a union shop election, in addition to eligibility for filing petitions for representation and eligibility for making charges. Second, it is provided that not only the particular labor organization invoking the processes of the Act, but also any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliate or constituent unit, must file the required information and reports. Third, there are added to the matters with respect to which information must be filed, detailed statements of, or reference to the provisions of the organization's constitution and by-laws showing the procedure followed with respect to, most of the matters which were covered in section 8 (c) in the House bill (the section dealing with the relations between labor organizations and their members).

PREVENTION OF UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICES

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment in section 10 provided, as does section 10 of the present Act, for the prevention of unfair labor practices. The House bill, by reason in part of division of functions between the Board and the Administrator provided for therein, completely recast the procedure in section 10. It also made a number of other important changes, as did the Senate amendment. The treatment under the conference agreement of the provisions in the House bill relating to the Administrator have already been discussed. The other matters dealt with in section 10 of the House bill and the Senate amendment are treated as follows:

(1) The House bill omitted from section 10 (a) of the existing law the language providing that the Board's power to deal with unfair labor practices should not be affected by other means of adjustment or prevention, but it retained the language of the present Act which makes the Board's jurisdiction exclusive. The Senate amendment, because of its provisions authorizing temporary injunctions enjoining alleged unfair labor practices and because of its provisions making unions suable, omitted the language giving the Board exclusive jurisdiction of unfair labor practices, but retained that which provides that the Board's power shall not be affected by other means of adjustment or prevention. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment. By retaining the language which provides the Board's powers under section 10 shall not be affected by other means of adjustment, the conference agreement makes clear that, when two remedies exist, one before the Board and one before the courts, the remedy before the Board shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, other remedies.

(2) The Senate amendment contained a proviso at the end of section 10 (a) authorizing the Board to cede jurisdiction over any cases in any industry to State and Territorial agencies, subject to two conditions: (a) that it can cede jurisdiction in cases arising in mining, manufacturing, communications and transportation only when the employer's operations are predominantly local in character, and (b) that it may cede jurisdiction only if the applicable provisions of the State or Territorial statute and the rules of decision thereunder are consistent with the corresponding provisions of the National Act, as intepreted and applied by the Board and by the courts. The House bill contained no provision corresponding with the proviso of section 10 (a) of the Senate amendment. The conference agreement adopts this proviso.

(3) Section 10 (b) of the amended Act under the House bill contemplated that, in unfair practice cases, the Administrator would investigate charges, issue complaints and prosecute cases. The Senate amendment did not contain comparable provisions. As previously noted, the conference agreement contemplates that these duties will be performed under the exclusive and independent direction of the General Counsel of the Board, an official appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

(4) The House bill provided that a person complained of in an unfair labor practice case would have twenty days to answer the complaint and required the Board to give not less than fifteen days' notice of hearings. The Senate amendment made no change in existing law in these respects. The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate amendment and of existing law in these respects.

(5) The House bill provided, in section 10 (b), that no complaint should issue stating a charge of an unfair labor practice that occurred more than six months before the charge was filed, or based on a charge that was filed more than six months before the complaint issued. The Senate amendment also provided that no complaint should issue based upon any unfair labor practice occurring more than six months before the filing of the charge and the service of a copy of the charge upon the person against whom the charge was made, except in cases of veterans, who received special treatment.

The provision of the House bill that required that the complaint issue within six months after the filing of the charge was designed to forestall the accumulation of back pay claims by reason of delay in prosecuting cases. Heretofore this delay has been confined chiefly to one regional office of the Board, and the Board, itself, has had the practice in the past of mitigating such claims when it was responsible for delay. Since it is anticipated that the increased membership of the Board and other changes in the administrative provisions of the Act will expedite the Board's business, the conference agreement omits the provision of the House bill respecting the time within which a complaint must issue after a charge is filed, and retains the language of the Senate amendment that requires that charges be filed, and notice thereof be given, within six months after the acts complained of have taken place.

(6) The House bill provided, in section 10 (b), that proceedings before the Board should be conducted, so far as practicable, in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in the district courts of the United States under the rules of civil procedure. The Senate amendment retained the language of the present Act, which provides that the rules of evidence prevailing in the courts shall not be controlling. The reason for this provision in the House bill was explained in full in the Committee Report on the bill. If the Board is required, so far as practicable, to act only on legal evidence, the substitution, for example, of assumed "expertness" for evidence will no longer be possible. The conference agreement in section 10 (c) contains this provision of the House bill.

(7) In section 10 (c), the House bill provided that the Board should base its decisions upon the "weight of the evidence." The Senate amendment retained the present language of the Act, permitting the Board to rest its orders upon "all the testimony taken". The conference agreement provides that the Board shall act only on the "preponderance" of the testimony—that is to say, on the weight of the credible evidence. Making the "preponderance" test a statutory requirement will, it is believed, have important effects. For example, evidence could not be considered as meeting the "preponderance" test merely by the drawing of "expert" inferences therefrom, where it would not meet that test otherwise. Again, the Board's decisions should show on their face that the statutory requirement has been met—they should indicate an actual weighing of the evidence, setting forth the reasons for believing this evidence and disbelieving that, for according greater weight to this testimony than to that, for drawing this inference rather than that. Immeasurably increased respect for decisions of the Board should result from this provision.

(8) In section 10 (c), both the House bill and the Senate amendment incorporated language with respect to the Board's remedial orders in cases of unfair labor practices by labor organizations. The House bill provided that, in addition to ordering respondents to cease and desist from unfair practices, the Board could order employers to take affirmative action to effectuate the purposes of the Act, including reinstatement with back pay for employees (a provision appearing in the present Act), and could also order representatives and employees to take affirmative action, and deprive them of rights under the Act for not more than one year. The Senate amendment did not contain the provision specifically authorizing the Board to deprive representatives and employees who engage in unfair practices of rights under the Act, but did contain a provision authorizing the Board to require a labor organization to pay back pay to employees when the labor organization was responsible for the discrimination suffered by the employees.

The House bill, by implication, limited the Board in its choice of remedial orders in cases of unfair labor practices by representatives not involving back pay, by specifying but one type of order that the Board might issue. The conference agreement therefore omits this provision of the House bill. As previously stated, employees are subject to the prohibitions of section 8 (b) only when they acts as agents of representatives, but in these and other cases, when they are disciplined or discharged for engaging in or supporting unfair practices, they do not have immunity under section 7. The language in the Senate amendment without which the Board could not require unions to pay back pay when they induce an employer to discriminate against an employee is included in the conference agreement.

(9) To prevent discrimination by the Board to the disadvantage of independent unions and representation plans, the House bill and the Senate amendment both included in section 10 (c) of the amended Act, in substantially similar terms, a provision to the effect that no order of the Board should require or forbid any action by an employer with respect to any labor organization that in similar circumstances would not be required or forbidden with respect to a labor organization national or international in scope, or affiliated with such an organization. In the past, the Board has made findings of violation of section 8 (2) in cases involving independent unions, committees and representation plans upon much weaker evidence than it has required in cases involving affiliated unions, and it has ordered employers to take far more drastic action with respect to independent organizations than with respect to affiliated organizations. The conference agreement adopts the language of the Senate amendment, which requires equal treatment for both affiliated and non-affiliated organizations. The language of the Senate amendment and the conference agreement in this respect is directed at orders under section 8 (a) (1) and 8 (a) (2). This specification is not intended to imply that independent and affiliated unions can or should be treated differently under other provisions. Rather, the language covers specific abuse which has come to the attention of Congress. It does not invite others.

(10) The House bill also included, in section 10 (c) of the amended Act, a provision forbidding the Board to order reinstatement or back pay for any employee who had been suspended or discharged, unless the weight of the evidence showed that the employee was not suspended or discharged for cause. The Senate amendment contained no corresponding provision. The conference agreement omits the "weight of evidence" language, since the Board, under the general provisions of section 10, must act on a preponderance of evidence, and simply provides that no order of the Board shall require reinstatement or back pay for any individual who was suspended or discharged for cause. Thus employees who are discharged or suspended for interfering with other employees at work, whether or not in order to transact union business, or for engaging in activities, whether or not union activities, contrary to shop rules, or for Communist activities, or for other cause (See Wyman-Gordon v. N. L. R. B. (153 Fed. (2d) 480)) will not be entitled to reinstatement. The effect of this provision is also discussed in connection with the discussion of section 7.

(11) The House bill provided that in proceedings under section 10, a proposed report and recommended order would be filed by the person conducting the hearing on behalf of the Board, and that the recommended order would become final if not excepted to within 20 days. The Senate amendment did not contain any comparable provision. The conference agreement adopts the language in section 10 (c) in the House bill in this respect.

(12) Section 10 (d) in the House bill and in the Senate amendment contained the language of the present section 10 (d) of the Act, concerning modification and setting aside by the Board of its findings and orders. The conference agreement includes this language without change.

(13) Section 10 (e) in the House bill provided that the Administrator would apply to the courts for orders enforcing the Board's orders, and then only in cases where the person against whom the order was directed failed to comply with it or thereafter violated it. The Senate amendment followed the present language of the Act, which permits the Board to petition for enforcement, but does not require it to do so. The conference agreement adopts the language of the Senate amendment.

(14) Under the language of section 10 (e) of the present Act, findings of the Board, upon court review of Board orders, are conclusive "if supported by evidence". By reason of this language, the courts have, as one has put it, in effect "abdicated" to the Board (N. L. R. B. v. Standard Oil Company, 138 Fed. (2d) 885 (1943)). See also: Wilson & Co. v. N. L. R. B. (126 Fed. (2d) 114 (1942)); N. L. R. B. v. Columbia Products Corp. (141 Fed. (2d) 687 (1944)); N. L. R. B. v. Union Pacific Stages, Inc. (99 Fed. (2d) 153). In many instances deference on the part of the courts to specialized knowledge that is supposed to inhere in administrative agencies has led the courts to acquiesce in decisions of the Board, even when the findings concerned mixed issues of law and of fact (N. L. R. B. v. Hearst Publications, Inc. (322 U. S. 111; N. L. R. B. v. Packard Motor Co., decided March 10, 1947)), or when they rested only on inferences that were not, in turn, supported by facts in the record (Republic Aviation v. N. L. R. B. (324 U. S. 793); La Tourneau Company v. N. L. R. B. (324 U. S. 793)).

As previously stated in the discussion of amendments to section 9 (b) and section 9 (c), by reason of the new language concerning the rules of evidence and the preponderance of the evidence, presumed expertness on the part of the Board in its field can no longer be a factor in the Board's decisions. While the Administrative Procedure Act is generally regarded as having intended to require the courts to examine decisions of administrative agencies far more critically than has been their practice in the past, by reason of a conflict of opinion as to whether it actually does so, a conflict that the courts have not resolved, there was included, both in the House bill and the Senate amendment, language making it clear that the Act gives to the courts a real power of review.

The House bill, in section 10 (e), provided that the Board's findings of fact should be conclusive unless it appeared to the reviewing court (1) that the findings were against the manifest weight of the evidence, or (2) that they were not supported by substantial evidence.

The Senate amendment provided that the Board's findings with respect to questions of fact should be conclusive if supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole. The provisions of section 10 (b) of the conference agreement insure the Board's receiving only legal evidence, and section 10 (c) insures its deciding in accordance with the preponderance of the evidence. These two statutory requirements in and of themselves give rise to questions of law which the courts will hereafter be called upon to determine—whether the requirements have been met. This, in conjunction with the language of the Senate amendment with respect to the Board's findings of fact—language which the conference agreement adopts—will very materially broaden the scope of the courts' reviewing power. This is not to say that the courts will be required to decide any case de novo, themselves weighing the evidence, but they will be under a duty to see that the Board observes the provisions of the earlier sections, that it does not infer facts that are not supported by evidence or that are not consistent with evidence in the record, and that it does not concentrate on one element of proof to the exclusion of others without adequate explanation of its reasons for disregarding or discrediting the evidence that is in conflict with its findings. The language also precludes the substitution of expertness for evidence in making decisions. It is believed that the provisions of the conference agreement relating to the court's reviewing power will be adequate to preclude such decisions as those in N. L. R. B. v. Nevada Consol. Copper Corp. (316 U. S. 105), and in the Wilson, Columbia Products, Union Pacific States, Hearst, Republic Aviation, and Le Tourneau, etc., cases, supra, without unduly burdening the courts. The conference agreement therefore carries the language of the Senate amendment into section 10 (e) of the amended Act.

(15) The House bill in section 10 (f) of the amended Labor Act made it possible for employees and labor organizations, as well as employers, to obtain court review of certifications by the Board of exclusive bargaining representatives, and enabled employers to obtain such review without going through an unfair practice case under section 8 (5). The Senate amendment did not contain any corresponding provision. The conference agreement omits this provision of the House bill.

(16) The conference agreement makes the same change in section 10 (f) concerning the conclusiveness of the Board's findings as is made in section 10 (e).

(17) Sections 10 (g), (h), and (i) of the present Act, concerning the effect upon the Board's orders of enforcement and review proceedings, making inapplicable the provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act in proceedings before the courts, were unchanged either by the House bill or by the Senate amendment, and are carried into the conference agreement.

(18) The Senate amendment, in a new section 10 (j), gave to the Board general power, upon issuing a complaint alleging an unfair labor practice, to petition the appropriate district court for temporary relief or restraining order, and gave the courts jurisdiction to grant such relief or restraining order. The House bill contained no comparable provision. The conference agreement adopts this provision of the Senate amendment.

(19) The Senate amendment also contained a new section 10 (k), which had no counterpart in the House bill. This section would empower and direct the Board to hear and determine disputes between unions giving rise to unfair labor practices under section 8 (b) (4) (D) (jurisdictional strikes). The conference agreement contains this provision of the Senate amendment, amended to omit the authority to appoint an arbitrator. If the employer's employees select as their bargaining agent the organization that the Board determines has jurisdiction, and if the Board certifies that union, the employer will, of course, be under the statutory duty to bargain with it.

(20) Section 10 (l) of the Senate amendment directed the Board to investigate forthwith any charge of unfair labor practice within the meaning of paragraph (4) (A), (B), or (C) of section 8 (b) of the conference agreement, which deals with certain boycotts and with certain strikes to force recognition of uncertified labor organizations and which has been discussed in connection with that section of the conference agreement. It directed the representative of the Board who makes the investigation, if he found that a complaint should issue, to petition the appropriate district court of the United States for injunctive relief pending the final adjudication of the Board with respect to such matter, and gave the courts jurisdiction to enjoin the practices complained of. The Senate amendment provided that a similar procedure, when appropriate, should apply to charges under section 8 (b) (4) (D) of the conference agreement. As stated above, the House bill, in section 12, provided for injunctions at the request of private persons, rather than by the Board, in cases like these. The conference agreement adopts the procedure of the Senate amendment. The power of the Board under this provision will not affect the availability to private persons of any other remedies they might have in respect of such activities.

INVESTIGATORY POWERS

Section 11 of the existing National Labor Relations Act contains provisions authorizing the Board to conduct hearings and investigations and to subpoena witnesses. Also, it provides for enforcement of subpoenas and provides for the manner in which complaints, orders and other processes of the Board shall be served.

The Senate amendment, in section 11, made no change in the provisions of existing law. The House bill, in section 11, made several changes in addition to those made necessary by the division of functions under the House bill between the Board on the one hand and the Administrator on the other. First, the subpoena power in connection with investigations was limited to investigations under section 9. Second, it was required that upon application of any party, subpoenas be issued to him as a matter of course, and a procedure was established whereby a person subpoenaed could move to quash the subpoena if the evidence covered thereby did not relate to any matter under investigation or in question or if it did not describe with sufficient particularity the evidence whose production was required. Third, a provision in existing law under which the several Departments and agencies of the Government are required to furnish to the Board, when directed by the President, records, papers, and information in their possession relating to any matter before the Board was omitted.

The conference agreement follows the provisions of existing law and the Senate amendment with the addition thereto of provisions requiring the issuance of subpoenas as a matter of course on the request of any party, as was provided in the House bill.

The Senate amendment did not make any change in section 12 of the existing National Labor Relations Act making it unlawful to impede any member of the Board or any of its agents in the performance of their duties under the Act. This provision of existing law was omitted from the House bill. The conference agreement contains this provision of existing law.

UNLAWFUL CONCERTED ACTIVITIES

The House bill, in a new section 12 of the National Labor Relations Act, set forth certain activities which were treated as unlawful. Persons engaging in them were made subject to civil suit for damages on the part of persons injured thereby. It was provided that the Norris-LaGuardia Act should be inapplicable in respect of any action or proceeding involving any such activity, and any person who was found to have engaged in any such activity was to be subject to deprivation of rights under the Act to the same extent as a person under the House bill found to have engaged in an unfair labor practice under section 8 (b) or 8 (c)

The activities which were treated as unlawful under this section were:

(1) By use of force or violence or threats thereof, preventing or attempting to prevent individuals from quitting or continuing their employment or from accepting or refusing employment; or by the use of force, violence, physical obstruction, or threats thereof, preventing or attempting to prevent any individual from entering or leaving an employer's premises; or picketing an employer's premises in numbers or in a manner otherwise than should be reasonably necessary to give notice of the existence of a labor dispute; or picketing or besetting the home of any individual in connection with a labor dispute.

(2) Picketing an employer's premises where the employer was not involved in a labor dispute with his employees.

(3) Authorizing, participating in, or assisting any sympathy strike, jurisdictional strike, monopolistic strike, sit-down strike, or illegal boycott, or any strike to compel an employer to accede to featherbedding practices, or any strike having as an objective compelling an employer to recognize for collective bargaining an uncertified representative or having as an objective the remedying of practices for which an administrative remedy was provided by the Act, or having as an objective compelling an employer to violate any law.

(4) Any conspiracy or common arrangements between competing employers to fix or agree to terms or propose terms of employment where the employees of such competing employers were not permitted under the bill to designate a common representative.

Many of the matters covered in section 12 of the House bill are also covered in the conference agreement in different form, as has been pointed out above in the discussion of section 7 and section 8 (b) (1) of the conference agreement. Under existing principles of law developed by the courts and recently applied by the Board, employees who engage in violence, mass picketing, unfair labor practices, contract violations, or other improper conduct, or who force the employer to violate the law, do not have any immunity under the Act and are subject to discharge without right of reinstatement. The right of the employer to discharge an employee for any such reason is protected in specific terms in section 10 (c). Furthermore, under section 10 (k) of the conference agreement, the Board is given authority to apply to the district courts for temporary injunctions restraining alleged unfair labor practices temporarily pending the decision of the Board on the merits.

The provisions of section 12 treating "monopolistic strikes" as an unlawful concerted activity involved the matter of industry-wide bargaining, and this subject matter has been omitted from the conference agreement.

LIMITATIONS

Section 13 of the existing National Labor Relations Act provides that nothing in the Act is to be construed so as to either interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike. Under the House bill, in section 12 (e), a provision was included to the effect that except as specifically provided in section 12 nothing in the Act should be so construed. Under the Senate amendment, in section 13, section 13 of the existing law was rewritten so as to provide that except as specifically provided for in the Act, nothing was to be construed so as either to interfere with or impede or diminish in any way the right to strike. The Senate amendment also added one other important provision to this section, providing that nothing in the Act was to affect the limitations or qualifications on the right to strike, thus recognizing that the right to strike is not an unlimited and unqualified right. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Section 14 of the Senate amendment contained a provision to the effect that nothing in the Act was to be construed so as to prohibit supervisors from becoming or remaining members of labor organizations, but that employers should not be compelled to consider individuals defined as supervisors as employees for the purposes of any law, either national or local, relating to collective bargaining. There was nothing in the Senate amendment which would have the effect of prohibiting supervisors from becoming members of a labor organization, and the first part of this provision was included presumably out of an abundance of caution. The House bill had a similar policy on the power of State agencies, as was explained in the House Committee report in the discussion of section 10 (a). The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Under the House bill there was included a new section 13 of the National Labor Relations Act to assure that nothing in the Act was to be construed as authorizing any closed shop, union shop, maintenance of membership, or other form of compulsory unionism agreement in any State where the execution of such agreement would be contrary to State law. Many States have enacted laws or adopted constitutional provisions to make all forms of compulsory unionism in those States illegal. It was never the intention of the National Labor Relations Act, as is disclosed by the legislative history of that Act, to preempt the field in this regard so as to deprive the States of their powers to prevent compulsory unionism. Neither the so-called "closed shop" proviso in section 8 (3) of the existing Act nor the union shop and maintenance of membership proviso in section 8 (a) (3) of the conference agreement could be said to authorize arrangements of this sort in States where such arrangements were contrary to the State policy. To make certain that there should be no question about this, section 13 was included in the House bill. The conference agreement, in section 14 (b), contains a provision having the same effect.

Under the Senate amendment section 15 of the existing law, which relates to the relationship between the National Labor Relations Act and the reorganization provisions of the Bankruptcy Act, was rewritten to bring it up to date, the Bankruptcy Act having been amended in material respects since the original enactment of the National Labor Relations Act. This provision was not contained in the House bill. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment.

Sections 14 and 15 of the House bill on the one hand and sections 16 and 17 of the Senate amendment on the other were the same as sections 16 and 17 of the existing law. These provisions are included in the conference agreement as sections 16 and 17.

EFFECTIVE DATE

Section 102 of the House bill contained provisions designed to facilitate the change-over from the old act to the amended act. This section of the House bill also abolished the existing National Labor Relations Board, but the treatment of this provision in the House bill by the conference agreement has already been discussed.

The amended act was not to take effect until 30 days after the date upon which a majority of the members of the proposed new Board qualified and took office, or 90 days after the date of the bill's enactment, whichever occurred first. After the effective date proceedings under the old act were to continue under the amended act only if they could have been maintained if initiated under the amended act, and a similar policy was described with respect to proceedings to enforce orders of the old Board.

Provision was also made for the effect of the amended act upon existing "closed shop" and other compulsory unionism agreements, and for the effect of the amended Act upon existing certifications. These matters are discussed below in connection with the discussion of sections 102 and 103 of the Senate amendment.

The Senate amendment did not contain any postponed effective date—that is to say, the amended act was to become effective upon the bill's enactment. Section 102 of the Senate amendment provided that the amended act was not to be construed as making an unfair labor practice any act performed prior to the date of the bill's enactment which did not constitute an unfair labor practice prior thereto. It further provided that the new section 8 (a) (3) (containing the union shop proviso in place of the "closed shop" proviso of existing law) should not make an unfair labor practice the performance of any obligation entered into prior to the date of the bill's enactment unless the agreement was renewed or extended subsequent thereto.

Section 103 of the Senate amendment provided that the amended act should not affect any certification of representatives or determination as to appropriate collective bargaining units made under existing law until one year after the date of certification or (if in respect of the certification a collective bargaining contract was entered into prior to the bill's enactment) until the end of the contract period or until one year after the date of enactment, whichever first occurred.

The conference agreement, in section 104, provides that the amendments made to the National Labor Relations Act shall take effect 60 days after the date of the bill's enactment, but authority is given to the President to appoint the two additional members of the Board and to appoint the General Counsel of the Board within this 60-day period.

Section 102 of the conference agreement provides that the amended act shall not be deemed to make an unfair labor practice any act which was performed prior to the date of the bill's enactment which did not constitute an unfair labor practice prior thereto. In the case of sections 8 (a) (3) and 8 (b) (2) of the amended act, it is specifically provided that the performance of any obligation under a collective bargaining agreement entered into prior to the date of the bill's enactment, or (in case of an agreement for a period of not more than one year) entered into on or after such date of enactment but prior to the effective date, shall not constitute an unfair labor practice unless the agreement was renewed or extended subsequent thereto.

Section 103 of the conference agreement, relating to the effect of the amendments upon existing certifications, is the same (with clarifying changes) as section 103 of the Senate amendment.

TITLE II—CONCILIATION OF LABOR DISPUTES IN INDUSTRIES AFFECTING COMMERCE; NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

Title II of both the House bill and the Senate amendment contained provisions creating a new independent conciliation service, and also provisions for the treatment of strikes affecting the national health or safety. Under the House bill the new service was to be known as the Office of Conciliation. Under the Senate amendment it was to be known as the Federal Mediation Service. Both bills provided for a Director to be the head of the new service, to be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and to receive compensation at the rate of $12,000 per annum. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment transferred all of the existing functions of the United States Conciliation Service in the Department of Labor to the new independent agency created.

Since the conference agreement in general follows the provisions of the Senate amendment with respect to this service, the Senate amendment in this regard will be described, with changes therefrom made by the conference agreement noted. Section 201 of the Senate amendment contained a statement of policy which also appears unchanged in the conference agreement.

Section 202 of the Senate amendment created an independent agency to be known as the Federal Mediation Service and to be operated by a single official, called the Director, to be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate. The functions of the existing Conciliation Service were transferred to the Director, the transfer to take effect upon the sixtieth day after the date of the bill's enactment. The only change made by the conference agreement in this section of the Senate amendment is in the name of the new service. Under the conference agreement the new service is to be known as the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service.

Section 203 of the Senate amendment described the functions of the new service and emphasized the duty of the Service to interfere only where a dispute threatened to cause a substantial interruption of interstate commerce. It provided that if the parties could not be brought to direct settlement by conciliation or mediation the Service was authorized to seek to induce the parties to submit the dispute to voluntary arbitration. Provision was made for the payment by the United States of not to exceed $500 as a contribution to the cost of an arbitration proceeding. The conference agreement, in section 203, does not mention arbitration as such but provides that if the parties cannot be brought to settlement by conciliation and mediation the Service shall seek to induce them voluntarily to seek other means of settling the dispute without resort to strike, lockout, or other coercion. The failure or refusal of either party to agree to any procedure suggested by the Director is not to be deemed a violation of any duty or obligation imposed, and the conference agreement omits the provision contained in the Senate amendment relating to the contribution by the United States to defray the costs of arbitration proceedings.

One important duty of the Director which was not included in the Senate amendment is included in the conference agreement and is derived from the provisions of the House bill providing for a secret ballot by employees upon their employer's last offer of settlement before resorting to strike. Under the conference agreement it is the duty of the Director, if he is not able to bring the parties to agreement by conciliation within a reasonable time, to seek to induce them to seek other means of settling the dispute, including submission to the employees in the bargaining unit of the employer's last offer of settlement for refusal or for approval or rejection in a secret ballot. While the vote on the employer's last offer by secret ballot is not compulsory as it was in the House bill, it is expected that this procedure will be extensively used and that it will have the effect of preventing many strikes which might otherwise take place.

Section 204 of the Senate amendment stated that it should be the duty of employers and employees, and their representatives, to exert every reasonable effort to settle their differences by collective bargaining, and if this should fail, to utilize the assistance of the Mediation Service. This provision is also included in section 204 of the conference agreement but there has been omitted therefrom language which appeared in the Senate amendment which indicated that the parties were under a duty to submit grievance disputes to arbitration.

Section 205 of the Senate amendment created an advisory committee for the new Service composed of management and labor representatives. This group was called "The National Labor-Management Panel". The panel was to be composed of 12 members, all appointed by the President, and it was made their duty, at the request of the Director, to advise in the avoidance of industrial controversies in the manner in which mediation and voluntary arbitration should be administered. Section 205 of the conference agreement follows the provisions of the Senate amendment, except that specific reference to "voluntary arbitration" is omitted.

NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

Sections 203 to 206, inclusive, of the House bill gave the President, through the district courts of the United States, power to deal with strikes that resulted in or imminently threatened to result in the cessation or substantial curtailment of interstate or foreign commerce in essential public services. Provision was made for mediation of the dispute after the injunction had issued, and for a secret ballot of the employees on their employer's last offer of settlement if mediation did not result in an agreement. If the employer's last offer was rejected by the employees, provision was made for the convening by the Chief Justice of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia of a special advisory settlement board to investigate the dispute and to make recommendations for its settlement. Another secret ballot by the employees was provided on the question whether they desired to accept the recommended settlement. At the conclusion of the proceedings provided for the Attorney General was directed to move the court to discharge the injunction and the injunction was to be discharged. These provisions were not to apply to any person or dispute subject to the Railway Labor Act.

Sections 206 to 210, inclusive, of the Senate amendment contained provisions dealing with this same problem. The Senate amendment was limited in its application to threatened or actual strikes or lockouts affecting an entire industry engaged in trade, commerce, transportation, transmission, or communications among the several States, and the power to invoke these emergency provisions was lodged in the Attorney General rather than in the President. The conference agreement in general follows the provisions of the Senate amendment, with changes therein which will be hereafter noted.

Section 206 of the Senate amendment authorized the Attorney General, whenever he deemed that a threatened or actual strike or lockout affecting an entire industry would imperil the national health or safety, to appoint a board of inquiry to inquire into the issues involved in the dispute. The board of inquiry was directed to investigate the matter and make a report to the Attorney General. The report was to include a statement of facts and a statement of the respective positions of the parties, but was not to contain any recommendations. Under section 206 of the conference agreement the authority is lodged in the President rather than in the Attorney General, and the report which the board of inquiry is to make is to include each party's statement of his own position. Like the provisions of the Senate amendment, the report of the board of inquiry cannot contain any recommendations. Furthermore, under the conference agreement the authority of this section may be invoked not alone when an entire industry is involved but where a substantial part of an entire industry is involved.

Section 207 of the Senate amendment provided for the composition of the board of inquiry, their compensation, and their powers to compel testimony. This section appears unchanged as section 207 of the conference agreement.

Section 208 of the Senate amendment authorized the Attorney General upon receiving the report of the Board of inquiry to apply to the appropriate district court for an injunction enjoining the strike or lockout, and the court was authorized to issue the injunction if it found that the strike or lockout affected the entire industry and would imperil the national health or safety. The Norris-LaGuardia Act was made inapplicable. Section 208 of the conference agreement follows the provisions of the Senate amendment except that, as heretofore stated, the authority is lodged in the President rather than in the Attorney General, and the injunction can issue if the strike or lockout affects an entire industry or a substantial part thereof.

Section 209 of the Senate amendment provided that after the district court had issued an injunction, it should be the duty of the parties to make every effort to adjust and settle their differences with the assistance of the new Federal Mediation Service. Neither party was to be under any duty to accept, either in whole or in part, and proposal of settlement made by the Service. Furthermore, after an injunction had issued, the Attorney General was directed to reconvene the board of inquiry. At the end of a sixty-day period (unless the dispute had been settled in the meantime) the board of inquiry was directed to report to the President the current position of the parties and the efforts which had been made for settlement. Such report was to be made public. Within the succeeding 15 days a secret ballot was to be taken of the employees of each employer involved in the dispute on the question of whether they desired to accept the final offer of settlement made by their employer. The conference agreement, in section 209, follows the provisions of the Senate amendment, with the authority lodged in the President rather than the Attorney General, and with the requirement that the board of inquiry include in its report a statement by each party of his own position. It is provided in the conference agreement that the employees vote on the employer's offer as stated by him.

Section 210 of the Senate amendment provided that upon certification of the results of the balloting under section 209 the injunction was to be discharged, and a full and comprehensive report of the whole matter was to be made to Congress. This provision is also included in the conference agreement, with only textual changes to conform this section to the policy of lodging the authority in the President rather than the Attorney General.

Section 211 of the Senate amendment contained a provision requiring the Bureau of Labor Statistics to maintain a file containing copies of collective agreements and arbitration awards which would be made available to the public unless involving information received in confidence. There was no comparable provision in the House bill. The conference agreement contains the provisions of the Senate amendment with minor clarifying changes.

Section 212 of the Senate amendment contained a provision stating that title II was not to be applicable with respect to any matter which is subject to the provisions of the Railway Labor Act. As previously noted, a similar provision, more restricted in scope, was contained in section 205 of the House bill. The conference agreement adopts the provision of the Senate amendment.

TITLE III

Section 301 of the House bill contained a provision amending the Clayton Act so as to withdraw the exemption of labor organizations under the Anti-Trust laws when such organizations engaged in combinations or conspiracies in restraint of commerce where one of the purposes or a necessary effect of the combination or conspiracy was to join or combine with any person to fix prices, allocate costs, restrict production, distribution, or competition, or impose restrictions or conditions, upon the purchase, sale, or use of any product, material, machine or equipment, or to engage in any unlawful concerted activity (as defined in section 12 of the National Labor Relations Act under the House bill). Since the matters dealt with in this section have to a large measure been effectuated through the use of boycotts, and since the conference agreement contains effective provisions directly dealing with boycotts themselves, this provision is omitted from the conference agreement.

SUITS BY AND AGAINST LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Section 302 of the House bill and section 301 of the Senate amendment contained provisions relating to suits by and against labor organizations in the courts of the United States. The conference agreement follows in general the provisions of the House bill with changes therein hereafter noted.

Section 302 (a) of the House bill provided that any action for or proceeding involving a violation of a contract between an employer and a labor organization might be brought by either party in any district court of the United States having jurisdiction of the parties, without regard to the amount in controversy, if such contract affected commerce, or the court otherwise had jurisdiction. Under the Senate amendment the jurisdictional test was whether the employer was in an industry affecting commerce or whether the labor organization represented employees in such an industry. This test contained in the Senate amendment is also contained in the conference agreement, rather than the test in the House bill which required that the "contract affect commerce."

Section 302 (b) of the House bill provided that any labor organization whose activities affected commerce should be bound by the acts of its agents and might sue or be sued as an entity in the courts of the United States. Any money judgment in such a suit was to be enforceable only against the organization as an entity and against its assets and not against any individual member or his assets. The conference agreement follows these provisions of the House bill except that this subsection is made applicable to labor organizations which represent employees in an industry affecting commerce and to employers whose activities affect commerce, as later defined. It is further provided that both the employer and the labor organization are to be bound by the acts of their agents. This subsection and the succeeding subsections of section 301 of the conference agreement (as was the case in the House bill and also in the Senate amendment) are general in their application, as distinguished from subsection (a).

Section 302 (c) of the House bill contained provisions describing the value of suits to which labor organizations were parties and section 302 (d) provided for the manner of service of process upon labor organizations. These provisions of the House bill appear unchanged as section 301 (c) and (d) of the conference agreement.

Section 302 (e) of the House bill made the Norris-LaGuardia Act inapplicable in actions and proceedings involving violations of agreements between an employer and a labor organization. Only part of this provision is included in the conference agreement. Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act provides that no employer or labor organization participating or interested in a labor dispute shall be held responsible for the unlawful acts of their agents except upon clear proof of actual authorization of such acts, or ratification of such acts after actual knowledge thereof. This provision in the Norris-LaGuardia Act was made inapplicable under the House bill. Section 301 (e) of the conference agreement provides that for the purposes of section 301 in determining whether any person is acting as an agent of another so as to make such other person responsible for his actions, the question of whether the specific acts performed were actually authorized or subsequently ratified shall not be controlling.

RESTRICTIONS ON PAYMENTS TO EMPLOYEE REPRESENTATIVES

Section 302 of the Senate amendment contained a provision making it unlawful for any employer to pay any money or thing of value to any representative of his employees employed in an industry affecting commerce, or for any such representative to accept from the employer any money or other thing of value, with certain specified exceptions. The two most important exceptions are (1) those relating to payments to a representative of money deducted from the wages of employees in payment of membership dues in a labor organization if the employer has received from each employee on whose account the deductions are made a written assignment not irrevocable for a period of more than one year or beyond the termination date of the applicable collective agreement, and (2) money paid to a trust fund established by the representative for the sole and exclusive benefit of the employees of such employer and their families and dependents (or of such employees, families, and dependents jointly with the employees of other employers making similar payments, and their families and dependents). Such a trust fund had to meet certain requirements. Among these requirements were that the fund be held for the purpose of paying for medical or hospital care, pensions on retirement or death, compensation for injuries or illness resulting from occupational activity, or insurance to provide any of the foregoing, or life insurance, disability and sickness insurance, or accident insurance. Furthermore, the detailed basis on which the payments were to be made had to be specified in a written agreement with the employer and the employees and employers had to be equally represented in the administration of the fund. Provision was made for the breaking of deadlocks on the administration of the fund, and the agreement covering the fund had to contain provisions for annual audit, and a statement of the results of the audit were to be made available for inspection by interested persons.

Violations of this section of the Senate amendment were made punishable by a fine of not more than $10,000 or by imprisonment for not more than one year, or both.

Saving provisions were included to protect existing contracts between employers and employees.

The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with minor clarifying changes.

BOYCOTTS AND OTHER UNLAWFUL COMBINATIONS

Section 303 of the Senate amendment contained a provision the effect of which was to give persons injured by boycotts and jurisdictional disputes described in the new section 8 (b) (4) of the National Labor Relations Act a right to sue the labor organization responsible therefor in any district court of the United States (subject to the limitations and provisions of the section dealing with suits by and against labor organizations) to recover damages sustained by him together with the costs of the suit. A comparable provision was contained in the House bill in the new section 12 of the National Labor Relations Act dealing with unlawful concerted activities. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment with clarifying changes.

RESTRICTIONS ON POLITICAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Section 304 of the House bill contained a provision placing on a permanent basis the provisions which were contained in the War Labor disputes Act whereby labor organizations were prohibited from making political contributions to the same extent as corporations. In addition, this section extended the prohibition, both in the case of corporations and labor organizations, to include expenditures as well as contributions. Moreover, expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections and political conventions were made unlawful to the same extent as those made in connection with the elections themselves. There was no comparable provision in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the House bill, with one change. Under the conference agreement expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections, political conventions, and caucuses are made unlawful to the same extent as those made in connection with the elections themselves. As a clarifying change the definition of a labor organization has been set forth in full rather than incorporating the provision of the National Labor Relations Act.

STRIKES BY GOVERNMENT EMPLOYEES

Section 207 of the House bill made it unlawful for any employee of the United States to strike against the Government. Violations of this section were to be punishable by immediate discharge, forfeiture of all rights of reemployment, forfeiture of civil service status, and forfeiture of all benefits which the individual had acquired by virtue of his Government employment. The conference agreement, in section 305, makes it unlawful for any individual employed by the United States or any agency thereof (including wholly owned Government corporations) to participate in any strike against the Government. Violations are to be punishable by immediate discharge and forfeiture of civil service status, if any, and the individual is not to be eligible for employment by the United States for three years.

TITLE IV—CREATION OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND REPORT ON BASIC PROBLEMS AFFECTING FRIENDLY LABOR RELATIONS AND PRODUCTIVITY

Title IV of the Senate amendment created a joint Congressional committee consisting of seven members of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare to be appointed by the President pro tempore of the Senate, and seven members of the House of Representatives Committee on Education and Labor to be appointed by the Speaker. The committee was directed to conduct a survey of the entire field of labor-management relations with particular emphasis upon particular described subjects. The committee was to make a report not later than February 15, 1948, containing the results of the studies together with its recommendations as to necessary legislation and such other recommendations as it might deem advisable. Authority was granted to hire technical and clerical personnel and to request details of personnel from Federal and State agencies. The committee was granted subpoena power and authority to conduct hearings whether or not Congress was in session. An appropriation of $150,000 was authorized to enable the committee to perform its functions.

Title IV of the conference agreement adopts the above provisions of the Senate amendment with one change. The committee is directed to make its final report not later than January 2, 1949.

TITLE V

Section 501 of the Senate amendment contained definitions of terms used in titles II, III, and IV It should be noted that none of the terms defined, however, have any application to the amendment to section 313 of the Federal Corrupt Practices Act since section 313 of the Corrupt Practices Act is not a part of "this Act"

Section 502 of the Senate amendment contained a provision that nothing was to be construed to require an individual employee to render labor or service without his consent, or to make the quitting of his labor by an individual employee an illegal act. It was further provided that the quitting of labor by an employee or employees in good faith because of abnormally dangerous conditions for work at their place of employment should not be deemed a strike under the Act.

Section 503 of the Senate amendment contained the usual separability provision.

Sections 501, 502, and 503 of the Senate amendment are contained in the conference agreement with the same section numbers.

Mr. HOFFMAN (interrupting reading of conference report). Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have a point of order to make against the report, and I want to be recognized for that at the proper time.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will make it after the report has been read.

The Clerk continued reading the conference report.

Mr. HARTLEY (interrupting reading of conference report). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the report be dispensed with and that the statement of the managers be read in lieu of the report.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have no objection to dispensing with the reading of the report, but I do not want to consent to the reading of the statement because if I did I would waive my point of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman's rights will be fully protected.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. Mr. Speaker, not having had access to this report until this morning, I think the House should hear it. Therefore I am constrained to object.

The Clerk continued the reading of the conference report.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the further reading of the report be dispensed with.

Mr. MARCANTONIO. I am constrained to object, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the adoption of the conference report.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I make a point of order against the conference report.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, the report is not in order for the following reasons:

Only those matters which were in disagreement between the two Houses were before the conferees and the conferees have changed the text heretofore agreed to by both Houses; and

The report inserts additional matter which, even though germane, the conferees had no authority to insert.

In H. R. 3020—print of April 18, page 33—and in H. R. 3020—in the Senate of the United States, May 13 print, page 33—the language reads as follows:

SEC. 9 (f) (6). No labor organization shall be certified as the representative of the employees if one or more of its national or international officers, or one or more of the officers of the organization designated on the ballot taken under subsection (d), is or ever has been a member of the Communist Party or by reason of active and consistent promotion or support of the policies, teachings, and doctrines of the Communist Party can reasonably be regarded as being a member of or affiliated with such party, or believes in, or is or ever has been a member of or supports any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods.

In the bill as it passed the Senate, section 9 (h) of H. R. 3020, Senate print of May 13, the language, page 93, is as follows:

SEC. 9 (h). No labor organization shall be certified as the representative of the employees if one or more of its national or international officers, or one or more of the officers of the organization designated on the ballot taken under subsection (c), is a member of the Communist Party or by reason of active and consistent promotion or support of the policies and doctrines of the Communist Party can reasonably be regarded as being a member of or affiliated with such party, or believes in, or is a member of or supports any organization that believes in or teaches, the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods.

It will be noted that the only difference between the language in the House and the Senate bills is that in the Senate version there is omitted after the word "is", in line 7, and the word "is", in line 11, the words "or ever has been", which are contained in the House bill; and that, in the Senate bill, the word "teachings", which is in the House bill, has been omitted after the word "policies" at the end of line 8 of paragraph (h).

This section, which is section 9, entitled "Representatives and Elections", deals with the designation of certification of representatives for collective bargaining.

Section 9 (a) of H. R. 3020, conference committee print, May 30, beginning page 22, deals with the same general subject, "Representatives and Elections." It contains no provision whatever similar to the above-quoted provisions from the Senate and House bills dealing with the subject of certification as representatives of the employees and calls for no certificate similar to that described in the provisions of either bill, but it adds an entirely new requirement—section 9 (h), page 30, conference print—which denies an investigation of a complaint unless there is on file with the Board an affidavit stating certain facts.

The language of this section is as follows—page 30:

SEC. 9 (h). No investigation shall be made by the Board of any question affecting commerce concerning the representation of employees, raised by a labor organization under subsection (c) of this section, no petition under section 9 (e) (1) shall be entertained, and no cofnplaint shall be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under subsection (b) of section 10, unless there is on file with the Board an affidavit executed contemporaneously or within the preceding 12-month period by each officer of such labor organization and the officers of any national or international labor organization of which it is an affiliate or constituent unit that he is not a member of the Communist Party or affiliated with such party, and that he does not believe in, and is not a member of, or supports any organization that believes in or teaches the overthrow of the United States Government by force or by any illegal or unconstitutional methods. The provisions of section 35 A of the Criminal Code shall be applicable in respect to such affidavits.

The language of the Senate and the House bills dealing with the certification of a labor organization as a representative of the employees being practically identical, the conferees had no authority to impose a similar requirement as a condition precedent to an investigation by the Board.

The Senate and the House bills dealt with the certification of a union as a representative for the purpose of collective bargaining, while the conference report deals with an entirely different subject, that is, an investigation of a complaint and the authority to entertain a complaint.

The power conferred upon the Board to investigate complaints is contained in section 10 of H. R. 3020—Senate print of May 13, page 36 and subsequent pages.

The same power is conferred upon the Board by section 10 (b) of the Senate bill—page 94 of the May 13 print.

But neither section 10 of the House bill nor section 10 of the Senate bill, nor any other section of either bill, contains any limitation upon the investigatory power of the Board which requires the filing of the affidavit called for by section 9 (h) of the conference report.

The conferees have no authority to add this new additional restriction upon the powers of the Board, neither Senate nor House having imposed any such restriction upon the Board's power to investigate complaints as to unfair labor practice.

If it be argued that the provisions of the two bills with reference to the certification of a labor organization as the collective bargaining representative are not technically identical, it is still true that this second objection is good for the reason that the conferees have added new matter to the bill, which was never given consideration by either House, as a restriction upon the power of the Board to make investigations of unfair labor complaints and to issue complaints.

While it is true that—in the conference report—section 9 (h) is carried under the subtitle of "Representatives and Elections," the paragraph itself and the language in it contain these additional requirements, and I quote beginning in line 6, page 30:

> No petition under section 9 (e) (1) (and this is a petition for a closed shop—page 26) shall be entertained, and no complaint shall be issued pursuant to a charge made by a labor organization under subsection (b) of section 10, unless there is on file with the Board an affidavit—

Setting forth certain facts.

Now, subsection (b) of section 10 is under the subtitle "Prevention of Unfair Labor Practices," and the procedure found in section (b) of section 10 has to do solely with charges of unfair labor practice.

There is in neither Senate—section 10, page 94, H. R. 3020, Senate print of May 13—nor House bill—section 10, page 36, H. R. 3020, May 13 print—any language limiting the power of the Board to either entertain a charge or issue a complaint similar to the limitation contained in section 9 (h).

It necessarily follows that, if the conferees were conferring on the House and Senate bills, they exceeded their power in adding this restriction to the power of the Board when neither House considered, debated or passed upon that restriction.

If the Speaker holds that the conferees were not considering the House bill—had under consideration only the Senate bill—then under the rules of the House I concede the conferees had authority to write a new bill.

The SPEAKER. Does anyone desire to rise in opposition to the point of order?

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the point of order.

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to make one more statement?

Mr. MICHENER. Certainly, I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. HOFFMAN. I want to add that this point of order is made not only in good faith but also for the purpose of bringing to the attention of the Members of the House, if the ruling is adverse, that they are not considering the Hartley bill which was adopted by the House by a vote of 308 to 107 but they are considering an entirely new bill that was written in conference by seven men—three from the House and four from the other body.

Mr. MICHENER. Mr. Speaker, in the case before us the House passed the Hartley bill, H. R. 3020. The Senate amended the Hartley bill by striking out everything after the enacting clause and inserting a new bill which was in fact a substitute for the House bill. The House bill was generally referred to as the Hartley bill and the Senate substitute as the Taft bill. The Senate sent the amended Hartley bill back to the House and requested the concurrence of the House in the Senate amendment. The House refused to agree to the Senate amendment, and the Hartley bill, as amended by the Senate, went to conference. The conferees accepted neither the House bill nor the Senate substitute, but in fact wrote a new bill, which is embodied in the conference report against which the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] has made a point of order.

My colleague from Michigan insists that the conferees have exceeded their authority; that they had no power to write a new bill, and that in addition they have inserted language not found in either the House bill or the Senate bill.

I am sure the Speaker realizes that my colleague from Michigan has not raised a new question and that there are numerous precedents and rulings made by Speakers down through the years covering this very point. The House was not advised that this point of order was to be made, and I have had no opportunity to make a careful research of the precedents. I do hold in my hand, however, Cannon's Procedure in the House of Representatives where the authorities and precedents are collated. I shall not read the long list of precedents but call the Speaker's attention to the last paragraph on page 128 of Cannon's Procedure which reads as follows:

> Where one House strikes out of the bill of the other, all after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, conferees may discard language occurring both in the bill and the substitute (VIII, 3266), and exercise a wide discretion in the incorporation of germane (VII, 3263-3265) amendments and may even report a new bill germane to the subject (V, 6421, 6423, 6424; VIII, 3248).

Mr. Speaker, it is clear that the conferees had a perfect right to write a new bill, which in reality is a substitute for the House bill and the Senate substitute. The only limitation under the above decision placed upon the conferees is that they may not insert any material in the conference report or the conference bill which is not germane to the subject. A reading of the conference report is conclusive proof that nothing has been injected in the conference report that is not germane to the subject covered in the Hartley bill and in the Taft substitute. If this conclusion is correct, and I believe it is, then the Speaker, following precedent, must overrule the point of order.

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, in opposition to the point of order raised by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] I would like to point out that in the Hartley bill, H. R. 3020, as adopted by the House of Representatives there was a provision seeking to deal with the matter of Communist-dominated unions. There was a similar provision in the Senate bill, that is, similar in that it went to the same objective. However, even the language in those two provisions was not identical. If my memory serves me correctly, the Senate provision did not have what has come to be known as the Bell amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri, so there clearly was a difference in the language of those two particular sections as well, of course, as there is complete difference, as the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MICHENER] has so ably pointed out, in that the Senate struck out all after the enacting clause and substituted entirely new language.

So, I insist, Mr. Speaker, that the language as written in the conference report deals with the identically same subject matter. It seeks to deal with the matter of Communist domination and leadership in unions. Hence it is germane. There is no new matter added. There is no question involved as to taking out any language that was identical in both bills because, as I have pointed out, and as the gentleman from Michigan has pointed out, the language is not identical.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN] desire to be heard further?

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, I raise no question about the germaneness of the language put in by the conferees; that was not my point. The point was that they had added additional language to the bill which was in neither bill. But if, as I stated before, the conferees were considering and the House is now considering an entirely new bill written by the conferees, then I concede my point is not well taken. My purpose was to make it clear to the House and to the country that we are not passing the House bill. We will be voting upon something entirely different.

The SPEAKER. This is not a new point of order. It has been many times presented to the House and there are many decisions relative to what the gentleman from Michigan contends. The decisions on this question date back practically more than 100 years, and precedents have been established on several similar points of order. When either branch of Congress strikes out all after the enacting clause of a bill of the other there is unusually wide latitude permitted for the conferees to work on to secure a meeting of the minds between the two bodies. There is no question in the mind of the Chair but what there is no new matter worked here. It is all contained in one or the other of the two bills which were sent to conference.

In that connection the Chair wishes to read a previous decision which was made by the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN], former Speaker of the House, on March 27, 1945, when the mobilization of civilian manpower bill conference report was under consideration. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN] at that time when a similar point of order was raised stated:

> This is an old question. The Chair recalls that this question was originally passed upon by Mr. Speaker Henry Clay on the 23d of June 1812. It was passed upon, and the Chair has before him the specific question, by Mr. Speaker Colfax on March 3, 1865, in which Mr. Speaker Colfax held:
> "Where one House strikes out all of the bill of the other after the enacting clause and inserts a new text, and the differences over this substitute are referred to conference, the managers have a wide range of discretion in incorporating germane matters and may even report a new bill on the subject."
>
> Mr. Speaker Clark on June 12, 1917, held:
> "Where one House has amended the bill of the other House by striking out all after the enacting clause and substituting a new text, the conferees have the entire subject before them and may report any germane bill."
>
> The Chair might state that that decision was followed by Mr. Speaker Gillett in the early 1920's and by Mr. Speaker Longworth between 1925 and 1931.

The Chair is convinced the conferees have followed well-established precedents and therefore overrules the point of order.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, I do not believe that any committee of this House has had a more difficult job and a more difficult problem facing it than the House Committee on Education and Labor. It has been made difficult because I believe there have been more misstatements and more exaggerations stated in connection with the bill as it originally passed the House and as it has finally been agreed upon in conference than any bill that ever went through this body in the 19 years I have been a Member. Those of us who really want to see a bill enacted into law have been criticized very severely on both sides. We have been criticized by those who do not want any bill at all. They have called the bill drastic, and they have called it antilabor and have called its sponsors labor baiters. They have charged that it is going to wreck the labor movement. On the other hand there are those who either want no bill at all or who would really cripple the labor movement, who attack it on the other side. So I say to the Members of the House, I believe those of us who have made concessions and who have gotten a bill before you today that can be enacted into law have rendered a service to the Nation, we have rendered a service to labor, and we have rendered a service to the general public as well.

Entirely too much emphasis has been placed on the so-called concessions that the House conferees made during the conference. I will be very frank and say that I agreed to some of these concessions very reluctantly. I would much rather have seen the House bill as it originally passed enacted into law, but I want to see a bill that can be enacted into law passed by this Congress.

Just what really basic concessions did the House conferees make? We conceded on the ban in our bill in industry-wide bargaining. We conceded on the ban in our bill on welfare funds. We conceded on the question of injunctions to be obtained by private employers and on the provisions making labor organizations subject to the antitrust laws.

I call your attention to what is left in this bill, because I think you are going to find there is more in this bill than may meet the eye and may have been heretofore presented to you. This bill still exempts supervisors from the act. It prohibits the closed shop. The House conferees were able to obtain Senate agreement to our policy finding. This bill, contrary to reports that have gone out—and the Senate conferees agreed with us on this—does prohibit mass picketing and the use of violence in the conduct of a strike. On that provision we accepted the Senate language, which does restrict intimidation and coercion. This bill bans jurisdictional strikes and boycotts. It provides free speech for all. It amends the National Labor Relations Act, and those amendments to the act will become effective 60 days hence. This bill also, contrary to some reports that have gone out, does ban featherbedding. The bill also provides a section dealing with strikes which imperil the national health and safety.

May I say in passing if you want to meet John L. Lewis face to face and anyone else who is going to try and tie up our entire economy, and if you want to prevent a serious attack upon our economy, then you are going to do it by endorsing that provision in this bill.

This section provides: That the President shall, whenever he considers that the national health and safety is imperiled by a strike in a Nation-wide industry or substantial part thereof, first appoint a board of inquiry which shall obtain the facts and shall report to him within a reasonable time as specified by the President. When that board of inquiry makes its report, then the Attorney General is authorized to seek an injunction. And if the court also finds that the national health and safety is imperiled, the injunction is issued. Thereupon, there is provided a 60-day period of conciliation.

Once again the board of inquiry makes its report to the President and the public, too, will know the issues involved. Then, there will be a vote by the employees on the last offer of the employers or individual employer.

This bill also prohibits strikes against the Government.

The bill furthermore prohibits political contributions or expenditures by both employers and labor organizations.

The bill creates a Federal mediation and conciliation service separated from the Labor Department.

The bill further prohibits labor organizations from invoking the processes of the act unless all of the officers file affidavits with the board that they are not members of the Communist Party or other subversive organizations.

The present law relating to unfair labor practices by employers remains as is.

This bill also sets up a joint congressional committee for further study of the labor situation. Some of these issues still will have to be determined and perhaps given further study or more adequate study, and if we find that sort of a situation we can then come back to the Congress with additional legislation.

This bill also prohibits excessive or discriminatory initiation fees by labor organizations.

Once again the bill permits a check-off only if the individual concerned authorizes it, and that is revocable in 1 year.

This bill once again protects the validity of State laws on labor. Here is how we do it. This bill provides for an addition to the present board of two members. In other words, it creates a board of five members.

It abolishes the review section of the present National Labor Relations Board which has always caused so much trouble where the local examiners went in and helped influence the final decision of the Board.

It creates a general counsel who shall be independent of the Board and on all complaints by employees the counsel shall be the investigator and prosecutor, and the Board itself will be merely a quasi-judicial board passing on the case as presented by the counsel.

In addition to that, the bill requires that the rules of evidence shall apply as far as local examinations are concerned. The bill says that the Board itself shall move only on a preponderance of the evidence and also materially broadens the scope of the judicial review.

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY I yield.

Mr. OWENS. I believe that one of the most important portions of this bill is the division of powers; that is, the division of the functions, the investigation, the prosecution, the complaints, and the judicial end. The gentleman mentioned that the general counsel would be absolutely independent.

In the language on page 12 of the bill, page 24, page 30, page 31, page 32, and other parts, it constantly refers to the Board.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself three additional minutes.

Mr. OWENS. It is my understanding that the conference is saying to the House at this time that those different sections, where they mention the Board, mean that it is the general counsel who shall have the power to proceed with the investigation, with the complaint, and shall have complete power over the attorneys who are prosecuting; that the Board shall not control him or have the right of review in any way. Is that correct?

Mr. HARTLEY. The gentleman's opinion is absolutely correct. The reference to the Board was necessary because, in order to have this man independent of the Board, we had to use the term "Board." Otherwise we would have had to set up a completely independent agency. The gentleman's understanding is correct. He acts on behalf of the Board but completely independent of the Board.

Mr. MACKINNON. But while he is completely independent of the Board, he is authorized, insofar as his duties are concerned, to act in the name of the Board?

Mr. HARTLEY. Yes; in the name of the Board.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARTLEY. I yield.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. I wish to compliment the gentleman on the very fine exposition he is making of the conference report. I would like to ask the gentleman about that portion which pertains to the validity of State laws. Wisconsin and other States have their own labor relations laws. We are very anxious that disputes be settled at the State level insofar as it is possible. Can the gentleman give us assurance on that proposition, so that it is a matter of record, that that is the sense of the language and of the report?

Mr. HARTLEY. That is the sense of the language of the bill and of the report. That is my interpretation of the bill, that this will not interfere with the State of Wisconsin in the administration of its own laws. In other words, this will not interfere with the validity of the laws within that State.

Mr. KERSTEN of Wisconsin. And it will permit as many of these disputes to be settled at the State level as possible?

Mr. HARTLEY. Exactly.

Now, I would like to say in connection with the so-called concessions, that the greatest concession that was obtained by either body was obtained by the House when the House Labor Committee insisted upon an omnibus bill. I say to you in all sincerity if we had not insisted on an omnibus bill in the first instance I do not believe we would have 10 percent of this legislation ever enacted into law. If we had adopted a piecemeal approach that was proposed in the other body very little would have been enacted into law.

I also want to make it perfectly clear that there was no concession made except upon the assurance that it would provide us votes in another body to be certain that the legislation would be enacted into law.

There is an error of transposition in the statement of the House managers on the bill. On page 44 of the report containing the statement of managers, the sentence appearing at the end of paragraph (1)—the paragraph discussing section 8 (b) (2) of the conference agreement—was meant to appear at the end of paragraph (3), in the discussion of section 8 (b) (4).

This is a change in the trend of the last 25 years or so, in labor legislation, but let me remind you of this: This bill was written primarily to put labor and management on an equal basis, but above the rights of labor and above the rights of management, we were thinking in terms of what is best for the general public. We tried to protect the interests of the general public and I think we have done it. It is a moderate bill. It is fair to both labor and management, but, above all, it protects the public interest. I hope the conference report is adopted by a vote of at least 3 to 1.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HARTLEY] has again expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LESINSKI].

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, in my 15 years of service in the House I have never been burdened with a more solemn or difficult task than is mine today.

It is difficult because I know full well that the outcome is already determined. I harbor no hope that what I or others say or do here today will alter the final vote. It is a greater tragedy because of this knowledge. Today minds are no longer receptive to argument nor open to suasion. I am fully aware of a determination on the part of a majority of this Chamber to adopt without full consideration the conference report before us. This knowledge only makes my responsibility the greater and the inevitable outcome the more distressing.

I have said this is a solemn occasion. It is solemn to me, and my heart is heavy with contemplation of what our action today will mean to America's future and to the welfare of our Nation. Indeed, I could not contemplate it without abandoning hope of our future if it were not for my limitless faith in the peoples of the United States who will not tolerate for long a legislative grant of special privilege. I cannot let the occasion pass without a word on what we are about to do.

The first indications of recession are already abroad, but a majority of this Congress appear to be blissfully unaware of the danger signals. Instead of caution and attention to a program that will prevent another economic collapse and improve the well-being of our people, we are unhappily prepared to strike another body blow at the workingman, who is the sole hope of stability and prosperity. Rather than sincere efforts to expand and increase the welfare and purchasing power of the great mass of wage earners, we are invited instead to further weaken their strength, to enervate their organizations, and to suppress their legitimate rights.

The majority party never seems to learn the lessons of history. After the First World War, industry, with the cooperation of the Congress, virtually destroyed the American labor movement. Oh, it was all accomplished in the interest of business revival and a return to normalcy. But what did that concept of normalcy mean to the man who works with his hands and by the sweat of his brow? It only meant that his rights were denied him, that his wages were decreased, that his purchasing power was absorbed by entrenched and more powerful interests, and that he was denied any assistance from his Government. To America it meant that the forces of economic collapse were rampant in the hands of a privileged few who gained special advantage from others' misfortune.

We all know what a debacle followed. Are we today willingly to undertake another step along the same road? Have we learned nothing from past experience?

In sharp contrast is our experience since 1933. Beginning in 1933, a balanced program of recovery was initiated. Neither industry nor labor received special advantage. The result was an economic team that revived America and thus the world. Labor was accorded protection against infringement of its natural rights and provided an atmosphere within which to achieve its legitimate aspirations. Wages were increased, purchasing power expanded, industrial activity increased to meet the new demands, and the resulting prosperity was the envy of the world and a challenge to history. The momentum attained inspired the cooperative efforts of World War II—and need I remind this Congress of the miracles we then accomplished?

Striking, in its similarity, is the experience of Europe and the Orient. In Russia labor was controlled. In Italy labor was suppressed. In Germany and Japan labor was placed in a strait-jacket. The inevitable result of such blind, unreasoned disregard of moral rights and government irresponsibility led directly to dictatorship. No other result was possible. A natural right cannot long be suppressed without the aid of force for it lies deep within the very soul of man and is as powerful and real as life itself. The only real, lasting guaranty of democracy is the common man. Deny him and you reject democracy.

We must choose here—today—are we willing to suppress his rights and, if so, will we be willing at a later date to tolerate the conflicts that will result or in the alternate to provide the force that will be necessary to keep him suppressed?

I say this in all sincerity. We are not here treating an ordinary matter. We are today concerned with a fundamental, natural, human right—that depends neither on the Constitution nor action of the Congress. It exists because man exists.

We have been told that we must limit this right; that we must guard against the power of labor; that labor has gone too far; that because labor has exercised its rights and organized for common purposes that its collective strength is a danger that must be suppressed. But in dealing with the natural rights of a group of persons acting in concert, you are no less dealing with the human rights of each individual. We cannot escape the responsibility—nor in good conscience can we be blind to the inevitable results.

Why am I so serious and why do I seem so melancholy today? Mr. Speaker, if this body were fully aware of the provisions of this bill and determined to proceed irrespective of its implications and inevitable catastrophic results, I would be far less concerned because at least our action would then be based on knowledge and thus the results intended. But unfortunately, that is not the fact.

The matter before us is no ordinary piece of legislation. It is one of the most adroit and plausible and seemingly rational proposals presented to the Congress in my experience. But in it danger lies, not only in its potential effects, but in its subtlety. The Congress is being misled. Too few in this Chamber have analyzed this measure, and its implications to America, to act rationally. The "cloven hoof" is concealed in a stylish shoe.

Its proponents prate against power—but here license the powerful to oppress the workingman.

They speak out against concentration of Government authority—but here create an agency with more power over labor and management than ever before in history.

They condemn bureaucracy—but here impose administrative requirements on an agency of Government that will require that its staff be expanded threefold, and at least two new agencies be created.

They argue their love of labor—but here place their stamp of approval on company unions and Government injunctions.

They abhor Government interference—but here impose the most unconscionable restriction on labor organizations and require detailed reports submitted by no comparable activity.

They are for God and country—but here tamper with natural rights which are beyond our ken, and contribute to a reversal of economic prosperity by depriving workers of their strength.

Oh, and that is not all—but it is too late.

It will be too late today to avoid the prearranged results to follow. But the hope of America is in tomorrow, and this evil thing will, mark my words, shortly be undone.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BUCK].

Mr. BUCK. Mr. Speaker, I am disappointed in the conference labor bill. In my opinion, the House bill embraced the provisions desired by the great bulk of the American people. But, since all legislation is a product of compromise and since the conference bill is preferable to no bill at all, I support and urge its approval by the Members of this House.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, the conference report on H. R. 3020, known as the Hartley-Taft bill, cannot be intelligently discussed in the short time allotted. Columns of misleading propaganda have been given the public, by certain newspapers and commentators, that the conference committee bill is a much milder bill than the labor legislation passed by the House over a month ago. This propaganda is misleading and issued in order to confuse the Members of Congress and the public. The American people have been led to believe that employers generally are in favor of the Hartley-Taft labor bill. The vast majority of industrial management, if they were thoroughly familiar with the provisions which are so cleverly set up in the conference report of H. R. 3020, would be opposed to this legislation. In the past few weeks I have spoken to gatherings on this legislation in New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and the Calumet region in Indiana. I have had employers come to me after the meetings and express concern and apprehension over its passage. They possess this attitude in spite of the fact that 90 percent of the misleading propaganda on this bill has been intensely and unfairly antilabor. I might call the Members' attention to one major industry whose management cooperated and faithfully bargained collectively with the union representing their employees. I refer specifically to the steel industry in the Calumet region of Indiana. I have on this table protest petitions containing over 20,000 signatures from the Calumet region (Lake County, Indana) against this Hartley-Taft bill. These signatures are from workers, businessmen, farmers, veterans, and so forth. After World War I, this great industrial area was plagued with strikes and lock-outs, involving terrific property damage and loss of life. Members can recollect more recently when 19 industrial workers were shot down in the South Chicago strike riot on Memorial Day 1937. This was before the Wagner Act. In spite of the unreasonable rise in the cost of living and the reduction of take-home pay since VJ-day, industrial unrest in the Calumet region has been at a minimum and strikes have been practically negligible. The propaganda used by the sponsors of this legislation to mislead the American public has been a systematic magnifying of a few unfortunate labor-management strikes and disputes which have occurred throughout the country. Nothing has been said about the tens of thousands of labor disputes which have been equitably and justly settled under the existing National Labor Relations Act.

I know that a great number of Members on this floor have not digested and thoroughly analyzed the 73 pages in this conference report. I will refer to but a few provisions in the limited time allotted.

Section 8 (a) (3) pretends to permit union security such as maintenance, union shop, and so forth, but it provides that the union must secure an affirmative vote of a majority, not only of those who participate in the vote but of all the employees in the entire unit (including those who failed to turn out to vote). Imagine the difficulty involved in a provision like this where twenty or thirty thousand men work in one separate plant, like an automobile factory or a steel mill. Other provisions in this section practically nullify union security.

It also provides under section 9 (e) (2) that after the union has cleared all the impeding hurdles involving elections, contracts, and so forth, in the above section, that after 1 year, a minority group of 30 percent of the employees can secure a new ballot to take away the right to union security.

It also provides that even though a majority or unanimous vote may have authorized the collective-bargaining representative to negotiate a check-off, the collective representation must be broken down into individual assignments.

The bill in section 2 and in section 10 retains some of the language of the present Wagner Act, recognizing that public policy requires collective bargaining, but in a comprehensive reading of the collective-bargaining sections, one can easily see that an obstinate, unfair, and uncooperative employer can practically nullify collective bargaining under the provisions of this legislation.

Under section 9 (f) (g), even if the employees succeed in organizing themselves, the bill discovers new ways of preventing them from achieving collective-bargaining rights. Another of the unfair and hidden impediments to good faith collective bargaining is the following: An unfair employer could evade any obligation to bargain with a union representing any or all of his employees if he can show that among all the members of the international union throughout the country, there may have been one union member who did not receive the required financial report. As a matter of fact, under the bill, the employer would not even have the burden of proving this because the burden is on the union to show that it has furnished to all of the members such a report.

Further, under section 9 (h), once an officer of either the local or national union anywhere in the country would neglect or fail to file an affidavit that he or she at one time was a member or affiliated with the Communist Party, then all collective bargaining with all locals of that national union throughout the country may break down. Thousands of innocent union members would suffer by reason of the refusal or neglect of an individual union officer in some remote part of the United States to file the required affidavit.

Section 8 (b) (4) of the bill seriously restricts the right of employees to strike or boycott for the purpose of protecting their own organizations and their wage-and-hour standards against the destructive competition of nonunion labor. This section is not limited to the prevention of those jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycotts which President Truman recommended should be banned, but prohibits forms of peaceful economic action by unions which are recognized by courts as legitimate and justified. Another restriction on labor is found in section 8 (d) where, for violation of the 60-day cooling off requirement, the employer may be found by the National Labor Relations Board to have refused to bargain and thereupon be ordered by the Board to bargain; but—employees who strike within the 60-day period will be guilty of an unfair labor practice and in addition, lose their status as employees, and may thereafter be discriminatorily discharged even though an unfair employer might have deliberately provoked the strike for the purpose of ridding himself of union labor.

Section 9 (c) (2) welcomes back to the industrial scene the insidious company dominated union.

Section 10 (j) (1) brings back once more the hated Government injunction from which labor thought the Norris-LaGuardia Act had forever freed it.

Other sections of the bill are equally unsound. Section 3 (d) places sole authority over the investigating and prosecuting functions of the Board in its general counsel, calls for the centralization of excessive power in one individual and, in effect, makes the Board itself subject to him.

Section 8 (b) (2) makes it an unfair labor practice for a union to cause an employer to discharge a nonunion employee under the union-shop contract where the employee has been denied membership or has been expelled from the union for some reason other than his failure to pay dues or initiation fees.

Section 8 (c) goes far beyond the mere protection of the constitutional right of free speech and prescribes that statements which contain no threat of reprisals, force, or promise of benefit may not even be considered as evidence of an unfair labor practice. In no other field of law are a man's statements excluded as evidence of an illegal intention.

Section 9 (c) (3) denies the right to vote in a representation election to employees then on strike because of an economic dispute. This provision is particularly vicious because it enables an employer, by a petition for an election filed by either himself or a minority of his employees, to secure the rejection of an established bargaining agent at the very time that the public interest makes it particularly urgent that collective bargaining continue.

The whole bill is administratively unworkable. Numerous new functions are added to those which the National Labor Relations Board already finds itself handicapped in performing because of lack of funds. For example, the Board must resolve jurisdictional disputes, secure injunctions, and police the internal affairs of unions. It must make such determinations as the reasonableness of union initiation fees and what constitutes feather-bedding, with vague standards or none at all to guide it. Its work is needlessly increased by the prohibition of such useful and time-proven devices as prehearing elections and consent-card checks, and it is hamstrung in conducting its hearings by the requirement that it do so in accordance with strict rules of evidence—a requirement made of no other governmental administrative tribunal working in a specialized field.

I have pointed out only a few of the objections, as I see them, to the bill in its present form. It is clear that such a bill is not intended to encourage but rather is intended to discourage self-organization by employees and collective bargaining with their employers. The bill will not decrease but will produce and prolong strife and conflict in labor-management relations; it will not promote but will defeat the objectives which we are now striving so mightily to achieve, a high standard of living, full production and full employment in a peaceful world.

During the month-long open hearings of the House Committee on Education and Labor, remarks were made by some of the majority members of the committee that the American people gave the Eightieth Congress a mandate to pass strict regulatory laws involving union labor.

At no time during the campaign last fall did I read or hear, either on the radio or the public platform, any responsible Republican leader or candidate publicly tell the American people that the Republican Party would sponsor legislation similar to the Taft-Hartley bill, if they secured control of the Eightieth Congress. In fact the reverse was the assurance that the Grand Old Party gave to the voters during the last two campaigns.

I will now read part of the Republican platform of 1944:

> The Republican Party is the historical champion of free labor. Under Republican administrations, American manufacturing developed and American workers attained the most progressive standards of living of any workers in the world. Now the Nation owes these workers a debt of gratitude for their magnificent productive effort in support of the war.
>
> The Republican Party accepts the purposes of the National Labor Relations Act.

Governor Thomas Dewey, the present titular head of the Republican Party, in a speech at Seattle, stated, and I quote:

> The National Labor Relations Act is a good and necessary law. It acknowledges the trend of our times and will continue to be the law of the land.

On January 8, 1947, just 4 months ago, Governor Dewey set forth the labor policy of his administration in the following words:

> The labor policy of the State rests on a maximum of voluntary mediation and a minimum of government compulsion. This policy has promoted free collective bargaining. It has been widely successful in preventing strikes and violence. We propose to continue this policy.

The Republican Party should have informed the American wage earners last fall of the true mandate which they intended to carry out if they secured control of the Eightieth Congress.

The Eightieth Congress should have followed President Truman's recommendation of January 6, 1947, in his state of the Union message when he said:

> We must not, under the stress of emotion, endanger our American freedom by taking ill-considered action which will lead to results not anticipated or desired.

The President further said:

> We should enact legislation to correct certain abuses and to provide additional Government assistance in bargaining, but we should also concern ourselves with the basic cause of labor-management difficulties.

The President urged creation of a temporary joint commission to inquire into the entire field of labor-management relations composed of 12 Members of Congress, chosen by Congress and 8 members representing the public, management, and labor appointed by the President. He suggested that this commission investigate and make recommendations to the Congress.

Had this Congress followed President Truman's recommendation constructive labor-management legislation might have been presented to the Congress.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], a member of the committee.

Mr. LANDIS. Mr. Speaker, Congress has a responsibility to enact labor legislation that will be constructive and give first consideration to the welfare of the Nation. I realize we cannot solve all labor-management problems by legislation, but we can stop the Red labor leaders and labor racketeering.

Labor leaders do not want any labor legislation. They want the house of labor to solve these problems. But the American public has waited patiently for them to act. Industrial unrest proves that our present labor laws are thoroughly inadequate of attaining industrial peace. And Congress intends to do something about it in terms of what is best for all of the people.

The proposals in the conference report are not harsh or punitive. Labor still has the right to strike, and the rank and file of labor will have the right to take a greater part in their problems with the right of the secret ballot. Labor will still have the right to bargain with management on the local plant level, region, or on an industry-wide basis. Labor will still have the right to the voluntary check-off and the right to bargain collectively on wages, hours, safety measures, and better working conditions. Craft unions will get more protection under the globe doctrine which is written in the bill.

This conference report will take care of labor abuses without destroying labor's rights. It completely outlaws jurisdictional strikes, wildcat strikes, and secondary boycotts. However, these are labor evils and abuses and not labor rights.

In order to stop the strikes which threaten the health and welfare of the Nation we have set up a plan, in many ways, like the Railway Labor Act. It is a plan to bring the two sides together without harming labor, management, or the public.

We added the following sections to the Senate bill: Barring political contributions and expenditures by labor unions, as well as by employees, separation of functions, rules of evidence, bar strikes against the Government, make it a violation of the law for a union to try to compel an employer to pay its members for services not performed, initiation fees of unions are to be controlled by the NLRB, plant guards can organize in a separate organization, and the rank and file of labor will be permitted to take a secret ballot on the last offer, and most of the bill of rights.

The NLRB will be expanded to five members and take on judicial functions. The general counsel of the NLRB will become the key labor-enforcement officer of the Government. He will head the staff in the regional offices. He will have the final authority over whether complaints of unfair-labor practices shall be filed against employers or unions. The general counsel is to be selected by the President and confirmed by the Senate.

These proposals are not perfect but they will go a long way toward reducing future strikes. Legislation is not the complete answer to our problems in labor relations. Much will depend upon the administration of labor laws.

The Senate and House conferees were anxious to get a bill which would correct labor abuses—and yet give the President sound reason for approval.

There has been some misinformation on some of the penalties on most important things, and I should like to give you the penalties in this bill. First is the secondary boycott. The penalty for a secondary boycott is first, mandatory injunction by the regional office of the Board; second, suit for damages; and third, the employee discharged therefor not entitled to reinstatement.

Second, jurisdictional strikes; the penalties for jurisdictional strikes are, first, discretionary injunction by the regional office of the Board, second, suit for damages, and third, employee discharged therefor not entitled to reinstatement.

Third, on violence, mass picketing, and other intimidation and coercion, the penalties are, first discretionary injunction by the Board, second, possible suit for damages; third, cease-and-desist order of the Board; and fourth, employee discharged therefor not entitled to reinstatement.

The closed shop is prohibited and the union shop is permitted if a majority of the employees vote for it. There must be over 50 percent of the vote of the entire membership of the employees in order to get the right to bargain collectively for the union shop.

Of course, the employees do have a right to bargain collectively and have the right to strike for a union shop and not a closed shop. The closed shop is outlawed.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may require to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. CANFIELD].

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, when I voted against the passage of the House omnibus labor bill on April 17 I told the House I favored most of the bill's provisions but I could not go along with the ban on industry-wide bargaining and the provision for the use of private injunctions. These have been eliminated in conference and I shall support the measure now before us.

I do not endorse every section of this bill, but I do believe that it will make for greater equality between labor and management in industrial relations and that its necessary provisions now outweigh those of doubtful value.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MADDEN].

Mr. MADDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to print at this point in the RECORD a speech by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLEY], who is attending the labor convention in Switzerland.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLEY. Mr. Speaker, this labor conference bill should be vetoed, if it is accepted by the Congress. I have already asked the President to do so, pointing out two pertinent facts: First, that the bill will not promote labor-management peace but will make for discontent and unhappiness among our working people and, second, that communism thrives on such discontent and this bill will contribute to its spread.

The working people of this country have never had a great deal of security. They have never been able to look forward to old age without apprehension. This Congress has done nothing to promote their security. On the contrary, all legislation passed by the Eightieth Congress affecting the working people has been injurious or nonbeneficial to them. How can they be contented when they know this? Yet the greatest bulwark against communism is a happy and contented people.

Labor organizations have given their members some measure of security. That is one reason that millions of workingmen and women flock to join unions. They were not compelled or under pressure to do so, notwithstanding the arguments produced by the proponents of the bill that they were forced to join. Only through unions have the masses of the people been able to safeguard themselves against overwhelming insecurity. When I speak of insecurity, I mean as concerns jobs and opportunities to earn a better living. Our workers have been maliciously fired by companies without reason. In times of depression millions have been laid off, and then the argument that in America a man can work at a job of his own choosing does not hold, for he is forced to work at whatever he can get—or starve. There is no alternative.

Moreover, this bill was based on false premises, or at least on undetermined facts, as the one previously mentioned that men were forced to join unions. Was this conclusion ever thoroughly investigated by the committee through witnesses from the rank and file? It was not. Again, there was the statement that the rank-and-file members of unions were generally dissatisfied with union leaders. Was this charge investigated by the committee from witnesses of the rank and file? It was not. These are two of the premises given to the public which were never verified. The authors of the bill must be doubtful about its effectiveness and the results, for they have provided for the establishment of a commission to make a thorough study of labor-management relations. In so doing they have put the cart before the horse. Yet in January in his message to the Congress the President proposed such a commission, resolutions were introduced for the purpose, of one of which I had the honor to be the author, but they were never considered. This was the sound and logical approach to this problem, yet it was passed over and the legislation before us was prepared without proper study and investigation and based on false premises.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN] a member of the committee.

Mr. KLEIN. Mr. Speaker, I know that much cannot be added at this late date to what has already been said in the hearings and debate, on the bill and during today's debate on the conference report.

But I am very much concerned at the idea that is going out to the country that the Congress of the United States is being run by big business, by groups such as the National Association of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, and other spokesmen for big business.

We pass a tax bill which in my opinion and in the opinion of many, many people favors the rich and discriminates against the poor. Now, we are passing a bill which penalizes the laboring people of this country, the ordinary, and to use a much abused term, the common people of the country, who make up the backbone of this Nation. They are being penalized now because of a few excesses of some labor leaders in the past. Both of these actions would seem to strengthen in the people's minds the theory that the Congress is more interested in helping big business, and the wealthly people of the country, than it is in looking to the welfare of the great mass of wage-earners and lower-income groups.

Much has been said about the mandate of November 5, 1946. I want to remind you gentleman on the left, the Republicans, that a minority of the people voted in that election. It never was the peoples' mandate to pass such restrictive measures. If you are so much concerned about mandates, I think if you pass this bill you will rue the mandate that you will get in November 1948, because you will then find that many of you will not be back here the following session. The voters back home will certainly let you know they oppose this type of legislation.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KLEIN. I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, at long last the labor baiters and labor haters are having a field day, the day you had hoped for for 10 long years. Today, because of the sins of a few labor leaders you are punishing the whole labor movement. Already you have forgotten the great war record of labor without which it would have been impossible to win the war. You intend to punish men and women whose only sin is that they are striving for equality in labor relations, the only power that the workers have. You have voted to give the rich men 33⅓ percent reduction in taxes in what you term the interests of equality, but you have knocked out price control and you are responsible for the highest food prices in my memory. You have broken down nearly all Government restrictions and are now preparing to do so with regard to rent in order to make the rich richer, and you are now attempting to make the poor subservient. But you cannot do it. No law that is unfair and discriminates against the individual will ever succeed in free America. You cannot by law destroy the God-given right of man. The "noble experiment" was tried and when it had succeeded in organizing gangsters instead of outlawing liquor, it was repealed. Much that is in this bill you will bitterly regret.

For the last 14 years your Labor Committee and a Democratic Congress protected labor, with the result that when our country needed labor to supply the necessities of war, production was speeded up until this country became the wonder and the envy of the world. None profited more than the National Association of Manufacturers. That group of "little men" who wrote this bill for their own profit and found a subservient Republican committee ready and anxious to do their bidding——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. KLEIN] has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. HOFFMAN].

Mr. HOFFMAN. Mr. Speaker, in all the years it has been my privilege to associate with the Members of this House, never once has a word of criticism of any individual Member crossed my lips. That record will remain unsullied. But the statements which have been made with reference to this bill and to those who wrote it and to those who will vote for it are so filled with arrant nonsense and misinformation that I cannot at this moment refrain from criticizing, not the individuals but the statements that have been made and the conclusions expressed.

The mayor of the city of New York produces a great show in protest against this bill, on the theory that it is anti-labor. That is a show, but it produces no facts, gives no reasons to justify the charges made. Just a farce—a Punch-and-Judy show.

We have been told time and time again that it was involuntary servitude that would be imposed if this bill were adopted. I notice the Member from New Jersey shakes her head in the affirmative.

Mrs. NORTON. That is right.

Mr. HOFFMAN. You are right in this, that upon the free American whose right to work, who must work if he would live and eat, upon him there are restrictions. Under this bill he can be forced, coerced, if you prefer, by violence driven into the union shop, made to pay for the privilege of exercising his right to work. In that way it is involuntary servitude. Not upon the union man but on the 52,000,000 workers who do not belong to, who do not wish to join, unions.

People who criticize this bill, as far as I know them personally, never had, never will have a callus on their hands. Their calluses are elsewhere.

Let me make one of those Drew Pearson statements. Tonight, and when this bill is signed by the President, you will find Lee Pressman, counsel for the CIO, and Joe Padway, counsel for the A. F. of L., holding a champagne and a campaign dinner in celebration of their great victory because, in my humble opinion, it gives to racketeers, extortionists, and ambitious political leaders in the unions additional power which they should not have.

This House was asked to write a bill which would guarantee to the American citizen the right to work without paying tribute to anyone, which would protect employees, unions, and the public. The House came very near writing such a bill. It wrote a good bill. A very good bill– fair, just, and an almost adequate bill. Then, as so often happens, it went to the other body, and there in conference seven men wrote a new bill. I say, by way of compliment to our chairman, he did a good job in that he came back with a bill which carried the House No. 3020. None of the House conferees lost their pants. I want to add, complimenting the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. LANDIS], he did a good job for the United Mine Workers, of which he is an honored member. John L. Lewis, head of that union, should in justice give the gentleman at least a certificate of appreciation, for the gentleman from Indiana brought the bacon home to John in the form of industry-wide bargaining. Now you say, What am I going to do with all that in my mind? I will tell you what I am going to do. I do not like the bill. I had hoped to live long enough—though some folks hoped I would die sooner—to walk out of that door knowing that the Congress, the Senate as well as the House, had passed a bill which would protect the public health, welfare, and safety. This bill does not adequately do that.

For more than 10 long years I have fought on the floor of this House and elsewhere for a bill which would protect the constitutional and the God-given right of a man to work—for a bill which would prevent, under the guise of unionism the necessity of paying tribute before a man was permitted to work at the job which he had, with which he was satisfied. This bill does not give that protection.

For 10 years and longer I have fought to prevent employers who have a monopoly of production along certain lines and labor leaders who have a dictatorship over workers getting together and grinding as it were, between the upper and lower millstones the men and women who must work if they would eat. This bill does not do that. On the contrary, it makes it easier for the ambitious labor leader and the greedy employer to conspire together and exploit the worker. And that today is being done. When you in the smaller cities see your industries losing to the competition of the huge corporations in the cities you will realize what I mean.

The bill contains no adequate provisions which either prevent or punish the participants in sympathy, secondary, or jurisdictional strikes and boycotts.

The bill rewards, gives additional help to, and increases by $2,000 a year, the compensation of the Board members. A Board which admittedly is biased, prejudiced, and unfair. Paying an employee more money and giving him more help has always, in every man's language, been considered an approval of his work. The Board should have been fired, a new Board chosen.

It was my thought, my hope, and my prayer that a Republican Congress would do a thorough job. The House tried. Politicians had their way. Perhaps in '48 a people's Congress will do the job. I am still hoping I will live long enough to see that day and be back here, not home, when the job is done.

This bill is the best we can get at the moment. Perhaps a few strikes in essential industries, the collection of a few more millions of dollars from the public by extortionists in unions, will give us proper legislation in '49. I have had so many things rammed down my throat during the last 13 years that I may not choke to death if I have to swallow this one. There are a few good things in it. At least it breaks the ice. Its adoption will prove that the Wagner Act can be amended. Hence because of that—and because such an overwhelming majority of my colleagues will support the bill I am led to doubt the wisdom of my own judgment—will yield to the pressure of their combined convictions and with misgivings that the bill is worse than the present law, vote for the measure. When, however, folks talk about this bill restricting labor, do not make any mistake. If the Member from New Jersey—I do not know how to say it——

Mrs. NORTON. Do not.

Mr. HOFFMAN. "Do not say it." If the Member from New Jersey believed as I believe, which she thanks God she does not, she would say that this was the gift of the Congress to the unions and the union leaders.

The redeeming feature is that its passage will prove that the NLRA can be amended and in another 2 years even the other body may "get religion."

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Michigan has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. BARDEN].

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield for a consent request?

Mr BARDEN. Cannot the gentleman wait? Yes; I yield.

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

"THE SHEEP ARE HAPPIER BY THEMSELVES THAN UNDER THE CARE OF WOLVES"

Mr. SABATH. Mr. Speaker, it is indeed amazing to me to listen to gentlemen who, day in and day out, have attacked and villified organized labor and its leaders, and who have endeavored in every way to destroy labor unions which have done so much for working people and for the country, now come before us and say that this legislation is in the interest of labor, and for the protection of labor, and for the good of labor.

I am reminded immediately of the observation of Thomas Jefferson, the great democrat, whether you spell it with a capital or with a small d, the great statesman: "The sheep," Jefferson wrote, "are happier of themselves than under the care of wolves."

SO THE WOLVES WILL PROTECT LABOR

Are these gentlemen, then, the wolves who will protect labor, but perhaps at a rather high cost of mortality in union ranks?

Is it not ridiculous that they should suddenly protest a touching and protective solicitude for the welfare of the American workingman? It is rank hypocrisy, and fools no one.

Are not the same forces behind this destructive and revolutionary bill which for many years have expended furious energy and huge sums of money in undermining the force of labor—the Chamber of Commerce, the National Association of Manufacturers, and their lesser but even more virulent satellites? You know they are. They wrote this bill; they devised the strategy; they are jamming it through.

INDUSTRIAL PEACE REIGNS TODAY

Are they urging and forcing through this legislation because of any sympathy they have for the rights and aims of the common people, of working people?

Do they actually believe for one moment that the American people will accept their fantastic statements that this bill is the product of a benevolent and protective industry burning with desire to help and feed the people?

Today we have 58,000,000 people at work. Every able-bodied man or woman who desires work is employed. If ever there was peace between industry and labor, it is today. Strikes and disputes of all kinds are at a minimum. Enlightened management is satisfied. Our present laws are functioning well, to help labor stand up to its more powerful partner in production, but not to coerce.

WHY EMASCULATE LABOR RELATIONS ACT?

Why, then, this indecent rush to pass this bill which emasculates the Wagner Labor Relations Act, which saps the strength from the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which makes political activity by unions a crime? The Wagner Act was passed by a Democratic Congress under the greatest of all Democratic administrations. It was aimed at remedying many flagrant abuses. It has helped to stabilize the relations between management and labor. It has equalized, to some extent, the disparity in strength between the workers and the employers.

Have not manufacturers and businessmen made more money and become more prosperous under this law than ever before? Did not labor show greater patriotism during World War II than the greedy profiteers who are forcing this legislation upon the country?

NOT TO PROTECT LABOR BUT TO DESTROY IT

To say that this legislation is to protect labor is nonsense. It is, on the other hand, intended to destroy it.

We could have brought in reasonable legislation to remedy any real abuses that have developed. We could have established, as the President recommended, a joint commission to study and examine the entire subject of labor-management relations. This bill, should it ever become law—which, God forbid—would create a labor chaos. It solves no problems; it creates new ones.

HELPED PASS FAVORABLE LEGISLATION

I am deeply gratified that it has been my fortunate lot to aid in the preparation and passage of legislation genuinely helpful to labor and to the country. I am very proud of that. But I should deplore this bill ever becoming law. In the interest of justice and fair play, I am certain that the President will veto this bill, and thus encourage continuation of the present industrial peace and our high standards of prosperity and our unprecedented production.

If you Republicans think that the interests who are forcing you to adopt this legislation will help to reelect you, I tell you now you are badly fooled. They cannot do it, no matter how much money they may expend. All their money cannot buy the American people.

You fooled them in 1946. You cannot fool them in 1948. You promised that with a Republican Congress and abolition of OPA prices would come down. That promise has not been realized. Prices are higher than ever.

A reactionary coalition is in control now; but some day, I hope, there will be a coalition in the interest of the people which will follow the Jeffersonian doctrine, "Equal rights to all, special privileges to none."

CONFEREES REWROTE BILL

I regret that time and space do not permit the full impact of this bill, and of the dangerous changes made by the conferees in rewriting the bill, to be explained line by line. Few indeed who will soon vote on this fateful measure understand its full meaning.

I am inserting here a brief résumé of the principal changes made by the Hartley-Taft bill from existing law; but this brief memo can only hint at the way in which the whole structure of union-management relations is gutted; at the inconsistencies, the inadequacies, and the discriminations presented here:

MAIN CHANGES FROM EXISTING LAW IN TAFT-HARTLEY CONFERENCE BILL H. R. 3020

A. AMENDMENT TO WAGNER ACT

1. Supervisory employees

Places supervisory employees outside the act.

2. Closed shop and union shop; voting

Outlaws closed shop agreements by making it an unfair labor practice to carry them into effect.

Permits union shop agreements only where supported by a vote of a majority of employees eligible to vote. No employee is eligible to vote if he is on strike for straight economic reasons and has been replaced.

3. Discharge of employees for other reasons than nonpayment of dues

Whenever the employer has reason to believe that the union is unfair to an employee who offers to pay dues, he must retain the employee even in spite of a union shop contract or be guilty of an unfair labor practice. At the same time the union cannot cause his discharge from the union and employment on any grounds except nonpayment of dues.

4. Restraint or coercion by labor unions

The conference bill makes it an unfair labor practice for labor unions to restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of their rights.

5. Prohibition of certain legitimate activities

Under section 8 (b) (4) of amendments to the Wagner Act, unions are in effect prevented from refusing to handle goods even if the object is to organize competing plants, to protect fair union labor standards, or to quell an attack which threatens the organization's existence. This is done by failing to distinguish between inexcusable boycotts and legitimate economic action. These activities would also be made subject to employer damage suits in the Federal courts and to court injunctions required to be sought by the Board.

6. Featherbedding practices

Under section 8 (b) (6) of the amendments, featherbedding practices are prohibited as unfair.

7. Strikes at the end of existing agreements in violation of 60-day notice provision

If an employee strikes in violation of a required 60-day notice provision regarding renewal of existing agreements (sec. 8 (d)) he could forever be barred from employment by the employer.

8. Company unions

By section 9 (c) (2) of the amendments the Board must put company dominated unions on the ballot for an election side by side with the bona fide union even if the former has been ordered disestablished the day before.

B. CONCILIATION AND MEDIATION

1. Abolishes Conciliation Service in Department of Labor and sets up an independent agency for this purpose.

2. Directs Federal injunctions against strikes constituting national emergencies.

C. SUITS BY AND AGAINST UNIONS

1. Waives present jurisdictional requirements in Federal courts of diversity of citizenship and amount in controversy where suit involves breach of collective agreement.

D. POLITICAL ACTIVITIES

The measure provides that unions and corporations cannot spend any money in any way to help defeat a candidate for elective Federal office.

OF THE PEOPLE, BY MANAGEMENT, FOR MANAGEMENT

This bill represents a flagrant example of invisible government showing through the curtains.

In every section there is some slight jerkiness as, with pious mouthings about "labor's bill of rights," logic and coherence have been openly and savagely sacrificed to give some undue and unfair advantage to management—to the vested interests—over human beings.

Court rules of evidence are imposed on the Board, although there is no reason or excuse for doing so except to make the Board's functioning more cumbersome, more inefficient, and less impartial and realistic.

In regard to protection of their own rights, supervisory employees are ruled to be a part of management and thrust outside the benefits of the act; but when it comes to inexcusable departure from the principles of agency law, supervisory employees are ruled to be labor.

The prohibition against political expenditures reduces mass organization through the natural voice of organized labor to impotency.

Another clause requires the Board—and ultimately, no doubt, many an appellate court—to rule, not on the facts, but on a state of mind. The American principle of majority rule is violated repeatedly.

I could go on, Mr. Speaker, indefinitely; but limitations of time and space forbid. I can only say that the American people will remember this affront to justice and fair play.

Mr. BARDEN. Mr. Speaker, 5 minutes, or twice 5 minutes, is absolutely inadequate to discuss a bill of this importance. I have been interested in listening, though, to some of the caustic comments by another Member.

During my service in this House I have found this body to be changeable; that is, in personnel, from one Congress to another; but I have found it to be a very fine and honorable group of people who are here in the interest of the American people. There is not a man in this body but who knows the labor group in America, that is the men who toil for a living, are composed of the fine, sturdy Americans, almost the backbone of this Nation. That group includes farmers; it includes mechanics, shop workers, office and railroad employees, and other people who keep the wheels of industry turning.

When this bill went through this House, out of the 435 Members, 107 voted against it; and the proportion was about the same in the Senate. I simply want to say this: Before I would stand in this well and dub three-quarters of my colleagues in this House "labor baiters" and "labor haters," as has been done, or before I would pay that price to return to this Chamber, I would walk out never to return.

There is room for fair play in America, enough fair play for every American.

We believe in equal rights to all and special privileges to none. That is the philosophy of this bill. It is a fair, honest, sincere approach to the solution of a problem that has been affecting every American for the last several years.

Many of the problems causing this legislation could have very easily been settled by the leaders of the great labor organizations had they chosen to do it; but, no, they went so far that the tolerance of the American people was virtually exhausted and the people called for some remedial measures that would set things aright. The channels of commerce were being clogged.

The cost of living was going up. Production was going down and down. Those who have observed the trends know the only way to stop the rising cost of living was and is full production. Therefore we set about to do something.

This has been a troublesome piece of legislation. There are one or two things in the bill that I think are probably inadequately dealt with. I am the type of American who believes when a national emergency is declared by the President in which he says the health, welfare, and safety of America is at stake and imperiled, whether caused by a group from without or within this Nation, every good American should turn to and help relieve that situation and remove that hazard from the heads of the American people. We dealt with that subject very lightly and I do not think adequately. It will require the cooperation and leadership of the heads of the union and labor movements of this country with the Government of the United States in order to avoid the necessity for additional legislation along this line.

We have provided in this bill for some established rules of procedure in evidence and that they should be patterned insofar as practicable after the District courts And in some cases a review by the courts. Is this to be construed as an unfriendly act toward anyone? Why certainly not from the beginning of courts. They have been the haven of refuge for the oppressed or those who have been wronged. Labor, management, and the public are entitled to this protection.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the gentleman one additional minute. I regret I cannot give him more, but the time has all been taken.

Mr. BARDEN. I thank the gentleman. I was so much in hopes that maybe I would get as much time as some of the members of the committee who did not have to work on the conference committee. It looks like poor compensation for working and taking all the cussing that I took on the conference committee.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say in all sincerity the conference report is not everything that was in the House bill, it is not everything that we thought should be in the bill, but every provision of it is fair. With all of this talk I want somebody here to take some of the provisions they say are unfair and analyze them. They are talking in generalities. This is a good bill. I think it will solve the problem. I want to say that if the good men in labor do not set about and help remove some of the existing evils they will bring the house down on themselves. It is their responsibility to help the good labor people of this country and I hope that will be done. This bill is not antilabor, anticapital, or antipublic. It is good, sound Americanism, embodying rules of justice and fair play.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from North Carolina has again expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished minority leader, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. RAYBURN].

Mr. RAYBURN. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman from North Carolina in one statement he made, and that is if some leaders in the labor movement do not be a little more watchful, they may bring down wrath upon the heads of people who do not deserve it. I would like to vote for some curative measures with reference to labor and management conduct and conditions. I wanted to have time enough to study this bill a bit. I wanted to see the conference report, and what the managers on the part of the House and the Senate did, long enough before this bill came in here that I could determine for myself what was in this bill. I got the statement of the managers on the part of the House at 20 minutes to 12 this morning. I should have had a day and a night to look into this thing. Of course, everybody knows that nobody on God's earth can explain the provisions of this bill in 10 minutes or 20 minutes or an hour. Now, I know that the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK] is going to get up and say how swiftly in the past we have acted on bills and on conference reports, but those were times of great emergency, where 24 hours meant a great deal. I would like to understand this bill.

In trying to understand this bill, it reminds me of a cowboy from my State who was a Member of Congress at one time and who interrupted one of his colleagues to ask a question. And the gentleman was very meticulous in explaining it, and he said, "Now, is that clear to the gentleman?" And my old friend, Oscar Callaway, said, "Yes; just as clear as mud." That is about as clear as this thing is. In the minds of a lot of people in the United States this is going to be a cure-all for all labor troubles when it is passed. It is going to stop all strikes of every kind and character, and if this bill goes to the White House and the President signs it, and there is any labor trouble in the United States after that, some people will say that all labor troubles have not been smoothed out because the President of the United States would not enforce the law. If he should veto this bill and it should pass over his veto, then they will say, "Of course, he is not going to enforce this law, because he was opposed to it." Suppose he vetoes it and his veto is sustained, then all the trouble and difficulties in labor relations will be laid upon his doorstep.

I do not think this bill, as far as I have been able to look into it, is a fair bill, and I am not going to vote for it for that reason.

In closing I want to read to you the thing that they are giving to the men and women who work in this country:

SEC. 502. Nothing in this act shall be construed to require an individual employee to render labor or service without his consent—

That is a great concession—

nor shall anything in this act be construed to make the quitting of his labor by an individual employee an illegal act; nor shall any court issue any process to compel the performance by an individual employee of such labor or service, without his consent; nor shall the quitting of labor by an employee or employees in good faith because of abnormally dangerous conditions for work at the place of employment of such employee or employees be deemed a strike under this act.

Many people may declare many places in the United States unsafe for people to work in.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may desire to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHILBIN].

Mr. PHILBIN. Mr. Speaker, the Congress started out with the commendable objective of equalizing the bargaining position of labor and management and eliminating the abuses of power that have been manifest in some of these relationships. This bill, however, goes far beyond that aim. It is an intricate web of obtuse and often ambiguous legal phraseology. It is likely to produce an administrative nightmare. The clauses relating to elections alone will produce endless confusion and delay in fixing bargaining units and rights.

The pious declarations of adherence to the principle of collective bargaining cannot cover the fact that this bill would make possible widespread frontal attacks upon collective bargaining and upon the right of labor, heretofore recognized, to organize, select representatives of their own choosing, and bargain collectively for legitimate ends. The bill is drawn in such a way as to permit unfair labor practices. It is a breeder of class hatred and a stimulus to class warfare. It will generate dissension and resentment, not only against free enterprise but against the Government.

In the hands of other than the most skillful administrators, its injunctive provisions might well constitute oppression of our working classes and violate their constitutional right not to be compelled to work against their will. It establishes a pattern of regimentation at a time when the country is anxious to escape from the effects of regimentation. If special laws, like this one, can be enacted and enforced drastically regulating the entire field of labor organization and collective bargaining, it is very certain that this measure will be used in the future as a precedent for similar regimentation of industry. We should recognize that this kind of regimentation is pleasing to communistic and Fascist groups. It is just what they want to help weaken our free capitalistic institutions. The bill is bound to fertilize the ground for dangerous social agitation and unrest, of which, Lord knows, we have already had enough. It is regrettable that the Congress has not been able to check antisocial practices that have grown up in labor-management relations without seeking to put a halter around the necks of all our laboring classes, who must be the solid bulwark against subversion in the days and years to come, if this Nation is to preserve its major democratic features.

This bill is retaliatory, punitive, and discriminatory insofar as it covers honest, well-meaning patriotic working people and legitimate fair dealing and responsible leaders, as well as those who have not fully or fairly discharged their responsibilities to their own group and to the public. In seeking to curb the abuses of a minority, we would foist and fasten onerous, repressive controls upon the majority, and this is contrary to the spirit and nature of our free system. During the war we had the spectacle of a similar law passed to discipline and regulate labor being used to oust a prominent businessman from his own office. This measure will undoubtedly bring similar results, because such is the logical outgrowth of arbitrary class legislation.

The world and the country are presently in a most ominous situation. Abroad there is indescribable chaos and the threat of another steadily expanding totalitarian tyranny. Already the war drums are beating. At home we are beset by unhappy, but quite general, perplexity and uncertainty concerning the future of our industry, business, and political and economic status. Our problems never were more serious and compelling than they are today. This is the time for us to present a united front to the world and not the time for frictions, divisions, and suspicions among our own people.

I am not questioning the motives of the proponents of this bill because I believe them to be sincerely actuated by a desire to adjust and straighten out certain obvious maladjustments that confront us. But I certainly question the wisdom at this time, or in fact at any time, of omnibus legislation like this which drives a wedge between labor and management and which gives very many working men and women of the Nation a distinct feeling and conviction that management and government are combining to destroy their organizations, break down their rights of representation, recognition, and collective bargaining and subject them to the same kind of a commissar-guided totalitarian regimentation that exists in Russia where workers and businessmen alike are merely pawns of the economic super state.

I know that this legislation will pass this House, but I deplore the fact that the Congress is resorting to such an unprecedented weapon against our laboring people especially at this critical juncture in the affairs of the country and the world. It augurs no good either for future industrial relations or for the social and economic stability of the country. To my mind it is a retrogressive step, entirely unwise and ill-considered in the circumstances, which merely require a revision of the Wagner Act equalizing the bargaining positions of the parties, laws checking jurisdictional strikes, coercion, and certain types of boycotts, and measures protecting the country against major strikes in important public-service industries.

Again let me say, I deplore this type of labor measure and am very sorry that it has to come before the Congress at this time and especially sorry that it should be passed. Of course, while I desire to vote for certain corrective legislation, I cannot in conscience give this bill my support because I feel so deeply and so keenly that it will redound against the welfare of our country. I am therefore constrained to vote against this bill.

Mr. ROONEY. Mr. Speaker, we have before us this afternoon by far the most important piece of legislation to come before the Eightieth Congress. There is but one single hour's time for discussion of its details, and that time is limited to members of the committee. I am unalterably opposed to the so-called Hartley-Taft bill and shall vote against adoption of this conference report. As I said in this House on April 16, when we originally voted on this bill, by its terms it seeks to turn back the economic clock for the laboring man of America by at least 40 or 50 years. It has, therefore, been conclusively shown that this punitive legislation is the brain child of the National Association of Manufacturers and big business of this country. Every move so far made by the majority party during this Congress—and they are the sponsors of this Hartley-Taft bill—has been to make the rich richer and the poor poorer. I would be unfaithful to the trust reposed in me by the citizens of my congressional district, practically all of whom earn their bread by the sweat of their brow, if I were to support this vicious antilabor bill. I shall again vote against it.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I yield the balance of the time to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HALLECK].

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I am glad to see the very able minority leader of the House come to the defense of the Republican Congress. We have been criticized for not acting with sufficient speed on this and some other measures. Now the country will understand that, for the minority leader at least, we are moving a little too expeditiously.

I did not make the rules that provide the time within which conference reports may be called up after they are filed. Those rules are of long standing. They were here long before I came to Congress. The fact of the matter is that at the suggestion of the minority leader the final bill agreed upon in conference was in the hands of every Member yesterday morning. I personally arranged for each Member to have a copy delivered at his office. I do not know when the minority leader saw the conference report, but the conference report, with the statement on the part of the managers, was printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD that was delivered to my house before breakfast this morning. That any one has not had ample opportunity to examine the bill and conference report is not persuasive. As a matter of fact, along with my many duties, I read today the conference report completely through. Not only that, I kind of checked along with some of the conferees, and I knew from day to day pretty well what was going into this bill. And I have no doubt that many other Members could have done the same thing.

Let us just take a look at this. The people, Democrats and Republicans alike, now demand of the Congress of the United States that we enact some sane, fair, decent, reasonable—and, yes, courageous—legislation dealing with the problems of labor-management relations. That is exactly what we have done here.

On April 17, 1947, more than 6 weeks ago, in the well of this House, I said to you:

> Here and now is the time to say to the American people that, as Members of Congress, we have the courage, we have fortitude, we have the good judgment, and the common sense, to undertake the writing of legislation dealing with these very troublesome problems—

Meaning the problems that have arisen under the National Labor Relations Act during the past 12 years.

On that same day, this House, with a unanimity that is rare when important legislation is concerned, voted, 308 to 107, in favor of H. R. 3020, which undertook, first, to bring industrial peace to the troubled field of labor relations; second, to eliminate unlawful practices that, when engaged in under the guise of collective bargaining, our laws protect; and third, to establish the interest of our people as a whole as being paramount to that of any group, whether of employers or of employees.

Some called that bill drastic. Others said it was a slave-labor bill, but they never state, nor can they, on what clauses in the bill they base such assertions. The fact is that none of those epithets, which are indeed poor substitutes for reasoned judgment and argument, is true in any regard. There was not a line in the House bill that by the furthest stretch of the imagination could be construed as compelling anyone in any job to work 1 hour or any part of an hour against his will, or that deprived him of his pay for services performed. The bill preserved, in language almost identical with the present act, the rights of employees and of unions against employers who, by unfair methods, sought to interfere with the workers' rights or undermine their union.

This bill preserves the guarantee of the Wagner Act giving to labor the right to organize and to bargain collectively.

Speaking of so-called slave labor laws, the only one that I ever saw proposed was that proposed by President Truman, when he asked the Congress to draft into the Army the railroad workers of the country who were then on strike.

The bill we passed did forbid, and provide remedies for, activities and practices by labor, as well as activities and practices of management, that almost everyone condemns. Among these were boycotts, jurisdictional strikes, violence in strikes, strikes in violation of contracts, strikes to compel employers to break the law, coercion of employees by unions. It imposed upon compulsory unionism restrictions far less stringent than those in the Railway Labor Act, under which the railroad brotherhoods have flourished for years. It preserved the constitutional guaranty of free speech. It provided for separating the functions of the Labor Board, required the Board to decide cases before it according to the facts, and gave to the courts real power to review the Board's decisions. And it put the public interest in maintaining output so essential to our national well-being above the selfish interests of employers or of employees.

These clauses, I am glad to say, still are in the conference report. In form, many of them differ from the form in which they appeared in the House bill. But they are in the report now before the House, and in effective form.

Now these are not provisions that destroy unions. Those who say they will destroy unions say, in effect, that unions, in order to exist, must be free to coerce workers, to engage in violence, to break their contracts and to break the law, even the very law that protects them. I say this is not true. The great trade-union movement, which protects so many of our people and which has contributed so greatly to raising their standard of living, can and will thrive under the bill now before us. That is my conviction.

No one in this House expected our bill to come back from conference intact. In addressing the House just before it passed H. R. 3020, I said that the passage of the bill was just "the initial step in a legislative process," and that the bill would go through many more steps before it was finally enacted into law. The bill has gone through those steps. We now have received the conference report and the statement of the House managers. The result is a fair compromise, evolved in the American legislative tradition. It is representative government in action in which the views of people who differ must be harmonized.

The report is, even to those who wished for a more far-reaching result, more than a good start; and, by providing for further study by a joint commission of Congress of problems arising in the labor relations field, it makes certain that problems that it does not deal with will not be forgotten.

I recall that the minority leader, in closing the debate on the Hartley bill when it was before us, expressed the hope that a bill would come out of conference that he could support. This conference report is a fair bill, and until today I had hoped that he would join not only with the overwhelming majority of the Members of the House but with the clear majority of his colleagues on his own side of the aisle in making this bill law. I am disappointed to find that he will not support it.

One further thing: Last November after the election the President said these words:

> The people have elected a Republican majority to the Senate and to the House of Representatives. Under our Constitution, the Congress is the lawmaking body. The people have chosen to entrust the controlling voice in this branch of our Government to the Republican Party. I accept this verdict in the spirit in which all good citizens accept the result of any fair election.

Now, there has been a great deal of talk about a veto of this bill. If the House had passed this bill by the votes of one party, there might be some justification for this kind of talk. The President might then feel that the majority party had ridden roughshod over the minority. But the majority that passed this bill was a bipartisan majority. More Democrats voted for it than voted against it.

In these circumstances, where the majorities of both parties have voted for a more far-reaching bill than the one we have before us now, and where they have done so in response to the insistent demand of the overwhelming majority of our citizens, and where the welfare of our country requires such a law as we now propose, I say to you that talk of a veto reflects upon the good faith of the President in pledging his cooperation with Congress, as the law-making body, last fall.

I, for one, do not think that reflection is justified or is fair to the President. I do not think the President will veto this bill. But, veto or no veto, I say to you that this House must and will keep faith with the American people. This bill will become law.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Indiana has expired. All time has expired.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may extend their remarks.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit the conference report.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. LESINSKI. I am opposed to the bill, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Mr. LESINSKI moves to recommit the conference report to the committee of conference.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

Mr. LESINSKI. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Forty-five Members are in favor of ordering the yeas and nays. There are 351 Members present, not a sufficient number.

The yeas and nays were refused.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LESINSKI) there were—ayes 55, noes 246.

So the motion was rejected.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report.

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, on that I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 320, nays 79, not voting 30, as follows:

CONFERENCE COMMITTEE ON WOOL BILL

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following communication, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

JUNE 4, 1947.

Hon. JOSEPH W. MARTIN, Jr.,
Speaker, House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. SPEAKER: This is to advise that it will be necessary for me to resign from the conference committee on the wool bill. I am leaving the city today for a few days' rest upon doctor's orders.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN W. FLANNAGAN.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the resignation is accepted.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ZIMMERMAN] to serve on the conference committee on the wool bill, and the Senate will be notified accordingly.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. LANE asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks in the RECORD in three instances and to include three resolutions.

Mr. HAVENNER asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD in two instances, in one to include a newspaper article.

Mr. ROONEY asked and was given permission to extend his remarks in the RECORD and include two newspaper editorials.

EVANS FORDYCE CARLSON

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks at this point in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

Mr. BLATNIK. Mr. Speaker, in Arlington Cemetery today the body of Brig. Gen. Evans F. Carlson will be buried with the military honors that befit one of the foremost heroes of World War II.

Every American knows his story. They know of his courage and of his ability to lead and inspire men. They will long remember Evans Carlson, the man who organized, trained, and led Carlson's Raiders, a military unit unique in modern American history.

Evans Carlson, professional soldier that he was, threw away the book in forming his Raiders. He had a name for his system. It was Gung Ho—work together—a name he had picked up in China where as a Marine intelligence officer he soldiered with the famous Eighth Route Army.

Actually Gung Ho was an ideal old as mankind's struggle for liberty against tyranny and aggression. Carlson's Yankee forebears had it at Concord when they took up muskets to fight for liberty in the American Revolution. It was present, too, in the underground movements of Europe wherever people united democratically to rid their native lands of Fascist aggressors.

ABOLISHED CASTE SYSTEM

There was no caste system in Carlson's Raiders. What was good enough for the lowest Raider private was good enough for the officers who led them.

Evans Carlson believed that men who knew what they were fighting for and why were better soldiers, so he mixed 50-mile forced marches with political indoctrination. He encouraged his men to ask questions. He and his officers gave straight answers. When the Raiders went on a military operation they knew what they were doing and why. Carlson's Raiders were the most feared as well as the best informed fighting organization in the Pacific.

The Raiders proved the effectiveness of Carlson's training technique in their first military action. They kept on proving it right up to the time that the high command broke them up and scattered the battalion's officers and men through the Marine Corps.

They proved it on Makin Island when a handful of raiders wiped out an enemy garrison many times their number. They proved it again on Guadalcanal when Evans Carlson led his men through steaming, fever-ridden jungles, wiping out enemy forces in guerrilla action and finally relieving sorely pressed American troops at Henderson Field.

The three Navy Crosses and the many other military honors he won on the field of battle speak for Evans Carlson, the soldier.

CITIZEN AND SOLDIER

It is Evans Carlson, the citizen, a courageous fighter in and out of uniform for the rights and dignity of man, that I wish to eulogize today.

Evans Carlson, professional soldier, veteran of both World Wars, a by-the-book marine who soldiered in Nicaragua and China, never forgot that he was first and always a citizen. Never did he regard war as an end in itself.

Twice in his lifetime he felt it necessary to lay aside his uniform, and, as an American citizen, go forth and speak out for ideas he believed worth fighting for. The son of a New England clergyman, Evans Carlson was always a deeply religious man.

As a Marine officer he saw native people of Nicaragua fight well and effectively against overwhelming odds for the right to manage the affairs of their own country. Later in China he observed at first hand the heroic struggles of the common people of that nation against aggression. What he saw in China impressed him immensely. So much in fact that he felt it necessary to resign his commission and return to America in a vain effort to rouse his countrymen by speeches and articles to the danger of our short-sighted policies in the Orient—policies that permitted us to ship scrap iron and petroleum to Japan while we wept inky tears over the rape of Nanking.

HE DIED FIGHTING

When he donned his uniform for World War II, Evans Carlson was convinced that he was fighting in the final world conflict.

Wounds, fever, and the tremendous mental and physical strain of nearly 4 years of war that carried him into the thick of battle on Makin, Guadalcanal, Tarawa, Kwajalein, and Saipan hastened Carlson's death. Even his courageous Yankee heart could not withstand such strain.

Yet, as death neared, he had the will and the desire to speak out as a citizen-soldier on issues he believed important to his country's and to all men's welfare. He spoke out strongly against American interference in China and opposed any American policy of dictating in the internal affairs of other nations. He believed, most devoutly, that there should be no barriers between peoples of good faith.

Evans Carlson was a soldier's soldier. He was and always will be an American's American.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

Mr. POULSON asked and was given permission to revise and extend his remarks.

TREASURY AND POST OFFICE APPROPRIATIONS, 1948

Mr. CANFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H. R. 2436) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year 1948, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none and appoints the following conferees: Messrs. CANFIELD, DIRKSEN, GRIFFITHS, ROBERTSON, GARY, BATES of Kentucky, and WHITTEN.

AMENDING THE NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Mr. HARTLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of House Concurrent Resolution 52.

The Clerk read the concurrent resolution, as follows:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3020) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, to provide additional facilities for the mediation of labor disputes affecting commerce, to equalize legal responsibilities of labor organizations and employers, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to make the following correction: In the matter in parentheses in the section designated as "Sec. 15" in title I, change the figure "10" to "11."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

The concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. LODGE, for June 5 and 6, on account of official business.

To Mr. DEVITT, for June 9 to 11, inclusive, on account of official business.

To Mr. SMITH of Ohio (at the request of Mr. MCGREGOR), for 10 days, on account of illness.

HENRY CHUDEJ

The SPEAKER. The Chair lays before the House the following request, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KILDAY requests, pursuant to rule XXXVIII, leave to withdraw from the files of the House papers in the case of H. R. 4526, for the relief of Henry Chudej, individually, and as guardian of Jeanette Jurecek, a minor, Seventy-ninth Congress, no adverse report having been filed thereon.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill of the House of the following title, which was thereupon signed by the Speaker:

H. R. 1. An act to reduce individual income-tax payments.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the Senate of the following titles:

S. 135. An act to legalize the admission into the United States of Frank Schindler;

S. 565. An act to amend section 3539 of the Revised Statutes, relating to taking trial pieces of coins;

S. 566. An act to amend sections 3533 and 3566 of the Revised Statutes with respect to deviations in standard of ingots and weight of silver coins; and

S. 583. An act to authorize the exchange of lands acquired by the United States for the Silver Creek recreational demonstration project, Oregon, for the purpose of consolidating buildings therein, and for other purposes.

S. 993. An act to provide for the reincorporation of Export-Import Bank of Washington, and for other purposes;

S. 1022. An act to authorize an adequate White House police force; and

S. 1073. An act to extend until June 30, 1949, the period of time during which persons may serve in certain executive departments and agencies without being prohibited from acting as counsel, agent, or attorney for prosecuting claims against the United States by reason of having so served.

BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. LECOMPTE, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on this day present to the President, for his approval, a bill of the House of the following title:

H. R. 1. An act to reduce individual income tax payments.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. HALLECK. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 54 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until tomorrow, Thursday, June 5, 1947, at 12 o'clock noon.

SENATE

THURSDAY, JUNE 5, 1947

(Legislative day of Monday, April 21, 1947)

The Senate met, in executive session, at 12 o'clock meridian, on the expiration of the recess.

The Chaplain, Rev. Peter Marshall, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Our Heavenly Father, if it be Thy will that America should assume world leadership, as history demands and the hopes of so many nations desire, make us good enough to undertake it.

We consider our resources in money and in men, yet forget the spiritual resources without which we dare not and cannot lead the world.

Forgive us all for our indifference to the means of grace Thou hast appointed. Thy Word, the best seller of all books, remains among us the great unread, the great unbelieved, the great ignored.

Turn our thoughts again to that Book which alone reveals what man is to believe concerning God and what duty God requires of man.

Thus informed, thus directed, we shall understand the spiritual laws by which alone peace can be secured, and learn what is the righteousness that alone exalteth a nation.

For the sake of the world's peace and our own salvation, we pray in the name of Christ Thy revelation. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

On request of Mr. WHITE, and by unanimous consent, the reading of the Journal of the legislative proceedings of Wednesday, June 4, 1947, was dispensed with, and the Journal was approved.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages in writing from the President of the United States submitting nominations were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Miller, one of his secretaries.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Chaffee, one of its reading clerks, notified the Senate that Mr. ZIMMERMAN had been appointed a manager on the part of the House at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 814) to provide support for wool, and for other purposes, vice Mr. FLANNAGAN, excused.

The message announced that the House had disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 2436) making appropriations for the Treasury and Post Office Departments for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and that Mr. CANFIELD, Mr. DIRKSEN, Mr. GRIFFITHS, Mr. ROBERTSON, Mr. GARY, Mr. BATES of Kentucky, and Mr. WHITTEN were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House had agreed to the following concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 52), in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That in the enrollment of the bill (H. R. 3020) to amend the National Labor Relations Act, to provide additional facilities for the mediation of labor disputes affecting commerce, to equalize legal responsibilities of labor organizations and employers, and for other purposes, the Clerk of the House is authorized and directed to make the following correction: In the matter in parentheses in the section designated as "SEC. 15" in title I, change the figure "10" to "11."

Passed the House of Representatives June 4, 1947.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ITALY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of Executive F (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Italy, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The parliamentary situation is as follows: The Senate is proceeding under a unanimous-consent order that at the hour of 2 o'clock p. m. the Senate, without further debate, shall proceed to vote upon any motion, amendment, or reservation that may be pending, or that may be made or proposed with respect to the treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, and upon the question of ratification of the said treaties in the order named.

There is nothing in the unanimous-consent agreement which divides the time between now and 2 o'clock. The Chair suggested at the conclusion of the session yesterday that, as a matter of fair play, he would like very much to undertake unofficially to divide the time equally this afternoon until 2 o'clock between the proponents and the opponents; and, unless there is objection, the Chair will undertake to pursue that course. The Chair hears no objection.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD an article by Walter Lippmann which appears in the press of today. I have taken it from the Washington Post. The article is entitled "A Plea for Prudence," and it bears directly upon the question which is now before the Senate.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A PLEA FOR PRUDENCE

(By Walter Lippmann)

The situation in Italy and in central Europe has taken a decided turn for the worse just as the Senate is dealing with ratification of the satellite treaties. Yet it seems to me that what has happened is, if we examine it, a reason, though it runs counter to our feelings, for prompt ratification (which is what Secretary Marshall and Senator VANDENBERG want) rather than for delay.

The new situation is marked by two connected events—one of them in Budapest and one in Rome. In Hungary and in Italy there have been until recently, and, indeed, since the armistice, coalition governments. Now there is in Hungary a government which the Communists dominate. In Italy there is now a government in which the Communists and Socialists are not included, against which they are in open opposition and perhaps in actual rebellion.

What makes the situation so dangerously difficult is that the Communist-Socialist opposition to the present Italian Government draws its main strength from the industrial areas of northern Italy, which are separated only by an imaginary line from Yugoslavia and Hungary. The stage is, therefore, set, the lines of communication have been opened, for Soviet support of an Italian revolutionary opposition to the De Gasperi government in Rome.

Moreover the political restraint upon the Italian opposition has been reduced, by the fact that the De Gasperi government does not represent the legally elected majority in the legislature.

It follows that the frontier between Italy and the Soviet orbit has now become more important than it was when Mr. Byrnes was negotiating the Italian treaty. The basic issue is, however, no longer what it was; that is to say, where the frontier should be drawn and who should have Trieste and Istria. The question now is whether any international frontier can be established and maintained which will separate the revolutionary opposition in northern Italy from its allies in Yugoslavia, Hungary, and the Soviet Union.

The ratification of the treaty will establish an international frontier which is legally binding upon all the United Nations. The violations of that frontier would then be a question for the United Nations. If, however, the treaty is not ratified, the dividing line will be merely the present armistice line which is held by British and American troops. For this reason it seems to me that we have the greatest interest in a prompt ratification of the Italian treaty, and of the others which are grouped with it. For this will broaden the responsibility for the maintenance of law and order to include all the United Nations. Delay, on the other hand, which in present conditions may be tantamount to rejecting the treaty, would put upon us, with such help as the British could give, the sole responsibility for maintaining the territorial integrity, and maybe even the independence, of Italy.

That would, I believe, multiply the risks and greatly increase the burden which we have assumed. No doubt we shall have to supply the economic support for Italian relief and recovery. But what we must seek to avoid is finding ourselves in a position where an Italian Government, opposed by great masses of Italians, is sponsored and supported by the United States alone.

That would be ruinous to the Italian Government, since it would be pictured as a minority government and a puppet of the United States. The State Department has already laid itself open to that line of attack, which the Soviets will surely pursue, by its effusive and clumsily timed endorsement of the new De Gasperi government.

Europe cannot be saved from Soviet domination or from economic collapse and anarchy by a series of unilateral American interventions. The supreme problem which confronts Secretary Marshall is to extricate the United States from the consequences and the commitments of a spasmodic unilateralism and to get it replaced by a European policy—which we can promote, induce, and support but cannot initiate and impose—of reconstruction and unification and stabilization.

We are in grave danger not of withdrawing into isolation as in 1919 but of advancing into isolated interventions all over the globe. We are not strong enough or wise enough to do that successfully, and we shall squander our influence, our power, and our resources if we attempt it.

Thus we should not have a United States-Italian policy, as we now seem to have, but only an Allied policy in which Great Britain and France, at the minimum, have an equal moral and political responsibility. For to have an American-Italian policy is not a true policy of international cooperation but in the literal and worst meaning of the word an "entangling alliance."

We are too far out front in too many places. We are taking on ourselves too many problems. We are making too many quick decisions. We are accepting too many moral commitments. We are striking too many attitudes.

For our own good and for the sake of peace most of these things should be shared in the process of decision, shared as to political responsibility, with other governments. For otherwise we may find that Uncle Sam is the head of the parade and that everybody is out of step but uncle.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Connecticut is recognized. How much times does the Senator desire?

Mr. McMAHON. I will not need more than 7 minutes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair unofficially recognizes the Senator from Connecticut for 7 minutes.

Mr. McMAHON. Mr. President, I shall vote to support the motion to delay ratification of the Italian Peace Treaty until January. This treaty is labeled as a treaty of peace with Italy. We must eventually have a formal peace treaty, I suppose, but we really need no treaty to put us at peace with the vast majority of the Italian people. It is true that under the domination of a despotic and totalitarian regime Italy went to war against us, but it is likewise true that when she could loose her chains and bonds she joined as a valiant ally in aiding us to a victory in arms. And the victory which she helped to bring was shared by the sons and daughters of Americans of Italian blood who served by the hundreds of thousands in our own armed forces. To one who will but come with me and gaze upon the honor rolls of my State I will show score after score of names indicating their Italian blood—and many of them, Mr. President, are written in gold. The people of my State know that John Basilone, of New Jersey, dead, and Henry Mucci, of my State, alive, typified the courage and loyalty and bravery that was unsurpassed by that of any others of our American soldiery.

This treaty is at the perimeter of our peace problem. I believe that its ratification or nonratification will have little effect on the permanent peace of the world. Whether we ratify the treaty or whether we do not, we are going to have to see to it that Italy does not fall into the hands of a Communist conspiracy such as has overtaken Hungary. If we should permit Italy to become a Communist satellite it would be only a matter of weeks before France would fall into Moscow's orbit, and if that happened, the Soviets would have accomplished that which Hitler set out to accomplish, and which we spent 300,000 lives and $300,000,000,000 to stop.

Mr. President, we engaged in the last war because we were attacked and because we realized that Hitler astride Eurasia meant eventual and perhaps successful marshalling of superior resources and manpower to accomplish our defeat and obliteration. We can no more permit that to happen under Mr. Stalin than under Mr. Hitler.

There are two prime problems which must be successfully solved if we are to avoid a third and last world war. These two problems involve the effective control of atomic energy, and the reconstitution of Europe as a going concern. I have spoken much about the effective control of atomic energy, because I am convinced that the ultimate test of Russia's intentions toward the rest of mankind lies in her attitude on this subject. Unhappily and tragically our offer to share mankind's potentially greatest material achievement has been not only turned aside, but almost finally turned down. I say again that if we cannot solve this problem within the United Nations we will have to solve it nevertheless, and it is high time that we begin to formulate an alternative policy. Some 3 weeks ago I suggested what the alternatives were from which we must choose. I shall not longer pursue this matter now, for I intend to discuss it here at length in the next few weeks.

Suffice it to say that the United Nations will suffer a grievous and perhaps fatal blow on the day the curtain is rung down on a failure of the atomic energy discussion in the United Nations just so surely as Japan's unmolested invasion of Manchuria in 1931 heralded the beginning of the end of the League of Nations.

Mr. President, Europe disaffected, disunited, starving, and hopeless, will fall into the eager and more than willing hands of Moscow.

We must realize that we must prevent it, and to happily prevent it, we need a concord with Russia on Germany. The late conference at Moscow was a complete failure, and there is certainly little ground now for hoping that we will be more successful in the next Foreign Ministers' Conference in London in September.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it would be good judgment for us to delay at this critical juncture the ratification of the Italian treaty and the three treaties which are to follow it.

Conditions today in Italy are little short of desperate. We have been talking for 9 months about giving the Italian people aid so that they can sustain a democratic way of life. Unless we hurry up and give it to them, it may be too late.

The Communist Party of Italy is today, according to information which I believe to be reliable, equipped with tanks and machine guns—especially in the North. It is exceedingly well-financed by the loot which it took from Mussolini's crowd, and which it stole in Istria and Trieste. I am frankly fearful that if we withdraw our troops now, we will lay the country open to Hungary's fate.

Events in the next few weeks may disclose which way the cards will fall in Italy. Certainly a withdrawal now will not lend encouragement to those in Italy who are combating with might and main the Communist forces.

We have gone to the aid of Greece and Turkey, Mr. President, because we did not wish them to be engulfed. We are obligated to withdraw from Italy 90 days after ratifying this treaty, which may permit Italy to suffer the same fate.

Russia has advanced into Hungary. We enter upon a retreat in Italy. That retreat may well signal the taking of Italy, too.

Would it not be the better wisdom to delay until we ascertain the prospects of a German treaty this fall?

After all, Russia has yet to ratify these treaties, and now that she has taken Hungary, she ma not ratify the Hungarian treaty.

Any worth-while plan for the convalescence of Europe must include Italy. If we cannot plan for that convalescence with Russia next September, we must plan it without her. The ratification of this treaty cannot help in that convalescence—in fact, it may hinder it.

Yet, Mr. President, if the motion to delay shall be defeated, I shall vote reluctantly to ratify the treaty. I refuse at this juncture of world affairs to repudiate the signatures of our plenipotentiaries, because I know that such a repudiation would be heralded and trumpeted by the Soviets from one end of the world to the other. Insidious comparisons would be drawn between now and 1920. The peoples of Europe would be told that we were again going to withdraw, and they might lose heart and thereby lose all.

I believe that our action might give the Soviets the excuse to withdraw from our atomic energy negotiations and from any and all attempt to settle the German problem. The Italian treaty is not a good treaty, but we are told—and I believe it—that it is the best we could get. As the lesser of two evils, I shall vote to ratify the treaty, but I am firmly of the opinion that we should delay action on it for a few more months.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, in the 10 minutes allotted me, I desire to make some observations on the pending peace treaties and to state some of the reasons why I feel impelled to vote against their ratification.

VOTED FOR LOAN

I voted for the Greek-Turkish loan because I believed at long last the United States had decided to stop its policy of appeasement of Communist Russia and to stand firmly on the principles of the Atlantic Charter, which had been so cynically disregarded by the Allies, ourselves included, from the day they were enunciated to the day the President made his speech on the Greek-Turkish loan.

Belated as that decision was, I felt that we could hold our heads up again as the champion of the rights of peoples of the world to live their own lives free from fear of an aggressor and under a government of their own chossing.

REASONS FOR SUPPORT

In my speech made April 22, supporting the Greek-Turkish loan, I made the following declaration:

Mr. President, I am voting for this bill with the belief and the hope that this is only the first step; that we shall now come back to the first principles as set forth in the Atlantic Charter not only in Greece and Turkey but in China; that we will reverse the action we took in that nation recently when we decided not to take sides as between the Nationalists and the Communists, but decided to get out; that we will redeem our promise made to the Koreans that they shall have their independence; that we shall refuse to make any more agreements with Russia until she gives some evidence that she is willing to honor and respect the agreements she has already made from the days of the Atlantic Charter down to the present time; that as a logical outgrowth of that stand we shall not ratify the treaty with Italy which renders Italy defenseless for a long time to come against a constant threat of the Communist Tito and his government which is a satellite of Russia; that with respect to Germany we make no further agreements of any kind with Russia respecting that nation until such time as Russia honors her past agreements; that we lay all of the facts on the table before the United Nations.

Let us also declare it as our policy that we expect to honor all our agreements and expect other nations to do likewise; that we shall be glad to help Russia attain any of her legitimate ambitions and her necessities by peaceful means. In fact, let us declare to her that as we are a Christian Nation, we shall be willing to abide by the doctrine of the Christ, known as the Golden Rule.

By taking this stand, Mr. President, I sincerely believe we can stop the present ideological war and prevent a shooting war of World War III. Halfway measures, in my opinion, will not do. We must go the full distance. This is a case which requires the boldest of action. By any other method I believe we court disaster, and I say this notwithstanding the fact that we have the atom bomb.

POSITION STILL THE SAME

Mr. President, after reading the record of the hearing before the Foreign Relations Committee of this body, after careful appraisal of the present situation, and in the light of today's events in Hungary, I see no reason for changing from the position I took at that time. In fact, the debates I have listened to in this Chamber on these treaties, and the recent events in Europe have convinced me that the stand I took was not only right then but it is right now.

MUST STAND FIRM

For instance, Mr. President, I firmly believe that if we had served notice on Russia months ago that we would stand for no more aggression, and said it in such a way that Russia would have no doubt that we meant it, the taking over of the Government of Hungary by the Communists would not have happened.

In connection with this subject, there appeared in yesterday's Washington Star an article written by Constantine Brown, a well-known student of foreign affairs. I shall not read the article now, but I ask unanimous consent to have it printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

RUSSIA'S COUP IN HUNGARY HELD PROOF SHE CAN'T BE STOPPED WITH SHOESTRING

(By Constantine Brown)

The ineffectiveness of the American Government's efforts to forestall successful completion of Russia's coup against the Hungarians is driving home in Washington the fact that it is impossible to fight communism on a world-wide scale on a shoestring.

Reviewing the events by which Russia has dragged the Magyar Republic behind the "iron curtain," it will readily be seen that no strong American policy was ever applied to the situation in a way which would give Russia to understand that no further expansion of her sphere in Europe would be tolerated.

Communist intentions became quite clear last winter, when the first steps toward conversion of Hungary into a Moscow puppet were taken. At the time Hungary was in a sort of no man's land. She could have been diverted into either camp. She had a predominantly conservative government, made up for the most part of members of the Smallholders' Party, but including some Communists in key positions where they could defy the majority elements in the government. A Communist was mistakenly permitted to head a military-police department of the War Ministry and with this authority the coup began in January.

First event was the rounding up of a large number of politicians, army officers, and other officials on the charge that they were involved in a plot to restore the regime of Admiral Horthy, Hungary's Nazi-serving prewar regent, when Russian troops left the country in accordance with the Hungarian peace treaty. Although the fictitious character of this plot was readily apparent, 13 persons were tried on the charge and several were sentenced to death.

CREDIT WASN'T IMPRESSIVE

The American Government was not swift to act on the warning signals, and when it did act, limited itself to granting Hungary a credit of $15,000,000 for the purchase of American surplus supplies in Europe. Premier Ferenc Nagy, now deposed by the Russians because he refused to make himself their puppet, was hardly impressed with such a paltry sum as evidence of the United States intention to stand firmly against the further advance of communism in Russia. Nor could the mass of Hungarians be expected to be impressed.

When, on March 12, President Truman announced his doctrine of American resistance to the spread of communism, it provided for aid only to Greece and Turkey. Nothing was said or done to forestall what was apparent months ago, namely, that Russia intended to secure Hungary behind the "iron curtain" before the peace treaty became effective.

Perhaps it was felt in Washington that with Russian troops occupying all of Hungary and Communists holding key positions in the Government—despite their numerical inferiority both in parliament and the cabinet—the country was already written off to Russia. Perhaps it was felt that it would take actual armed combat to dislodge the Soviet masters from Budapest. Whatever the reasoning, Hungary was permitted to fall completely into Russian hands with little more than a gesture of opposition from the United States.

TROOPS MAY BE ASKED TO STAY

Moreover, the peace treaty is, in effect, already nullified by Russia's act in forcing out Premier Nagy and other Smallholder Party officials, for a pro-Russian government in Budapest now can request Russia to keep her troops in the country beyond the 90-day limit set for evacuation of the Soviet armed forces. If Russian troops remain, the United States will have no legal leg to stand on in protesting.

Russia appears still able to move unhindered from conquest to conquest. She has now established her lasting dominance over the first large non-Slavic nation in Europe. All her other puppets—except tiny Albania—are either Slav nations or so heavily infiltrated with Slavs—such as Bulgaria—that they may be regarded as Slavic. The eastern zone of Germany has, of course, only a small minority of full-blooded Slavs, and it is hoped that Germany eventually will be recreated. Thus, the Hungarian victory represents the spread of Slavic communism to the non-Slavic western-oriented region of Europe.

Italy and France hang in the balance, with Communists excluded from both Governments and their reaction still awaited. If American policy proves as ineffective in those two cases as in the case of Hungary, we will have real cause to worry.

VOTE AGAINST RATIFICATION

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. President, I shall vote against the ratification of these treaties with the greatest reluctance. I have great respect for the judgment of Secretary Marshall and the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee and for other members of that committee, but I cannot close my eyes to the fact that the policies of the administration with respect to the prevention of recent aggression in the world are not succeeding. To me this is crystal clear and needs no demonstration. It is true beyond all argument. Hungary is only the latest example. France and Italy are on the verge of falling into the Communist orbit, and the Hungarian episode may be repeated in those countries before parties to the treaties have time to ratify them.

REASONS FOR VOTE

In conclusion, Mr. President, I summarize some of the reasons, among many others which might be urged, why I shall vote against ratification:

First. The treaties are premature. The European situation is so complex and confused that it is practically impossible to do justice and adhere to reason in a piecemeal fashion. What will be done in the German and Austrian Peace Treaties will have a profound effect on all the Axis satellites as well as the Allied countries. The significance of the deliberations and negotiations respecting treaties with Germany and Austria will overshadow all that is done now. Postponement of action on the treaties now being considered will strengthen our hand in these later negotiations. The events in Hungary are strong and urgent reasons why the peace with Italy and the satellite countries should not be ratified at this time.

VIOLATES ATLANTIC CHARTER

Second. The Italian treaty violates every principle of the Atlantic Charter. The fact that all the representatives of the Allied Nations had a hand in drafting the treaty does not give it any special virtue. The action only reveals how far the Allied Nations have departed from the high ideals with which they are supposed to have fought the war.

INCONSISTENT WITH AID PROGRAM

Third. The Italian treaty is totally inconsistent with the announced purpose of the United States in extending aid to Greece and Turkey when in furtherance thereof we send $400,000,000 to aid those countries in strengthening their economic and military forces to prevent Communist aggression from within and without. In the Italian treaty we render Italy helpless to repel outside aggression, and saddle her with economic servitude. It is doubtful that the military forces we have allowed her are sufficient even to maintain order in case of a Communist uprising. The very terms of the treaty requiring the leveling of fortifications, the limit on modern weapons, and the size of the forces allowed, are ample proof that this is true.

Figuratively speaking, we expect Italy to defend herself with bows and arrows against rockets and atomic bombs and weapons undreamed of which the cunning of man will yet invent.

DENIES SELF-PRESERVATION

Mr. President, the first right of every human being born into this world is the right of self-preservation. Who gave the prerogative to the Allies to deprive the Italian people of this God-given right?

ITALIANS IN DESPERATE SITUATION

That liberty-loving Italians face a desperate situation, with Tito and Stalin glaring at them across an undefended border only a few short miles away, should be apparent to Americans, but it seems to make very little impression here. We say, "Let them rely on the United Nations," an organization we know, to our regret, is now totally impotent.

It might help us to recall that in order to defend ourselves against the only potential enemy in sight—an enemy separated from us by two oceans and some 3,000 miles away from the heart of our homeland—we are asked to appropriate over $11,000,000,000, and a commission of able men are urging us to adopt a universal military training program to cost $1,750,000,000 annually. Who is that potential enemy may I ask? It is the same one that faces undefended Italy.

Mr. President, I feel impelled to say that we shall live to regret a ratification of these treaties.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. McGRATH] is recognized for 2 minutes.

Mr. McGRATH. Mr. President, I have given the matter of the Italian Peace Treaty most serious and earnest consideration, and have concluded that ratification is in the best interests of both the United States and Italy. There are, of course, many things contained in the treaty which are repugnant to our sense of justice, but I am satisfied that without this peace treaty Italy will drift aimlessly for years to come.

I have listened to the arguments on both sides and believe that ratification of the treaty will open the door to a quick admission of Italy to the United Nations. Once within the United Nations, and with our help, she will be able to aid herself far more than we could hope to aid her while she remains outside. There is the further consideration that the admission of Italy will add one more strong voice on the side of the democracies in that Council. We should not pass up any opportunity to strengthen the voice of democratic peoples in the United Nations.

In addition to the foregoing, I have not been able in this instance to justify the substitution of my personal judgment for the advice of every expert in the field of international relations, upon whom our country is dependent in these crucial days.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Jersey [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for 12 minutes.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, it is my purpose to vote for the ratification of the pending treaties, and in making this brief statement with regard to the Italian treaty I am including the other treaties as well. It is my considered judgment that this question is a larger one than can be taken into our comprehension by merely a brief debate here on the Senate floor. I have been very much impressed by the arguments of those opposing the treaty, but I think we have not yet had adequate comprehension of the over-all picture.

Mr. President, after World War I it was a deep conviction of mine that the troubles that would bring about World War II would come from the area of the Balkan States, the area from the Baltic Sea to the Mediterranean, down through that section of states which are involved in these treaties. It is because I feel that conditions in that area are of vital importance and that the once enemy nations who are parties to these treaties need adjustment and settlement of their difficulties and problems as promptly as possible, and because I want to see those areas brought immediately under the jurisdiction of the United Nations, with United Nations responsibility, that I believe ratification of the treaties is imperative.

Mr. President, I speak as one who comes from a State which has a very large Italian-American population. I think there are in excess of 150,000 Italian-Americans among my constituents, many of whom are close friends of mine, many of whom are opposed to the ratification of the treaty, but for the good of the Italian people themselves, for the good of the future of Italy, for the good of the future of Europe, for the whole United Nations cause, I feel that the ratification of these treaties is imperative.

Mr. President, at the hearings before the committee, when Secretary Byrnes was with us, I asked him a question which sums up so much the feeling I have with regard to the perspective of this proposition, that I am going to read my question to Mr. Byrnes and Mr. Byrnes' answer. I said to Mr. Byrnes:

> Mr. Secretary, from my study of the Balkan situation over the years I have come to the conclusion that we all have, that many of our world wars have been originated in those areas. That has been due, as I see it, to two things. One is the denial of basic human rights and fundamental freedoms in those competing countries, to the arbitrary types of dictatorships we have seen there, and that sort of difficulty.
> I was interested to see in your report, on page 6, this expression: "Other benefits granted to the people of the ex-enemy states assure"—and I emphasize the word "assure"—"the maintenance of their basic human rights and fundamental freedoms. These clauses constitute an international obligation, and assure other states the right to see to it that they are maintained."
>
> I think that is so profoundly important in the light of the area with which we are dealing that I would be interested in just a little further elaboration from you as to just how that assurance is to be brought about.
>
> Mr. BYRNES. It has the same assurance that every other provision in these treaties has. You will recall that we placed great importance upon it, and as far back as Yalta we undertook to have the three powers agree as to these freedoms. This is different. The ex-enemy state itself has solemnly obligated itself in this agreement to assure the fundamental freedoms. It is endorsed by the United Nations signing these treaties. It is the strongest assurance that I can think of.
>
> Senator SMITH. I am entirely in accord with it. I am glad to hear your emphasis upon the importance of that feature, because there we are going to have our future trouble if we have any, from the disaffections among those people themselves.
> Mr. BYRNES. I agree.

I mention that because there are two ways to look at this problem. We can leave the situation as it is, in its present chaotic condition, or we can have these treaties, which were so carefully prepared, ratified, and made a part of the whole international structure, and especially the United Nations picture.

I invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that we are not dealing with a treaty between the United States and Italy. I was very much impressed by the argument of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY] yesterday, but I felt that he was arguing as though the treaty were something which the United States alone could consider and modify. As pointed out by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] when he opened the debate on this question, these treaties were prepared by representatives of a group of countries which, if the treaties are ratified, will be bound by their terms whether they actually carry out those terms or not. We are making a big advance by having commitments from countries affected in these areas, by the fact that the Danube, for example, is made an avenue of free passage, and that there are no restrictions on the free use of the Danube; and by the fact that the countries affected are parties to the treaties and to the guaranty of the freedoms to which I have referred.

One party to the various treaties is the group known as the Allied and Associated Powers, consisting of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, China, France, Australia, Belgium, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Brazil, Canada, Czechoslovakia, Ethiopia, Greece, India, the Netherlands, New Zealand, Poland, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Union of South Africa, and the People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. The other party is Italy, in the particular treaty before us, and Bulgaria, Hungary, and Rumania, in the respective treaties relating to those countries.

In the treaties themselves it is provided that they shall go into effect when the four great powers—Russia, the United States, Great Britain, and France—shall have ratified them, and they shall be binding upon the other countries when ratified by them, respectively. The thing we should bear in mind is that this is a successful attempt, after weeks and months of negotiations, to obtain an agreement among the group of important countries controlling and affecting the entire Danubian area, the area of danger so far as future wars are concerned, to certain fundamental principles and freedoms which are laid down in the treaties in identical terms.

The clause I am about to read appears in all the treaties. We can laugh it off if we will; but for the first time in history countries whose representatives have at least initialed the treaties, and which will undoubtedly ratify them if we do so, have agreed to these principles. Article 15 of the Italian treaty—and the identical provision is carried in the Hungarian, Bulgarian, and Rumanian treaties—reads as follows:

> Italy shall take all measures necessary to secure to all persons under Italian jurisdiction, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, or political opinion and of public meeting.

Those fundamental guaranties have been arrived at by this group working arduously—by our own representatives, the Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] and the Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY], working with former Secretary Byrnes during many months of negotiations. Progress has been made toward bringing this whole area into the picture of United Nations responsibility.

If we, who have been the initiators of this plan, do not support it and set the example by ratification, if the United States does not take the lead in an aggressive and positive way, recognizing that this is another step forward in the direction of international collaboration for the preservation of the peace, naturally the other nations will not ratify the treaties, and the condition of chaos will continue, as is evidenced by what has happened in Hungary.

Mr. President, I take issue with those who say that more trouble will come to Italy by the ratification of the treaty than otherwise. The only hope I see for Italy is to be made an independent state, a state which can be recognized and brought into the United Nations organization, a state which will ultimately become a part of the Federation of Western Democratic Europe in the only kind of an association which can prevent the chaos and economic collapse now threatening in Europe.

The United States is expected to take a position of aggressive leadership in support of our continuing policy of aiding the United Nations in its program to bring those countries together, to bring order out of chaos, and to promote economic recovery.

Mr. President, I shall support ratification of the treaties because I feel that we have a great responsibility to take a position of leadership and to point the way to the other nations of the world.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the pending Italian treaty, including the provision for the payment by Italy of $360,000,000 to four foreign nations as reparations, definitely sets a 7-year slave-labor policy for the Italian Nation, and I shall show that it could cost this Government $1,000,000,000 during that period to support the 198,000 Italian laborers who could be required in discharging Italy's obligations. In addition, the necessary processing of raw materials to fulfill the obligations undertaken through the approval of this treaty could well require more than 18,000 highly paid Russian foremen to supervise the 7 years' work, and their salaries could be deducted from the increased value of the manufactured products. Thus, the amount of required work to discharge the reparations obligations could well be greatly increased.

Mr. President, this was the way the pyramids were built. In my humble opinion, the United States of America cannot afford to be a party to such an agreement. Certainly the slave-labor provisions of this treaty have little resemblance to the ringing slogans "making the world safe for democracy" and "the four freedoms" coined for World Wars I and II.

Mr. President, let me show how much this treaty could cost the Italian Nation in slave labor and the United States in money.

The latest wage statistics for Italy are for December 1946. At that time the skilled industrial worker in the northern Italian industrial area was paid 595 lire per day. This daily wage consisted of four special payments added together, some of which were borne by the Government rather than by the private employer. The four special payments were as follows:

	Lire
Daily base wage	232
Special cost-of-living allowance	185
Special allowance	60
Family allowance	118
Total	595

This daily wage of 595 lire is the wage of an employee having four dependents—a wife and three children.

The official lira rate of exchange is 225 lire to the dollar. The free rate of exchange is between 500 and 600 lire to the dollar. At the official rate of exchange of 225 lire to the dollar the Italian skilled laborer is being paid the equivalent of $2.65 per day. At the free rate of exchange of 550 lire to the dollar Italian skilled labor is being paid the equivalent of $1.08 per day. Italian skilled labor without dependents, however, receives only 477 lire per day, which is the equivalent of 87 cents per day. For general purposes of calculation, it can be assumed that the average Italian skilled laborer today receives the equivalent of $1 per day at the free rate of exchange.

AMOUNT OF ITALIAN LABOR REQUIRED AS REPARATIONS IN PEACE TREATY

Article 74 of the pending treaty provides that Italy shall pay the Soviet Union and the states of Albania, Ethiopia, Greece, and Yugoslavia a total of $360,000,000 in reparations during a period of 7 years. These reparations are to be paid out of Italy's current production through the countries concerned furnishing the raw materials and Italian wage earners furnishing labor valued at $360,000,000 without pay or subsistence of any kind.

The amount of labor required to pay off these reparations at $1 per day would amount to 360,000,000 man-days of labor. On the basis of a 5-day week, or 260 working days per year, it would take 1,385,000 Italian laborers, working a full year to pay off the $360,000,000 of reparations. Or, if paid off during a 7-year period, it would require 198,000 Italian skilled laborers, working full time for 7 years, to pay off the reparations due.

Since the product of 7 years for the 198,000 Italian skilled laborers would be turned over to the 5 countries mentioned for purposes of reparations, it would be necessary for someone to finance the economic support for 7 years of this body of laborers.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. WHERRY. The Senator's statement is on the assumption that the complete reparation bill will be paid in 7 years at the rate of $15,000,000 per year. Let me ask the distinguished Senator a question. In addition to what he said with reference to the number of laborers necessary to be employed to pay off the reparations, there is always the question of the valuation of the raw materials which are being shipped in and of the fabricated materials which are being shipped out. Is not that correct?

Mr. MALONE. That is correct.

Mr. WHERRY. There is a strong possibility under such circumstances that it would be not 7 years but 14 years before the reparations were paid. Is not that correct

Mr. MALONE. Yes. I thank the able Senator from Nebraska. As I pointed out, it would require, in order to supervise the work, probably 14,000 Russian skilled laborers or foremen and their salaries could be fixed at any amount. I see nothing in the treaty to prevent that being done, and that could be added to the amount which I have mentioned. Furthermore, $360,000,000 amounts to nearly $50,000,000 a year instead of $15,000,000.

Mr. WHERRY. If the Senator will yield further, what was the Senator's estimate as to the food which would be required to feed those laborers?

Mr. MALONE. It could cost almost a billion dollars for the 7-year period for someone to board and clothe and take care of 198,000 Italian laborers for the 7 years.

Mr. WHERRY. Where does the Senator think the source of that food will be found?

Mr. MALONE. There is only one source of money in the world today. Since the war we have paid out approximately $17,000,000,000 to countries throughout the world, including countries which it was said were about to go communistic. There is only one source of money, and that is Uncle Sam.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. The Senator has stated the number of Russians who will be forced upon Italy in order to supervise the work. Does the Senator think that Russia would send over naive, innocent Russian people to do this work, or does he think they might conceivably be members of the Communist Party, specially trained agents, to further disrupt and communize Italy?

Mr. MALONE. I thank the able Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. I submit that Russia would not do a thing like that. Of course Russia would not send Communist agents to Italy; of course she would not try to communize anyone.

Mr. MALONE. I thank the able Senator from Mississippi. A little further along I shall show that the treaty provides that the military forces of Britain and of the United States are to be withdrawn from Italy within 90 days after the treaty is ratified, but it does not specify that Russian troops cannot be utilized to supervise construction. Therefore, not only will there be the number of foremen I have stated, who would be required to supervise the work and who no doubt would follow the policy of the Soviet Union, as indicated by the able Senator from New Hampshire, but there could be Russian troops there during the entire period. That is the way countries are falling into communism all over Europe.

Mr. EASTLAND. I think the distinguished Senator from Nevada is exactly right and I think the distinguished Senator from New Hampshire is exactly right. I believe that is what will happen. The argument has been made that Italy would be better off if troops were withdrawn and she became a member of the United Nations and that it would be to the advantage of the United States to have another friendly vote in the United Nations organization. But I submit, Mr. President, that within a period of 2 to 5 years we shall find a Communist vote for Italy in the United Nations organization if she is admitted, because—and there can be no mistake about it—the ratification of this treaty and the withdrawal of our soldiers will certainly throw Italy into the arms of communism.

Mr. BRIDGES. Will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. I think that what the Senator from Mississippi has said is absolutely true, that the ratification of the treaty means the driving of Italy into the arms of the Communists; and when a Senator stands on the floor and says that we should provide the leadership and lead the way, I say we are leading Italy completely into the arms of communism all along the line. It is asinine to say that Italy's admission into membership in the United Nations organization would give us another friendly vote in the United Nations. How can her vote be friendly when, as a result of our action, we make Italy communistic? Of course, the vote of Italy then will be sympathetic to Russia and to the Russian satellites.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. There would be the same kind of vote as that now cast by Yugoslavia and Poland.

The argument has been made that the Italian people favor this treaty. I was amazed yesterday to hear the distinguished minority leader, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], make the statement, and reiterate time and again, that the Italian people want this treaty ratified. Mr. Constantine Brown, a noted columnist, is an authority on foreign policy. He has recently returned from Italy. I should like to read to the Senator his statement regarding the views of the Italian Government on this question. I read from his article which appeared in the Washington Star on May 11 of this year:

The Italian Government accepted the treaty under duress. The Italian people do not like it at all. When Premier Alcide de Gasperi returned to Rome from America last February he conferred immediately with the newly arrived American Ambassador in Rome, James Clement Dunn, and told him he could not sign the treaty—

Note that, Mr. President. He could not sign the treaty—because it would leave Italy helpless both economically and physically.

Listen to what happened:

Mr. de Gasperi changed his views within 24 hours, however, after he had a long conversation with the British Ambassador in Rome and with Palmiro Togliatti, chief of the Italian Communists, and then a member of the Italian Cabinet.

The Premier later explained to close friends that he was compelled to change his mind because the British diplomat had warned him that failure to sign the treaty not only would keep Italy out of the United Nations—

Think of that, Mr. President—if the Italian Premier did not sign the treaty, Italy would be kept out of the United Nations—but also would make it impossible for her to obtain loans and assistance from the western Allies. Mr. Togliatti is said to have threatened a general strike and other forms of disturbance if the treaty were not signed.

Just think of that, Mr. President. The head of the Communist Party in Italy, the representative of Stalin in Italy, threatened to call a general strike and to engage in other forms of resistance unless Italy signed this treaty. And then some Senators are naive enough to say that Communist pressure is not behind the move for ratification of the treaty, and that ratification of this treaty would not promote world communism.

I read further from the article:

Premier de Gasperi yielded to the British and Communist pressure and since then he has taken the official position that he would like to see the treaty ratified and out of the way. In private, however, the Italian Premier is as much opposed to the treaty as he was on his return from America.

Mr. MALONE. I thank the able Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. President, to return to the question of the able Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. BRIDGES], let me say that during the course of my remarks I shall show that Italy is being driven into the hands of the Soviet Union because the Italians can obtain raw materials only from Russia, and the Russians are allowed to keep their supervisors in the form of an army in Italy and are also allowed to supervise the work the Italians do on the raw materials sent into Italy by Russia.

As to the British influence, which I shall outline later on in my remarks, I merely say at this point that not only is there no provision to prevent Britain from dumping her manufactured goods into Italy, but there is a provision to prevent Italy from setting up any barrier against manufactured goods from Britain. Therefore it is in the interest of the British Government to have this treaty approved, so that the British may have an additional dumping ground for their manufactured products.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. BRIDGES. Some very amazing statements have been made on this floor by Senators who favor ratification of this treaty. In order to be consistent, a Senator who is in favor of ratification of this treaty with Italy, which will force Italy into the arms of the Communists, should ask us to repeal the action taken in giving aid to Greece and Turkey. I was one of the Senators who favored giving aid to Greece and Turkey; I was in favor of doing that then, and I am in favor of it now. I am consistent; I am against communism all along the line, both yesterday and today; I am opposed to patting Communists on the back.

Mr. President, we in this country must come to the time when men will stand up and be counted and not attempt to carry water on both shoulders. Certainly that time is coming.

I predict that within the period of 1 year I shall be able to stand on the floor of the Senate and quote from the speeches of various Senators who now favor the ratification of this treaty, and shall be able to show that the statements they made in favor of it were ridiculous. Mr. President, the events which will occur during the next 12 months will prove that to be so.

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, this treaty is in contrast to our avowed purpose of sending the $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey. I voted against doing that simply because I saw no comprehensive international plan which had been prepared and geared to our international economy, not because I was opposed to having a little money go to Greece. My position was and is that in distributing our money drop by drop all over Europe, without having any well-formulated plan, we simply waste the money, and next year the same countries will be as bad off as they are this year. But, Mr. President, taking the announced objective as a serious one, the avowed purpose of the President was to stop Russian communism at the border of Greece, was it not?

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct.

Mr. MALONE. Then, to the contrary, the treaty now before us has the avowed purpose of turning the Italian industrial machinery and a part of the Italian productive capacity over to Russia and one of her satellites for 7 years. Such a purpose is in direct contrast to the purpose of the Greek-Turkish loan.

Mr. BRIDGES. That is correct.

Mr. EASTLAND. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield to me?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. EASTLAND. It is stated that Secretary Marshall is in favor of the speedy ratification of this treaty, for the assigned reason that it would be futile to negotiate further with Russia if we do not approve the present treaty recommendations of the executive branch of our Government. Let me say that I can readily understand that viewpoint; but I think that by now we should certainly be convinced that Russia is not going to agree to anything, and that further conferences with Russia are futile. Whether we like it or not—and God knows I do not like it—the world in the future will be two worlds, a democratic world and a Communist world. We must draw the line, we must take a stand against communism. We must prevent the spread of communism. It is certainly important that we do so. The whole theory of the Greek-Turkish loan was to preserve the Mediterranean Sea for the western powers; and thus it is important that Italy, which controls the Mediterranean Sea, not fall within the Russian orbit.

Mr. President, the way to prevent Italy from falling within the Russian orbit is for us to maintain an army in Italy, to maintain the American flag there, until the Italian economy is sufficiently rejuvenated and until Italy is put on her feet economically to the point where she can weather the Communist storm and can resist Communist efforts. But I think Secretary Marshall is doing a futile thing when he thinks and hopes that we are going to do business with Russia. Of course, we can get promises; but a promise from Stalin or a promise from Molotov or a promise from Tito, as history already shows, is absolutely worthless.

Mr. MALONE. I agree with the able Senator from Mississippi that if we are going to give aid to Greece and Turkey and are going to send men there to help train their armies and to assist them economically, then if any nations are to maintain any supervisors or military forces in Italy, we should be among those nations.

I wish to say, in passing, that today everyone in the world knows—certainly the school children know—that there are not 5 great powers or 4 great powers or 55 great powers in the world, but there are only 2—the United States and Russia. Whenever one of those great powers—whether it be the United States or Russia—does not want a certain thing to be done, that thing will not be done in this world.

Everyone must know by now that England is making separate trade treaties with other nations. She has just completed a separate trade treaty with Russia, by means of which Russia will furnish raw materials and England will act as the manufacturing center and will be able to furnish Russia with many munitions of war, including jet airplanes and other things. Mr. President, in a case in which our interests apparently are at stake, to say that we should not make a separate treaty with Italy or with any other country, in my judgment, simply does not make sense.

Let me now return to the discussion of the cost of supporting the 198,000 Italians during the time that the reparations provisions of the treaty are being fulfilled by them. The latest cost-of-living data for Italy shows that in December 1946 the cost for a typical family was $60, of which 80 percent went for food. This $60-per-month cost-of-living figure was derived by applying the average dollar lira exchange rate applicable to export trade at that time, amounting to about 375 lira per dollar. This would amount to $11,880,000 per month, or $142,560,000 per year. For the full 7-year period the total dollar cost would amount to $997,920,000, or approximately $1,000,000,000.

Mr. President, we have already expended, the record shows, more than three-quarters of a billion dollars since July 1, 1945, and about one hundred and twenty-six million of this amount since the beginning of this year. The breakdown of appropriations for that purpose shows the United States agencies administering such relief.

Mr. President, I submit the break-down for the RECORD, to have it printed at this point in my remarks, and I ask unanimous consent for that purpose.

There being no objection, the compilation was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

United States aid to Italy by various Government agencies since July 1, 1945

A. PERIOD JULY 1, 1945–DEC. 31, 1946

UNRRA (United States portion), Italy	$265,401,792
Italian eastern Mediterranean islands	1,347,709
Lend-lease fiscal operations (relief supplies distributed by Army)	111,979,781
Office of Foreign Liquidation Commissioner (property credits)	160,000,000
Maritime Commission (property credits)	20,437,660
War Department:
Italy (relief ended June 30, 1946)	86,010,404
Venezia Giulia, until June 30, 1946	6,291,286
Venezia Giulia, second half year 1946	3,866,837
Udine, until June 30, 1946	4,466,774
Udine, second half year 1946	3,018,958
Total	662,821,201

B. PERIOD JAN. 1, 1947, ONWARD

Export-Import Bank	$105,000,000
Maritime Commission	16,787,441
War Department relief, first quarter 1947:
Venezia Giulia	882,856
Udine	2,722,842
Total	125,393,139
Grand total	788,214,340

Mr. MALONE. Mr. President, the table shows that UNRRA has given, from July 1, 1945, to December 31, 1946, more than $265,000,000. It shows that for lend-lease and relief supplies during that period we sent more than $111,000,000 to Italy. It shows that the War Department spent about $105,000,000. The total was $662,821,000.

For the period following January 1, 1947, the Export-Import Bank furnished $105,000,000; the Maritime Commission more than $16,000,000; the War Department, again, more than $3,500,000.

These figures do not include American Red Cross, private relief, or the portion to be expended from the special relief fund of $350,000,000 to six countries, one of which is Italy.

In analyzing practically all the treaties, gifts, and so-called loans and other dealings with foreign nations that have come before this Senate during the last 5 months, there has been no semblance of a coherent American international plan geared in any way to our national economy. The only conclusion possible is that we are following someone else's plan, and the strong suspicion is that we are actually following blindly the 50-year-old British imperial trade program, which has long been designed, through manipulations of the currency of the world through the sterling bloc, Empire preferential rates, and other devices, to benefit the British Empire.

It is well known that Italy, as well as Greece, is under the domination of the British. It is high time that we prepare a plan of our own to build up these nations and make them self-supporting, and not subject them to slave labor for the benefit of nations pointed out through Presidential messages as our potential enemies.

The consequences of that slave-labor plan proposed for Italy through this treaty could throw that country back hundreds of years and make it impossible for this Nation, or any other, to put her on a self-supporting basis within any reasonable time.

As a matter of fact, with $100,000,000 for the Soviet Union, and for Yugoslavia $125,000,000, the total is $225,000,000 for the Soviet Union and her satellite nations.

The only coal normally available in Europe for export is in Germany and in England. But Germany, since the end of the war, has not been able to produce enough coal for her own industries, and today is turning out only approximately 50 percent of her prewar production, and we have shipped coal direct to England from the time the war ended. Therefore, the main source of coal for Italy and other nations to be used for industrial production is from the United States. Therefore, the cost of the coal would again be added to the American cost.

The record shows that the index of Italy's industrial production follows the chart of the available coal and power supply.

As this point, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a State Department report comparing the index of Italian industrial production to her fuel supply during a large part of 1946.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From January to September 1946, production showed a gradual and steady improvement. The index of industrial production rose from 27 in January to 65 in September, which was the highest peak reached during the year. However, during the last quarter of 1946 a marked decline brought the index to the low level of 52 in December. No data are as yet available for January and February 1947, but it is certain this trend has continued.

This deterioration is due primarily to the lack of coal and of electric power. It is known that during 1946 UNRRA provided 4,500,000 tons of coal, while total imports of coal from all sources were 5,500,000 as against a prewar average of about 12,000,000. In January only 359,000 tons arrived, just enough to cover railroad needs and the needs of some very important industries. According to recent estimates February coal arrivals amounted to 622,000 tons. Stocks of coal declined from 300,000 tons on December 31 to 230,000 tons in January. The situation as regards coal supplies is expected to improve in March. The shortage of coal has been aggravated by the shortage of electric power, especially in the north where industry is concentrated. During January and February, electric power was available to industry only for 2 days a week. In some cases factories were closed for periods of from 8 to 10 days.

The shortage of the two most important sources of power has resulted in a decline in production, in growing unemployment and labor unrest and may have been responsible in part for the recent price increases, illustrating the degree to which the recovery of the Italian economy depends upon a regular supply of coal and electric power.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I listened to the remarks of the distinguished minority leader, the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BARKLEY], yesterday, when he said that we must keep the faith, or words to that effect, in the ratification of the pending treaty. The Senator from Kentucky, the distinguished minority leader, was the majority leader of the Senate during the administration of the War President, Franklin D. Roosevelt. I wonder whether the Senator from Nevada thinks that the treaty which is before us for ratification, containing the terms he has so ably outlined, is in line with what President Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt, the then majority leader's great leader in this country, said. On June 4, 1944, after the fall of Rome, President Roosevelt declared:

The Italians, too, forswearing a partnership in the Axis which they have never desired, have sent their troops to join us in our battles against the German trespassers on their soil.

In October he said:

To the people of Italy we have pledged our help, and we will keep the faith.

That is what Franklin D. Roosevelt said. I wonder whether some of those on the other side of the aisle, the Democratic Members of the Senate, when they come to vote on the ratification of the treaty, are going to stand behind Franklin D.

Roosevelt, who told the people of Italy that we would keep the faith.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. BRIDGES. I have not the floor.

Mr. MALONE. I yield to the Senator from Maryland.

Mr. TYDINGS. It is not necessary to have the Democrats behind Franklin D. Roosevelt. If the Senator from New Hampshire and other Republicans are going to stand behind him, he will be well taken care of.

Mr. MALONE. On June 5, 1944, President Roosevelt did assert the right of a free Italy opposed to fascism to enter the community of nations on equal terms.

Mr. BRIDGES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield to the Senator from New Hampshire.

Mr. BRIDGES. I shall be much interested in noting how Senators on the other side of the aisle, these Democrats, back up what their great war President said at that time. I was not always in agreement with Franklin D. Roosevelt, I opposed him many times, but I think it is the duty of the party on the other side to back up their war President in the statement he made:

> To the people of Italy we have pledged our help, and we will keep the faith.

Senators cannot dodge those words. Any Senator on the other side of the aisle who votes for the ratification of the treaty is repudiating the words and the pledge of their great war President, Franklin D. Roosevelt.

Mr. TYDINGS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Nevada yield?

Mr. MALONE. I yield.

Mr. TYDINGS. Being what might be termed an anti-New Deal Democrat, it is a rather unusual event in my life to find my friend, the able Senator from New Hampshire, a New Deal Republican.

Mr. MALONE. In answer to the able Senator from Maryland I may say that pretty nearly anyone has to be right part of the time.

Mr. TYDINGS. When is the Senator going to start?

Mr. MALONE. It is also of interest, in reference to this treaty, to realize that we have broken our word to the Italians, who were assured by both Churchill and Roosevelt that they would not be subject to any of these humiliations.

Within the past few days the Communists have taken over control of the Government of Hungary, and the news dispatches this morning indicate that we are practically in an undeclared war with Russia over control of Hungary. Why, then, should we pay the Russians reparations anywhere at any time, and to any country, either directly or indirectly, where we ourselves have no opportunity to profit by such transaction, while opposing them in other sectors?

As a matter of fact, within the last few weeks England has closed a trade treaty with the Russians, and such treaties are in progress with other nations, and probably to a much greater extent than the news dispatches indicate. Under the Russia-England trade treaty Russia is to furnish England the raw materials, and England will be their source of manufactured goods. This will undoubtedly mean many articles furnished Russia that she could use in war with us, such as jet planes and other munitions, and including industrial and other equipment, while we are financing England directly and Russia indirectly in the furtherance of such treaties.

We are at this time shipping power machinery and oil-refinery equipment with which they can manufacture high-octane gas and other munitions. We are today repeating the mistakes and blunders made in 1939 and 1940, when we continued the shipments of scrap iron and oil, and then sent the boys out in the Pacific Ocean to catch that scrap iron with their bare hands coming back out of Japanese guns. It is time we made up our minds.

One of the major weaknesses of the Italian Treaty is that it leaves all questions unsettled, including primarily the matter of the economic rehabilitation of Italy.

The growth of communism in Italy is largely the result of the growth of economic chaos. The Italian economy cannot exist unless it is integrated with the economies of Europe. This applies particularly to Italian industry, where the coal supply is short, and where no iron or other fundamental requirements are available. The treaty leaves Italy shut off from Europe and places it foremost among those nations compelled to blackmail the United States with the threat of ultimate communism unless we provide the funds required to keep the nation going.

Under section 4, article 23, Italy renounces all right and title to Italian territorial possessions in Africa. These have been taken over by the British, and are in fact, though not in name, British possessions. The same applies to article 33, section 7, where Italy agrees to recognize and respect the sovereignty and independence of Ethiopia. Under this euphemism the British have grabbed Ethiopia and are treating it as a conquered territory, and the Ethiopian King as a quisling prince, who has no choice but to accept the situation. The Italian Army is drilled by British officers.

British cartel interests own the oil and other native resources of the country, and the entire area is being treated under a barrage of British advisers and experts as an area to be exploited for British benefit.

The curious provisions in reference to reparations raise the great question as to whether a general understanding on the economic level does not exist between the Soviet Union and Great Britain growing out of the recent economic trade agreements that have been negotiated between the Russians and their satellite, Poland, and Great Britain. By these trade agreements Russia exchanges raw materials for machinery and other finished products, and under any circumstances this is calculated to make the Russians strong at the moment when we are accusing them of being aggressive. It is to be noted for example that under reparations the Russians are granted a share of the Italian factory and tool equipment designed for the manufacture of war material.

I do not understand the logic which grants the Russians Italian factory equipment designed for the manufacture of war material. The Russians did not fight in Italy, and have no proper claim there, certainly not a claim to instruments of war. The granting to the Russians of reparations in the amount of $100,000,000 while at the same time granting the United States nothing is not only ridiculous but unworkable. It means that our present policy of putting economic pressure on Russia and her satellites is being in this instance reversed, since in actual practice this is exactly the reverse policy.

Moreover, the material comes from the Italian industrial establishment and presumably will include the tools, dies, and even machinery of that industrial establishment itself.

Provision 3 states that "The quantities and types of goods to be delivered shall be the subject of agreements between the Governments of the Soviet Union and of Italy" and that this should be handled in such a way as to avoid interference with the economic reconstruction of Italy; and the Russians can be selective in their demands on the Italian economy and are thus in a position to put intense pressure on the Italian Government for political ends, if they so desire, simply by a threat of wrecking essential industries unless other unwritten demands are acceded to.

The statement that this will be done so as not to place additional liabilities on other allied or associated powers is a joker. There is no way in the world for any part of this to be done without placing an additional burden upon the United States of America, which has already undertaken the support of the world.

Italy is not self-supporting but is in chaos, and this treaty furthers the chaos. Moreover, since the United States has participated in a huge loan to Italy this year, we are in the neat position of underwriting these reparations to be furnished to the Soviet Government, including the war material already referred to.

It is also of interest in reference to this treaty to realize that we have broken our word to the Italians, who were assured by both Churchill and Roosevelt that they would not be subject to any of these humiliations and punitive actions. On the liberation of Rome, June 5, 1944, Roosevelt asserted the right of a free Italy opposed to fascism to enter the community of nations on equal terms.

This treaty will make a powder keg of Italy ready to blow up with the rest of Europe. What we require, as has been asserted many times by our leaders and slogan-makers, is a well organized, democratic Europe. It is bad enough to break our word to Italy, but to then finance it all verges on lunacy and is simply unbelievable.

Paragraph 2 under section D of part 8 also makes the provision that the foregoing undertakings by Italy shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in commercial treaties concluded by Italy before the war. This means that if some favored-nation treaty existed discriminatory to the balance of the United Nations obviously the United States will not be the beneficiary; and my belief is again that the beneficiary is Great Britain; in short, that Great Britain will hold a privileged position there.

This would appear to play directly into the hands of Great Britain, which is in a position to exploit Italy to the limit as a dumping ground for its own manufactured goods and is required to do nothing in return.

There are many British troops in Italy, both in and out of uniform. The exact number I am unable to obtain, but they are there and Great Britain is also entrenched in economic position and is backing the forces of the old aristocracy, including the cartelist forces which have always been and are still inimical to the best interests of the United States and its purposes.

The British troops must be removed, under the treaty, within 90 days, but there is no provision for removing Russian troops. They may remain indefinitely. This is one way in which communism is spread—through Russian armies of occupation. The ceding of Italy's natural resources, principally coal and hydroelectric power, mainly to Yugoslavia, plus the fact that under the reparation clause Italy is now required to seek raw materials from Russia, tie the Italian economy tightly to that of Russia and Yugoslavia, making her helplessly subservient to Russia.

I am unable to bring myself to believe that the chairman and other members of the Foreign Relations Committee understand the full import of this treaty. I refuse to believe that they would approve the document if they fully understood that the treaty gives to Yugoslavia, a puppet nation of the Soviet Union, all but one of Italy's already small supply of coal mines. These are located in Venezia Giulia and make up a part of what is known as the Istrian Peninsula.

I cannot believe that they understand and realize the full effect of giving to France and Yugoslavia practically all of the hydroelectric power of the Italian nation.

I cannot believe that the committee fully understands the implication of throwing the Italian nation further into the hands of the Soviet Union through the slave-labor provision and further destroying their individual economy while the almost unprecedented growth of communism in Italy, reaching more than 200,000 members in the last several months, has been due almost entirely to the already existing economic chaos.

The treaty is full of "sleepers." The implications are almost impossible of interpretation. For example, under part 8, article 82, section B, it is stated:

> Italy shall make no arbitrary discrimination against goods originating in or destined for any territory of any of the United Nations as compared with like goods originating in or destined for the territory of any other of the United Nations or of any other foreign country.

Italy is today one of the worst hotbeds of communism in western Europe. It does not make sense to make a "Stop Russia" loan of $400,000,000 to Greece and Turkey and then support reparations to Russia through a semicommunistic nation such as Italy, supported by the United States Treasury. News dispatches only yesterday carried the story that communism in Italy has grown from a small underground force at war's end into a well-organized membership of over 2,000,000.

It is a foregone conclusion that Italy as a nation cannot support the 198,000 workers for 7 years, to pay the reparations, to process raw materials to the amount of $360,000,000 for the Soviet Union, Albania, Ethiopia, Greece, and Yugoslavia.

The record shows that the United States in various forms has put out approximately $17,000,000,000 in support of the nations of the world since the war ended. It is obvious that no other nation could support the workers of Italy unless we first financed them. Therefore, the conclusion is inescapable that the United States of America must, and will, feed and clothe the 198,000 workers for the 7 years necessary to pay the reparations, and our computations show that with the present rate of exchange and the subsistence wages paid in Italy it will cost approximately $1,000,000,000 during that time to do the job, which will in no way assist the Italian Nation to become self-supporting.

The conclusion we must reach, after reviewing the actions of our Government over a period of 5 months, is that we have no coherent plan for rehabilitation of Europe, Asia, or any other area, since we send $400,000,000 into Greece and Turkey to stop the Russians and then sign a treaty that forces us to spend one-quarter of a billion dollars in support of labor in the production necessary to pay the Russian part of the reparations. There are many other examples of this aimless policy, and it simply does not make sense.

It is my opinion that the proposed treaty should either be defeated by the Senate of the United States or sent back to the Foreign Relations Committee for further study and reconsideration of its terms.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the indefinite division of time, the time of the opponents is exhausted. The Senator from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY] is recognized for the remainder of the time of the proponents.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator from Texas yield for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. I know that the Senator wants the time that is left, but I merely wanted to ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a statement which I intended to make on the subject of the treaties, but which the time remaining does not permit me to make. I therefore ask unanimous consent that my statement may be printed in the RECORD before the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, in connection with my vote on the pending treaties with Italy, Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary, I have been strongly opposed to some of the conditions of these treaties on the ground that no treaty will actually lead to peace, if it imposes upon any people hardships which destroy their initiative and hope for the future.

It is said that "Hope crushed to earth will rise again," but hope crushed to earth too many times finally, in desperation, seeks any course regardless of the consequences.

What we are seeking is peace, and it is unfortunate that all our partners, in making the peace, cannot or will not recognize that the way to stop future wars is by supervision, inspection, and control, which will prevent any nation from again preparing for war without the knowledge of the world.

The way to stop wars is not to crush the hopes and spirit of great masses of people who had little or nothing to do with the making of war in the past.

I would like the people of the United States to know that the burdens upon Senators, under existing conditions, are so great that no Member of the Senate has the time to study carefully and know the necessary things about all the subjects which come before the Senate for action.

The complex problems before the Senate make it necessary for each of us, in some cases, to rely upon the knowledge and recommendations which come from those in authority in our Government, and those particularly charged in the Senate with the study of a given subject.

I find myself today in just that position regarding these treaties. I know something about them—possibly as much as some others in the Senate know—but very certainly less than others in the Senate know because of their long application to the subject.

This means to me that I must take into consideration the recommendations of the President of the United States, the recommendations of the Secretary of State, Gen. George Marshall, and the unanimous recommendation of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee.

It means that I must accept, in good faith, their recommendations that this is the only way to start toward a solution of the problem of peace and reconstruction in Italy and these other countries.

Even these authorities say it is not what they would like, but it is the best solution under all the conditions. In other words, it is the better of two courses, neither of which is completely satisfactory to the United States.

The chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee expresses on behalf of the United States great friendship for the Italian people and the hope that when peace is established, a way may be found for them to rebuild themselves and revitalize their nation and become a member of the United Nations.

I have known the Italian people intimately and know a little about their trials and tribulations over the past 25 years. I have known from my visits to Italy that the people rejoiced in Mussolini at first. Then, after a few years, they began to wonder about him and finally found themselves powerless to shake him off, until he had led them into war, suffering, and misery, and finally was exterminated by the results which he created.

In the end, I shall probably vote for the confirmation of these treaties. But I must say I am voting with serious misgivings because of the changed conditions that have come about in Hungary, and because of my conversations with some very intelligent Americans connected with our Government who have been traveling through the satellite countries of Europe.

Before I close, I want to say that nothing but justice, righteousness, and fearlessness will ever serve as a foundation for continued peace.

No organization in the world—not even the United Nations, which has the support of the great majority of the right thinking nations of the world—can possibly be successful if it permits any member to continue daily to flout the principles and objectives of that organization without calling that nation to account.

No man and no nation can stay in an organization with a partner whose hands are dripping with blood without being condemned by right-thinking people for staying in the organization with such company.

I know people say, "What would you do? Must we not be patient and try to bring all the nations into consonance and unity?" My reply to that is that patience is a great virtue, unless it is carried to excess, in which event it becomes a sign of weakness and imbecility.

There is something more important in front of us than to be improperly patient or to indulge in appeasement beyond a certain point.

We have a responsibility to the hundreds of thousands of our dead and wounded, and that is to keep faith with the objective we told them they were fighting to accomplish. We must keep faith with it on time—before it is too late.

If I vote for these treaties in the end, I shall do it in the hope that not only the United States of America but every other country in the world which believes in justice and a live-and-let-live policy, will watch the events which come from the making of these treaties, so that wherever and whenever we find it necessary and possible to change the terms, so as to accomplish the great objective of peace based on a live-and-let-live policy, we will take the initiative in rectifying any wrongs coming from these treaties which we have made based on knowledge now dimly seen through clouded glasses.

So that there may be no misunderstanding of my position, I shall vote for the motion offered by the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] to postpone action on these treaties until January 25, 1948.

I shall so vote because of the conditions which have occurred within recent days in Hungary which have been set before the Senate so far as they are now known, but not with the degree of clarity which I think the representatives of the people of the United States should have on the subject before they take this action.

The very fact that the representative of the Hungarian Government in the United States has refused to return to his homeland, that he does not recognize the newly created Hungarian Government which has been established by means of intimidation, threats, duress and underground work, and that he has requested sanctuary here should cause every American to pause and think.

If the motion to postpone action is defeated, I shall then vote for the treaties as recommended to us by the President of the United, the Secretary of State, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee in its unanimous action, and important representatives of the Italian people themselves.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Texas yield for that purpose?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business.

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] is absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. LUCAS. I announced that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] and the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] are absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a delegate to the thirtieth session of the International Labor Conference to be held at Geneva, Switzerland.

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER] is necessarily absent.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, the question before the Senate is the ratification or the rejection of the Italian and satellite-nation treaties. The matter has aroused considerable debate and much keen interest. A great dramatist in one of his plays had one of his leading characters say, "To be, or not to be; that is the question." That is the question before us today—whether the pending treaties shall or shall not be ratified.

Mr. President, the Italian treaty was arrived at, as has already been mentioned in the debate, after many weeks of the most toilsome labor on the part of the delegates of the United States and the delegates of other countries, particularly at the Conference of the Four Foreign Ministers. Of course that is not a commanding reason why we should ratify the treaty. As was suggested yesterday by the distinguished Senator from Nebraska [Mr. WHERRY], we have the power, as well as the right, if we should see fit, wholly to reject the treaty. Every Senator's vote is his own. However, the facts which I mention are worthy of consideration. The Foreign Ministers' Council and the representatives of the other Allied Nations which formulated the peace treaty are all much more familiar with the terms of the treaty than any Member of the United States Senate could possibly be; and I say that without derogation of the knowledge and information of the Senate. They are not only acquainted with the particular terms of the treaty, but they are acquainted with the processes through which the treaty was arrived at. They know the counterplay, as it were, over the terms of the treaty. In my judgment these facts should be quite persuasive with Members of the United States Senate.

The treaty was rendered necessary by the fact that Italy was an enemy state during the great war which happily has come to an end. It was a question of either having a treaty with Italy or not having a treaty. We were not the only parties to the treaty. The other nations represented in the Council of Foreign Ministers, as well as the 21 nations which were allied with us during the war, had a voice in writing the treaty, and have an interest in its terms and provisions.

Mr. President, it was largely on the insistence of the United States that the treaty, after it was tentatively agreed upon by the Council of Foreign Ministers, was submitted to the representatives of 21 nations associated with us in the war on the opposite side from Italy. That peace conference, as we call it, voted to support the treaty. Of the 21 nations involved, 20 of them, besides Italy, signed the treaty. Italy's signature has already been attached to the treaty. She has not ratified it, but she has signed the treaty, along with 20 other nations which were involved in the war.

What does the treaty do? As has been stated, the treaty provides for reparations to the extent of a total of $360,000,000. But, as has already been pointed out in this debate, through the efforts of the United States, Great Britain, and others, the mountainous demands of certain nations for reparations were radically scaled. They were cut to the quick, and the total reparations are now only $360,000,000. There is complaint as to the amount of reparations. I feel that it would be impossible in another peace conference to reduce the reparations below the figure contained in the treaty.

There is complaint about the boundaries set forth in the treaty. Other than the African colonies, very little territory was taken from Italy by this treaty. A small strip of territory on the border line, in which there is some power development, was taken from Italy and given to France.

What were the motives for such action? Why was the territory taken from Italy? It was because that particular area was a strategic area which Italy had employed to attack France. Senators will remember the classic words of President Roosevelt when he said that Italy had stabbed France in the back. That is why the territory was awarded to France. It was to take away the strategic advantage which the territory gave to Italy in attacking France.

As to the electric power in that area, it is provided by the treaty that Italy shall obtain large amounts of electric power, with the single proviso that she shall pay for it at the same rate paid by French people in the territory ceded to France. So there is no great hardship involved in that connection. The electric power was awarded to Italy so that she could maintain her electric railways; and the Conference was careful to protect the interests of Italy with regard to that cession of territory.

The other cessions of territory were in the Istrian Peninsula, including the territory surrounding Trieste. Trieste is one of the most interesting incidents in connection with the treaty. It will be remembered that prior to World War I all the Istrian Peninsula, including Trieste, belonged not to Italy, but to Austria. It has been revealed in recent years that the promise of the then Allies to award Trieste and the Istrian Peninsula to Italy if she sided with the Allies in that war was redeemed, and the peace treaty gave the territory to Italy.

Mr. President, the fate of Trieste was one of the most important issues before the Peace Conference and the Conference of Foreign Ministers. There was more heat generated around this question, and there was more danger of the Conference breaking up over the single question of Trieste than with respect to any other individual question. While France got the credit publicly for having initiated the resolution internationalizing Trieste, I think I can say without any fear of denial that the United States delegation initiated and generated the proposal to internationalize Trieste.

Yugoslavia was determined to secure it if she could. She had the support of Russia, and from time to time the sympathy, at least, of some of the other powers. Italy was just as anxious to retain it. She regards Trieste as extremely important because it is a shipbuilding center, and because of its commercial advantages. Railways leading into the eastern part of central Europe, to Czechoslovakia, Hungary, and other places, go through Trieste. The Italians wished to retain Trieste, and they cannot be blamed.

It was finally determined by the Conference that the territory of Trieste itself should be internationalized. It is provided in the treaty that its Governor shall be appointed by the Security Council of the United Nations. It is provided that it shall have a system of laws and regulations. Every safeguard that we could devise was imposed in order to secure the peace and integrity of Trieste from molestation by Yugoslavia and Italy alike.

The plan may not work 100 percent. There may be difficulties because of the ambitions and the rapacity of Yugoslavia, and because of the desire of Italy to retain Trieste. We cannot look into the future and discern all the troubles that may lurk along the pathway of international life. However, we thought the solution we arrived at was the best one that could be devised in a very troublesome and explosive situation.

Trieste is to have its own government, its own police, its own courts, and its own Governor—all the insignia of a free democratic organization. Through its connection with the United Nations, and the appointment of the Governor by the United Nations, there is always the safeguard that the United Nations will have its eye upon Trieste, in order that it may come into being and be constituted and organized according to the plans provided in the treaty.

Mr. President, as I have already suggested, when the Foreign Ministers tentatively agreed upon the Italian treaty it was submitted to the representatives of 21 nations which were allied with us during World War II. It received the stamp of approval of 20 of those nations, Norway alone not having voted for it. It is a question of either taking this treaty or taking the other alternative. What is the other alternative that many Senators have suggested on the floor? It is to reject it and have no treaty. How will that course possibly serve the interests of Italy? It will result, according to my view, if we should foolishly adopt that course, in utter chaos, in complete confusion. It will lay Italy open to the infiltration of communism and all the political difficulties and troubles which will arise in the present disturbed condition of affairs in Italy. It is not simply a treaty between the United States and Italy; it is a treaty between Italy and all the nations which I have mentioned. It is provided, however, that whenever the four powers, Russia, Great Britain, France, and the United States, ratify the treaty it goes into force and effect. So that that must be borne in mind.

Mr. President, how could we abstain from ratifying it and not have a treaty with Italy when the other powers probably will ratify it and claim that it ought to be operative? What will happen to Italy? So far as we are concerned, if we do not ratify the treaty, Italy will continue under the terms of the military armistice—terms which she would be glad to see set aside. What else? To ratify the treaty will be to recognize the integrity and the dignity of Italy as a government. It will bring her, if she so desires, into the United Nations as a member of that organization. If we reject the treaty she cannot become a member of the United Nations.

Mr. President, she certainly would have a better forum, a more tender hearing, a greater sympathy, as a member of the United Nations than she would have as an isolated country with whom no treaty settling the peace had been negotiated, thus leaving her disturbed and torn by factions and by political controversies.

Mr. President, a great many Senators forget, it seems to me, that, after all, our own experience in the United States demonstrates the difficulties that arise in not having an adequate governmental structure. Senators will remember that under the Articles of Confederation for approximately 8 long years the Government of the United States, such as it was, suffered all kinds of difficulties because it did not have an adequate structure. Italy would not even have that much of a structure if we should not ratify this treaty. She would probably have bitter controversies between groups of Communists and the present Government of Italy.

Something has been said regarding the fact that in the latest reorganization of Mr. de Gasperi's government there are no Communists. That is correct. They do not hold cabinet positions. But there are Communists in Italy, millions of them, with strong political influence and support. If we do not ratify the treaty we will leave Italy open to their attack without the feeling that she has the support of the United States. She knows that she has our sympathy. We have already handed out to Italy several hundred million dollars to relieve distress, hunger, and want and we would probably be expected to be sympathetic with her growth, her strength, and her rehabilitation as a free democratic government, capable of charting her own course, capable of working out her own destiny under the protecting shield of the United Nations as well as of the United States, instead of being left in an isolated and dangerous position without the ratification of this treaty.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado. I think Italy regards the United States as one of her best friends and, I think, rightfully, because I am sure we are a friend of the Italian people. But the question I want to ask the Senator is this: Would the United States, in her dealings with Italy, have greater freedom of action if the treaty were agreed to than she would have if the treaty were rejected?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Senator. That is a most pertinent question. I shall answer it in the affirmative, for the reason that if the treaty is ratified and Italy assumes full control of her governmental process, if the armies of occupation are withdrawn from Italy and she becomes a member of the United Nations organization, we would have the utmost freedom in dealing with her upon all proper measures. On the other hand, if the treaty be not ratified and she remains subject to the terms of the military armistice, our freedom to deal with her would be seriously impaired. She would not have the power until it was approved by the occupying authorities.

In this connection I want to say that the Senator from Nevada [Mr. MALONE] in the course of his remarks asserted that under this treaty the Allied Nations would have to take their armies out of Italy, but that Russia's Army would remain and would not be required to withdraw. As a matter of fact, there are no Russian armies in Italy; and this treaty specifically provides that 90 days after the ratification of the treaty all foreign armies must be withdrawn, except as to one or two countries who claim they have to have troops to maintain their lines of communication. So all foreign armies would be withdrawn. They would be withdrawn from Trieste; they would be withdrawn from Italy and the other countries coming under the terms of these treaties.

No, Mr. President, I shall say to the able and distinguished Senator from Colorado that Italy's position would be immeasurably enhanced by taking off the shackles of the military armistice and leaving her to assume her functions as a free and independent state.

Mr. HAWKES. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. CONNALLY. I yield.

Mr. HAWKES. Is it reasonable for me to assume that we look upon this treaty of peace which the Senator is discussing as we look upon all other treaties of peace? There is never anything positive and definite that remains forever?

Mr. CONNALLY. That is correct.

Mr. HAWKES. In other words, the Senator's statement means to me—and I must take at full value his statement and the statements of the other Members who have devoted their time and attention to this great question—the Senator's statement means, to me, that if, as we go on, we find that certain things, such as rights, liberties, and opportunities for the Italian people are destroyed, we as the great United States will try to do what is fair and equitable in bringing about an adjustment. Is that correct?

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the eminent Senator from New Jersey. That is entirely correct. As I suggested to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. JOHNSON] a moment ago, the United States is now and has been in the past a devoted friend of Italy, and it was with tears in our eyes and despair in our hearts that we witnessed Italy taking up arms against the United States and the other Allies. We have been generous with her. We allowed her to withdraw, as it were, from the ranks of our enemies, and to join the Allies in the later stages of the war. I shall discuss that point in a little while.

Mr. President, the confusion, chaos, uncertainty, and political controversies without the forms of law, which will take place in Italy if this treaty is not ratified, will afford the most fertile soil for the generation and growth and development of communism and all other fatuous "isms" of that nature. If we do not ratify this treaty, we shall in fact be inviting Communist infiltration from Yugoslavia and from the extensive and critical territory which stretches eastward into the Balkans and thence into Soviet Russia.

Mr. President, we do not want that to happen. Let us give Italy the strength which will come from her association as a free nation with other free nations. Of course, we cannot write these treaties entirely as we would like to have them, for we are only one nation, and the other nations that were represented at the Conference bitterly contended against the positions our representatives took there and against the final results achieved by these treaties. But after weeks and months of negotiation, we were able to soften their demands to the extent of obtaining their consent to the provisions now contained in this treaty.

Mr. President, no enemy that loses in a war is ever satisfied with the following treaty of peace. As the son of a Confederate soldier, I have never been satisfied with the treaty of peace that was given to the South after the War Between the States; but we had to take it, and we did take it. We took it without any UNRRA; we took it without any relief bill; we took it without having any missions sent to us, except a few missions by persons who were disturbers in our area. We did all those things. We did not like it, but we had to take it.

So it is that Italy has no right to write a treaty of peace with herself, and we have no right to write it upon our own initiative. Mr. President, the wisdom and the patriotism of 20 nations that were associated with us in the recent war have gone into the writing of this treaty. In that war, Italy was on the side of the enemy. Now 20 of the 21 nations who opposed Italy and the other enemies in that war have approved this treaty and have attached their signatures to it.

As I said a moment ago, Mr. President, Italy will not be a member of the United Nations if we reject this treaty. But if we approve this treaty and if Italy steps into the full dignity of her place as a free democratic nation, she then will be eligible to apply for membership in the United Nations. As a member of the United Nations, she will attain a greater dignity and a greater influence and greater sympathy with the other members of the United Nations who will aid her in meeting the problems which will face her in the years to come.

It is said that we simply should not have a treaty with Italy at this time, and that in order to shut out communism from Italy we must give Italy a new government, a strong government, and must build up Italy and keep out the Communists Mr. President, to do that in the absence of the ratification of this treaty would require the force of arms; it would really require war. Yet some persons say we must do that. How are we to do it? It will not be done by the delivery of speeches in the Congress or by placing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD insertions which Members of Congress will mail out to their constituents. No, Mr. President; to do what those persons propose would require military force; military force would be required to impose upon Italy and upon those who might violate her integrity the things that some Members of the Senate are urging and saying that the United States must do. They say the United States is the most powerful of the group of nations, and that it is the duty of the United States to do all these things.

Mr. President, I can easily visualize what would transpire if Italy were left in a state of chaos and confusion, and if we then undertook by force of arms to regulate her internal affairs, to determine the character of her government, and to determine who would cross her borders and enter her territory. Yesterday one Member of the Senate advocated that we should leave our army indefinitely in Italy. I assume he meant that we should leave our army there permanently. We could not do that. Italy would rather be a free nation with a free government, rather than to have an army of occupation in her land, even if the army were the army of her friends. After all, occupation armies are not very long the friends of the countries they occupy. It seems to me that Senators who take that position forget that Italy was our enemy in the war. Of course Italy was our enemy. We remember how she conquered Albania, after first bombarding that country. Yet because Albania is to be given $5,000,000 of reparations, complaints are made. During the war Italy invaded Greece, and did so without provocation. We remember how the gallant Greeks stood on the borders of their land and fought for their soil and their homes, and we remember how we applauded the gallantry of the Greeks as they resisted the invasion of their country by Italy. Yet today complaints are made about the size of these reparations. One hundred and five million dollars of these reparations are to go to Greece, to repair in a small way the ravages and destruction and loss of human life occasioned by the actions of Italy.

Some persons say, "Oh, that was because of Mussolini." They say that the Italians are not to blame for what Mussolini did. But, Mr. President, the armies that did that were composed of Italians, and the navies that did that were composed of Italians. The Italian people must, in good conscience, be responsible for what was done under the leadership of Mussolini, because they supported him. So long as he was victorious, they supported him and backed him. It was only when they were beaten to their knees that they agreed to join the Allies.

I say that as a friend of Italy. I know a great many persons of Italian descent who are in the United States. As a rule, they are industrious, frugal citizens. I have no hostility to Italy. But I am speaking for the United States of America. I am not here as an advocate of any group of persons of foreign descent, when the interests of that group conflict with the interests of my country.

Mr. President, it is said that what Italy did in the recent war was the fault of Mussolini. We cannot punish Mussolini; we cannot obtain any reparations from Mussolini. His pockets carry no more gold. We cannot confine him to a dungeon; he is already in the dungeon of death. We cannot follow him up and put him on a desert island and intern him there. No, Mr. President; Mussolini has gone out upon that long and tragic road that leads to No Man's Land. We cannot punish Mussolini. But the people of Italy must take whatever punishment the treaty metes out, because they supported Mussolini. It was their country and their armies and their resources and their other contributions that caused the Italian attacks upon the Allies in that struggle.

What Mussolini did in Ethiopia was a symbol and a pattern of what he would have done all over the earth if he had had his way; yet the armies he led in Ethiopia were composed of Italians.

Someone has suggested that we must not ratify this treaty, but must write a separate peace treaty with Italy. If we were to do that, we would be breaking our solemn promise in connection with the United Nations declaration. A copy of that promise is available on my desk at this time. Before the United Nations was created, we and the other nations signatory to the United Nations agreed that none of the signatories would conclude a separate treaty of peace. We are bound not to do so. We should not do so, anyway, for such a separate treaty would not be effective. It would not be effective to have a single treaty between the United States and Italy, when the other nations would be just as free to impose their will upon Italy and to impose upon her enormous and burdensome provisions in other treaties which they might agree to conclude.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Texas has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CONNALLY. I thank the Chair. Mr. President, to reject this treaty will make it more difficult to negotiate treaties of peace with Austria and with Germany. The actions we take in that connection will affect the peace of the entire world and the economy of Europe for a generation. I do not wish to see Germany destroyed, even though she has been our enemy. I wish to see the desire to conquer the world eradicated from the hearts of the Germans. But Germany is too great a nation, too marvelous in her economic development, to be destroyed. Nevertheless, that is what will be done in the absence of the ratification of these treaties.

Russia has already gathered the richest part of Germany under her dominion. Now she is propagating in Germany her political ideas of communism. We must negotiate and ratify satisfactory treaties of peace with Germany and with Austria. The rejection of this treaty now would have a most deterrent and dangerous effect upon the accomplishment of that primary and most important objective.

Mr. President, we must ratify this treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The time of the Senator from Texas has expired.

Mr. BALDWIN subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a statement which I had prepared for delivery, but for which I could not obtain time on the floor prior to the vote on the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT].

I request that the remarks I had prepared be printed in the RECORD as a statement before the vote.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the statement will be printed in the RECORD immediately before the vote.

The statement prepared by Mr. BALDWIN is as follows:

Mr. BALDWIN. Much of the discussion concerning the ratification of this treaty has been devoted to the terms of the treaty. It has been claimed that they are too harsh. It is generally conceded that our negotiators have done the very best that could be done under the circumstances. Our negotiators worked hard and long and ably to make the terms as favorable to Italy as could be obtained. They have done this out of a feeling of friendship for the people of Italy over many years. But there has been another issue here that has been even more vigorously debated. That is the effect the ratification of this treaty and the withdrawal of our troops of occupation would have upon the spread of communism. It is claimed that the withdrawal of our troops under the treaty would mean the withdrawal of our prestige in favor of free institutions of government in Italy. This claim raises a very important matter of foreign policy. In order to prevent the spread of the threat of communism are we to maintain a line of military protectorates, including Italy, or are we to count upon the people in Italy to establish their government as a free government, helping her, whenever and however she needs help, to maintain those free institutions? This involves a vitally important decision in foreign policy. And that important decision, in these uncertain days, needs more time for decision than we have given it here. The vote here will establish a very definite line in our foreign policy. It will determine our policy of defense against the spread of communism. I do not believe that the people of this country understand this. If the vote to delay be defeated, then I shall vote to support the treaty, believing that if there is to be no further time for discussion we must ratify the treaty by the largest majority possible and thus indicate that we have firmly established our course. Presently, for the reasons stated, I shall support the motion of the Senator from Arkansas to postpone action of the Senate until January 25, 1948.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. All time has expired under the unanimous-consent agreement.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] to postpone until January 25, 1948, the further consideration of the pending treaty of peace with Italy.

Mr. WHITE. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Clerk will call the roll.

The Chief Clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Aiken	Hayden	Myers
Baldwin	Hickenlooper	O'Conor
Ball	Hill	O'Daniel
Barkley	Hoey	O'Mahoney

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Eighty-nine Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] to postpone until January 25, 1948, the further consideration of the pending treaty of peace with Italy.

Mr. BRIDGES. I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. REED (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER]. On this vote I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] and will vote. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WHERRY. I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER], who is absent on official business, is paired with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT]. The Senator from Nebraska, if present and voting, would vote "nay," and the Senator from Arkansas, if present and voting, would vote "yea."

The Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER].

Mr. LUCAS. I announce that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who is absent by leave of the Senate, is paired on this vote with the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER]. If present and voting, the Senator from Arkansas would vote "yea," and the Senator from Nebraska would vote "nay."

The Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent, has a general pair with the Senator from Kansas [Mr. REED]. The transfer of that pair to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] has previously been announced by the Senator from Kansas.

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] is attending the International Labor Conference at Geneva, Switzerland, and is absent by leave of the Senate. If present he would vote "nay."

The result was announced—yeas 22, nays 67, as follows:

YEAS—22

Baldwin	Langer	Revercomb
Bridges	McCarran	Russell
Brooks	McCarthy	Stewart
Dworshak	McKellar	Tobey
Eastland	McMahon	Watkins
Hawkes	Malone	Wherry
Ives	Murray

NOT VOTING—6

Butler	Fulbright	Thomas, Utah
Donnell	Overton	Wagner

So Mr. FULBRIGHT's motion was rejected.

Mr. WHERRY subsequently said: Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I may have inserted in the RECORD a statement dealing with the Italian treaty only. I should like to have it appear before the vote was taken on the ratification of the Italian peace treaty.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection——

Mr. CONNALLY. Mr. President, reserving the right to object, I assume that what the Senator from Nebraska asked to have appear in the RECORD is a statement, and not a speech.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. That is the basis on which the request was made.

Mr. CONNALLY. I have no objection.

Mr. WHERRY. I may say to the distinguished Senator from Texas that I asked unanimous consent for insertion of a statement in the RECORD.

Mr. CONNALLY. I do not object, so long as it appears that it is a statement, but I would object if it appears that it was a speech which was not actually made on the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the request is granted.

The statement submitted by Mr. WHERRY is as follows:

I am in receipt of a telegram from Mr. Generoso Pope, publisher of the leading Italian-American daily in the United States, Il Progresso Italo-Americano, making a last appeal to the Senate to postpone action on the Italian treaty until at least the next session of Congress. Mr. Pope has been one of the leaders in the Italo-American people's expression protesting any ratification now of the Italian treaty. I feel that to Mr. Pope, as to the other citizens of the United States, we owe a vote of thanks for making known the various aspects of the Italian treaty for our consideration and ask that his telegram be inserted in the RECORD.

This is the text of a telegram sent yesterday to every member of the United States Senate:

"In behalf of the Columbus Citizens Committee, representing more than 600,000 Americans of Italian and other origins, and in the name of Il Progresso, the first and greatest Italian language daily in the United States, I strongly urge you to vote to delay ratification of the proposed treaty with Italy.

"I am convinced that such delay is vital to America's national security, particularly in view of the mortal blow just struck against democracy in Hungary.

"In this appeal we are at one with the American Federation of Labor, whose convention unanimously condemned this Italian treaty as utterly unjust and as disastrous to the development of Italy into a healthy democracy which could take her rightful place in the community of free and prosperous nations.

"The Italian people have at their very first opportunity fought on our side and, despite terrible difficulties, have made enormous progress in rebuilding their democratic institutions. Senate ratification would open the doors wide for Communists and other totalitarian forces to create chaos and promote civil war and dictatorship.

"Such a fatal defeat of democracy in Italy would more than undo any good resulting from the application of the Truman doctrine in Greece and Turkey. Already armed Communist bands are timing their march with American troops leaving Italy in the event of Senate ratification.

"In line with the repeated pledges by our Government for a just peace with cobelligerent Italy and in the interest of world peace as well as America's own welfare and international moral prestige, I reiterate my appeal of March 26, that you refer the projected Italian treaty to the State Department for renegotiation and revision on the basis of the Atlantic Charter.

"Respectfully yours,

"GENEROSO POPE."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaty is still before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole, and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive F, Eightieth Congress, first session, the treaty of peace with Italy which was signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification.

Mr. TYDINGS and Mr. LANGER asked for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. WHERRY. Mr. President, I announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. BUTLER] is absent on official business. If present and voting, he would vote "yea." I also announce that the Senator from Missouri [Mr. DONNELL] is absent by leave of the Senate.

Mr. HILL. I announce that the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], who is absent by leave of the Senate, having been appointed a delegate to the International Labor Conference at Geneva, Switzerland, and the Senator from New York [Mr. WAGNER], who is necessarily absent, are paired on this vote with the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT], who is absent by leave of the Senate. If present and voting, the Senator from Utah and the Senator from New York would vote "yea," and the Senator from Arkansas would vote "nay."

The Senator from Louisiana [Mr. OVERTON] is absent by leave of the Senate.

The result was announced—yeas 79, nays 10, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH RUMANIA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive G, Eightieth Congress, first session, the treaty of peace with Rumania, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF PEACE WITH ROUMANIA

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Australia, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, and the Union of South Africa, as the States which are at war with Roumania and actively waged war against the European enemy states with substantial military forces, hereinafter referred to as "the Allied and Associated Powers", of the one part, and Roumania, of the other part;

Whereas Roumania, having become an ally of Hitlerite Germany and having participated on her side in the war against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America, and other United Nations, bears her share of responsibility for this war;

Whereas, however, Roumania, on August 24, 1944, entirely ceased military operations against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, withdrew from the war against the United Nations, broke off relations with Germany and her satellites and having concluded on September 12, 1944, an Armistice with the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, acting in the interests of all the United Nations, took an active part in the war against Germany; and

Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers and Roumania are desirous of concluding a treaty of peace, which, conforming to the principles of justice, will settle questions still outstanding as a result of the events hereinbefore recited and form the basis of friendly relations between them, thereby enabling the Allied and Associated Powers to support Roumania's application to become a member of the United Nations and also to adhere to any Convention concluded under the auspices of the United Nations;

Have therefore agreed to declare the cessation of the state of war and for this purpose to conclude the present Treaty of Peace, and have accordingly appointed the undersigned Plenipotentiaries who, after presentation of their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed on the following provisions:

PART I. FRONTIERS

Article 1

The frontiers of Roumania, shown on the map annexed to the present Treaty (Annex I), shall be those which existed on January 1, 1941, with the exception of the Roumanian-Hungarian frontier, which is defined in Article 2 of the present Treaty.

The Soviet-Roumanian frontier is thus fixed in accordance with the Soviet-Roumanian Agreement of June 28, 1940, and the Soviet-Czechoslovak Agreement of June 29, 1945.

Article 2

The decisions of the Vienna Award of August 30, 1940, are declared null and void. The frontier between Roumania and Hungary as it existed on January 1, 1938, is hereby restored.

PART II. POLITICAL CLAUSES

Section I

Article 3

1. Roumania shall take all measures necessary to secure to all persons under Roumanian jurisdiction, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting.

2. Roumania further undertakes that the laws in force in Roumania shall not, either in their content or in their application, discriminate or entail any discrimination between persons of Roumanian nationality on the ground of their race, sex, language or religion, whether in reference to their persons, property, business, professional or financial interests, status, political or civil rights or any other matter.

Article 4

Roumania, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures to set free, irrespective of citizenship and nationality, all persons held in confinement on account of their activities in favour of, or because of their sympathies with, the United Nations or because of their racial origin, and to repeal discriminatory legislation and restrictions imposed thereunder, shall complete these measures and shall in future not take any measures or enact any laws which would be incompatible with the purposes set forth in this Article.

Article 5

Roumania, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures for dissolving all organizations of a Fascist type on Roumanian territory, whether political, military or para-military, as well as other organizations conducting propaganda hostile to the Soviet Union or to any of the other United Nations, shall not permit in future the existence and activities of organizations of that nature which have as their aim denial to the people of their democratic rights.

Article 6

1. Roumania shall take all necessary steps to ensure the apprehension and surrender for trial of:

(a) Persons accused of having committed, ordered or abetted war crimes and crimes against peace or humanity;

(b) Nationals of any Allied or Associated Power accused of having violated their national law by treason or collaboration with the enemy during the war.

2. At the request of the United Nations Government concerned, Roumania shall likewise make available as witnesses persons within its jurisdiction, whose evidence is required for the trial of the persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. Any disagreement concerning the application of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be referred by any of the Governments concerned to the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Bucharest of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, who will reach agreement with regard to the difficulty.

Section II

Article 7

Roumania undertakes to recognize the full force of the Treaties of Peace with Italy, Bulgaria, Hungary and Finland and other agreements or arrangements which have been or will be reached by the Allied and Associated Powers in respect to Austria, Germany and Japan for the restoration of peace.

Article 8

The state of war between Roumania and Hungary shall terminate upon the coming into force both of the present Treaty of Peace and the Treaty of Peace between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Australia, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Union of South Africa and the People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, of the one part, and Hungary of the other part.

Article 9

Roumania undertakes to accept any arrangements which have been or may be agreed for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Article 10

1. Each Allied or Associated Power will notify Roumania, within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, which of its pre-war bilateral treaties with Roumania it desires to keep in force or revive. Any provisions not in conformity with the present Treaty shall, however, be deleted from the above-mentioned treaties.

2. All such treaties so notified shall be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. All such treaties not so notified shall be regarded as abrogated.

PART III. MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR CLAUSES

Section I

Article 11

The maintenance of land, sea and air armaments and fortifications shall be closely restricted to meeting tasks of an internal character and local defense of frontiers. In accordance with the foregoing, Roumania is authorised to have armed forces consisting of not more than:

(a) A land army, including frontier troops, with a total strength of 120,000 personnel;

(b) Anti-aircraft artillery with a strength of 5,000 personnel;

(c) A navy with a personnel strength of 5,000 and a total tonnage of 15,000 tons;

(d) An air force, including any naval air arm, of 150 aircraft, including reserves, of which not more than 100 may be combat types of aircraft, with a total personnel strength of 8,000. Roumania shall not possess or acquire any aircraft designed primarily as bombers with internal bomb-carrying facilities.

These strengths shall in each case include combat, service and overhead personnel.

Article 12

The personnel of the Roumanian Army, Navy and Air Force in excess of the respective strengths permitted under Article 11 shall be disbanded within 6 months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Article 13

Personnel not included in the Roumanian Army, Navy or Air Force shall not receive any form of military training, naval training or military air training as defined in Annex II.

Article 14

Roumania shall not possess, construct or experiment with any atomic weapon, any self-propelled or guided missiles or apparatus connected with their discharge (other than torpedoes and torpedo-launching gear comprising the normal armament of naval vessels permitted by the present Treaty), sea mines or torpedoes of noncontact types actuated by influence mechanisms, torpedoes capable of being manned, submarines or other submersible craft, motor torpedo boats, or specialised types of assault craft.

Article 15

Roumania shall not retain, produce or otherwise acquire, or maintain facilities for the manufacture of, war material in excess of that required for the maintenance of the armed forces permitted under Article 11 of the present Treaty.

Article 16

1. Excess war material of Allied origin shall be placed at the disposal of the Allied or Associated Power concerned according to the instructions given by that Power. Excess Roumanian war material shall be placed at the disposal of the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. Roumania shall renounce all rights to this material.

2. War material of German origin or design in excess of that required for the armed forces permitted under the present Treaty shall be placed at the disposal of the Three Governments. Roumania shall not acquire or manufacture any war material of German origin or design, or employ or train any technicians, including military and civil aviation personnel, who are or have been nationals of Germany.

3. Excess war material mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be handed over or destroyed within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

4. A definition and list of war material for the purposes of the present Treaty are contained in Annex III.

Article 17

Roumania shall cooperate fully with the Allied and Associated Powers with a view to ensuring that Germany may not be able to take steps outside German territory towards rearmament.

Article 18

Roumania shall not acquire or manufacture civil aircraft which are of German or Japanese design or which embody major assemblies of German or Japanese manufacture or design.

Article 19

Each of the military, naval and air clauses of the present Treaty shall remain in force until modified in whole or in part by agreement between the Allied and Associated Powers and Roumania or, after Roumania becomes a member of the United Nations, by agreement between the Security Council and Roumania.

Section II

Article 20

1. Roumanian prisoners of war shall be repatriated as soon as possible, in accordance with arrangements agreed upon by the individual Powers detaining them and Roumania.

2. All costs, including maintenance costs, incurred in moving Roumanian prisoners of war from their respective assembly points, as chosen by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned, to the point of their entry into Roumanian territory, shall be borne by the Roumanian Government.

PART IV. WITHDRAWAL OF ALLIED FORCES

Article 21

1. Upon the coming into force of the present Treaty, all Allied Forces shall, within a period of 90 days, be withdrawn from Roumania, subject to the right of the Soviet Union to keep on Roumanian territory such armed forces as it may need for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Soviet Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria.

2. All unused Roumanian currency and all Roumanian goods in possession of the Allied forces in Roumania, acquired pursuant to Article 10 of the Armistice Agreement, shall be returned to the Roumanian Government within the same period of 90 days.

3. Roumania shall, however, make available such maintenance and facilities as may specifically be required for the maintenance of the lines of communication with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria, for which due compensation will be made to the Roumanian Government.

PART V. REPARATION AND RESTITUTION

Article 22

1. Losses caused to the Soviet Union by military operations and by the occupation by Roumania of Soviet territory shall be made good by Roumania to the Soviet Union, but, taking into consideration that Roumania has not only withdrawn from the war against the United Nations, but has declared and, in fact, waged war against Germany, it is agreed that compensation for the above losses will be made by Roumania not in full but only in part, namely in the amount of $300,000,000 payable over eight years from September 12, 1944, in commodities (oil products, grain, timber, seagoing and river craft, sundry machinery and other commodities).

2. The basis of calculation for the settlement provided in this Article will be the United States dollar at its gold parity on the day of the signing of the Armistice Agreement, i. e. $35 for one ounce of gold.

Article 23

1. Roumania accepts the principles of the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943, and shall return property removed from the territory of any of the United Nations.

2. The obligation to make restitution applies to all identifiable property at present in Roumania which was removed by force or duress by any of the Axis Powers from the territory of any of the United Nations, irrespective of any subsequent transactions by which the present holder of any such property has secured possession.

3. The Government entitled to restitution and the Roumanian Government may conclude agreements which will replace the provisions of the present Article.

4. The Roumanian Government shall return the property referred to in this Article in good order and, in this connection, shall bear all costs in Roumania relating to labour, materials and transport.

5. The Roumanian Government shall cooperate with the United Nations in, and shall provide at its own expense all necessary facilities for, the search for and restitution of property liable to restitution under this Article.

6. The Roumanian Government shall take the necessary measures to effect the return of property covered by this Article held in any third country by persons subject to Roumanian jurisdiction.

7. Claims for the restitution of property shall be presented to the Roumanian Government by the Government of the country from whose territory the property was removed, it being understood that rolling stock shall be regarded as having been removed from the territory to which it originally belonged. The period during which such claims may be presented shall be six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

8. The burden of identifying the property and of proving ownership shall rest on the claimant Government, and the burden of proving that the property was not removed by force or duress shall rest on the Roumanian Government.

PART VI. ECONOMIC CLAUSES

Article 24

1. In so far as Roumania has not already done so, Roumania shall restore all legal rights and interests in Roumania of the United Nations and their nationals as they existed on September 1, 1939, and shall return all property in Roumania, including ships, of the United Nations and their nationals as it now exists.

If necessary, the Roumanian Government shall revoke legislation enacted since September 1, 1939, in so far as it discriminates against the rights of United Nations nationals.

2. The Roumanian Government undertakes that all property, rights and interests passing under this Article shall be restored free of all encumbrances and charges of any kind to which they may have become subject as a result of the war and without the imposition of any charges by the Roumanian Government in connection with their return. The Roumanian Government shall nullify all measures, including seizures, sequestration or control, taken by it against United Nations property between September 1, 1939, and the coming into force of the present Treaty. In cases where the property has not been returned within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, application shall be made to the Roumanian authorities not later than twelve months from the coming into force of the Treaty, except in cases in which the claimant is able to show that he could not file his application within this period.

3. The Roumanian Government shall invalidate transfers involving property, rights and interests of any description belonging to United Nations nationals, where such transfers resulted from force or duress exerted by Axis Governments or their agencies during the war.

4. (a) The Roumanian Government shall be responsible for the restoration to complete good order of the property returned to United Nations nationals under paragraph 1 of this Article. In cases where property cannot be returned or where, as a result of the war, a United Nations national has suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Roumania, he shall receive from the Roumanian Government compensation in lei to the extent of two-thirds of the sum necessary, at the date of payment, to purchase similar property or to make good the loss suffered. In no event shall United Nations nationals receive less favourable treatment with respect to compensation than that accorded to Roumanian nationals.

(b) United Nations nationals who hold, directly or indirectly, ownership interests in corporations or associations which are not United Nations nationals within the meaning of paragraph 9 (a) of this Article, but which have suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Roumania, shall receive compensation in accordance with subparagraph (a) above. This compensation shall be calculated on the basis of the total loss or damage suffered by the corporation or association and shall bear the same proportion to such loss or damage as the beneficial interests of such nationals in the corporation or association bear to the total capital thereof.

(c) Compensation shall be paid free of any levies, taxes or other charges. It shall be freely usable in Roumania but shall be subject to the foreign exchange control regulations which may be in force in Roumania from time to time.

(d) The Roumanian Government shall accord to United Nations nationals the same treatment in the allocation of materials for the repair or rehabilitation of their property in Roumania and in the allocation of foreign exchange for the importation of such materials as applies to Roumanian nationals.

(e) The Roumanian Government shall grant United Nations nationals an indemnity in lei at the same rate as provided in subparagraph (a) above to compensate them for the loss or damage due to special measures applied to their property during the war, and which were not applicable to Roumanian property. This sub-paragraph does not apply to a loss of profit.

5. The provisions of paragraph 4 of this Article shall not apply to Roumania in so far as the action which may give rise to a claim for damage to property in Northern Transylvania belonging to the United Nations or their nationals took place during the period when this territory was not subject to Roumanian authority.

6. All reasonable expenses incurred in Roumania in establishing claims, including the assessment of loss or damage, shall be borne by the Roumanian Government.

7. United Nations nationals and their property shall be exempted from any exceptional taxes, levies or imposts imposed on their capital assets in Roumania by the Roumanian Government or any Roumanian authority between the date of the Armistice and the coming into force of the present Treaty for the specific purpose of meeting charges arising out of the war or of meeting the costs of occupying forces or of reparation payable to any of the United Nations. Any sums which have been so paid shall be refunded.

8. The owner of the property concerned and the Roumanian Government may agree upon arrangements in lieu of the provisions of this Article.

9. As used in this Article:

(a) "United Nations nationals" means individuals who are nationals of any of the United Nations, or corporations or associations organised under the laws of any of the United Nations, at the coming into force of the present Treaty, provided that the said individuals, corporations or associations also had this status at the date of the Armistice with Roumania.

The term "United Nations nationals" also includes all individuals, corporations or associations which, under the laws in force in Roumania during the war, have been treated as enemy;

(b) "Owner" means the United Nations national, as defined in sub-paragraph (a) above, who is entitled to the property in question, and includes a successor of the owner, provided that the successor is also a United Nations national as defined in subparagraph (a). If the successor has purchased the property in its damaged state, the transferor shall retain his rights to compensation under this Article, without prejudice to obligations between the transferor and the purchaser under domestic law;

(c) "Property" means all movable or immovable property, whether tangible or intangible, including industrial, literary and artistic property, as well as all rights or interests of any kind in property. Without prejudice to the generality of the foregoing provisions, the property of the United Nations and their nationals includes all seagoing and river vessels, together with their gear and equipment, which were either owned by United Nations or their nationals, or registered in the territory of one of the United Nations, or sailed under the flag of one of the United Nations and which, after September 1, 1939, while in Roumanian waters, or after they had been forcibly brought into Roumanian waters, either were placed under the control of the Roumanian authorities as enemy property or ceased to be at the free disposal in Roumania of the United Nations or their nationals, as a result of measures of control taken by the Roumanian authorities in relation to the existence of a state of war between members of the United Nations and Germany.

1. Roumania undertakes that in all cases where the property, legal rights or interests in Roumania of persons under Roumanian jurisdiction have, since September 1, 1939, been the subject of measures of sequestration, confiscation or control on account of the racial origin or religion of such persons, the said property, legal rights and interests shall be restored together with their accessories or, if restoration is impossible, that fair compensation shall be made therefor.

2. All property, rights and interests in Roumania of persons, organisations or communities which, individually or as members of groups, were the object of racial, religious or other Fascist measures of persecution, and remaining heirless or unclaimed for six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, shall be transferred by the Roumanian Government to organisations in Roumania representative of such persons, organisations or communities. The property transferred shall be used by such organisations for purposes of relief and rehabilitation of surviving members of such groups, organisations and communities in Roumania. Such transfer shall be effected within twelve months from the coming into force of the Treaty, and shall include property, rights and interests required to be restored under paragraph 1 of this Article.

Article 26

Roumania recognizes that the Soviet Union is entitled to all German assets in Roumania transferred to the Soviet Union by the Control Council for Germany and undertakes to take all necessary measures to facilitate such transfers.

Article 27

1. Each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to seize, retain, liquidate or take any other action with respect to all property, rights and interests which at the coming into force of the present Treaty are within its territory and belong to Roumania or to Roumanian nationals, and to apply such property or the proceeds thereof to such purposes as it may desire, within the limits of its claims and those of its nationals against Roumania or Roumanian nationals, including debts, other than claims fully satisfied under other Articles of the present Treaty. All Roumanian property, or the proceeds thereof, in excess of the amount of such claims, shall be returned.

2. The liquidation and disposition of Roumanian property shall be carried out in accordance with the law of the Allied or Associated Power concerned. The Roumanian owner shall have no rights with respect to such property except those which may be given him by that law.

3. The Roumanian Government undertakes to compensate Roumanian nationals whose property is taken under this Article and not returned to them.

4. No obligation is created by this Article on any Allied or Associated Power to return industrial property to the Roumanian Government or Roumanian nationals, or to include such property in determining the amounts which may be retained under paragraph 1 of this Article. The Government of each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to impose such limitations, conditions and restrictions on rights or interests with respect to industrial property in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power, acquired prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty by the Government or nationals of Roumania, as may be deemed by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power to be necessary in the national interest.

5. The property covered by paragraph 1 of this Article shall be deemed to include Roumanian property which has been subject to control by reason of a state of war existing between Roumania and the Allied or Associated Power having jurisdiction over the property, but shall not include:

(a) Property of the Roumanian Government used for consular or diplomatic purposes;

(b) Property belonging to religious bodies or private charitable institutions and used for religious or charitable purposes;

(c) Property of natural persons who are Roumanian nationals permitted to reside within the territory of the country in which the property is located or to reside elsewhere in United Nations territory, other than Roumanian property which at any time during the war was subjected to measures not generally applicable to the property of Roumanian nationals resident in the same territory;

(d) Property rights arising since the resumption of trade and financial relations between the Allied and Associated Powers and Roumania, or arising out of transactions between the Government and any Allied or Associated Power and Roumania since September 12, 1944;

(e) Literary and artistic property rights.

Article 28

1. From the coming into force of the present Treaty, property in Germany of Roumania and of Roumanian nationals shall no longer be treated as enemy property and all restrictions based on such treatment shall be removed.

2. Identifiable property of Roumania and of Roumanian nationals removed by force or duress from Roumanian territory to Germany by German forces or authorities after September 12, 1944, shall be eligible for restitution.

3. The restoration and restitution of Roumanian property in Germany shall be effected in accordance with measures which will be determined by the Powers in occupation of Germany.

4. Without prejudice to these and to any other dispositions in favour of Roumania and Roumanian nationals by the Powers occupying Germany, Roumania waives on its own behalf and on behalf of Roumanian nationals all claims against Germany and German nationals outstanding on May 8, 1945, except those arising out of contracts and other obligations entered into, and rights acquired, before September 1, 1939. This waiver shall be deemed to include debts, all inter-governmental claims in respect of arrangements entered into in the course of the war and all claims for loss or damage arising during the war.

Article 29

1. The existence of the state of war shall not, in itself, be regarded as affecting the obligation to pay pecuniary debts arising out of obligations and contracts which existed, and rights which were acquired, before the existence of the state of war, which became payable prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty, and which are due by the Government or nationals of Roumania to the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers or are due by the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers to the Government or nationals of Roumania.

2. Except as otherwise expressly provided in the present Treaty, nothing therein shall be construed as impairing debtor-creditor relationships arising out of pre-war contracts concluded either by the Government or nationals of Roumania.

Article 30

1. Roumania waives all claims of any description against the Allied and Associated Powers on behalf of the Roumanian Government or Roumanian nationals arising directly out of the war or out of actions taken because of the existence of a state of war in Europe after September 1, 1939, whether or not the Allied or Associated Power was at war with Roumania at the time, including the following:

(a) Claims for losses or damages sustained as a consequence of acts of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers;

(b) Claims arising from the presence, operations or actions of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers in Roumanian territory;

(c) Claims with respect to the decrees or orders of Prize Courts of Allied or Associated Powers, Roumania agreeing to accept as valid and binding all decrees and orders of such Prize Courts on or after September 1, 1939, concerning Roumanian ships or Roumanian goods or the payment of costs;

(d) Claims arising out of the exercise or purported exercise of belligerent rights.

2. The provisions of this Article shall bar, completely and finally, all claims of the nature referred to herein, which will be henceforward extinguished, whoever may be the parties in interest. The Roumanian Government agrees to make equitable compensation in lei to persons who furnished supplies or services on requisition to the forces of Allied or Associated Powers in Roumanian territory and in satisfaction of noncombat damage claims against the forces of Allied or Associated Powers arising in Roumanian territory.

3. Roumania likewise waives all claims of the nature covered by paragraph 1 of this Article on behalf of the Roumanian Government or Roumanian nationals against any of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Roumania were broken off during the war and which took action in cooperation with the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. The Roumanian Government shall assume full responsibility for all Allied military currency issued in Roumania by the Allied military authorities, including all such currency in circulation at the coming into force of the present Treaty.

5. The waiver of claims by Roumania under paragraph 1 of this Article includes any claims arising out of actions taken by any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to Roumanian ships between September 1, 1939, and the coming into force of the present Treaty, as well as any claims and debts arising out of the Conventions on prisoners of war now in force.

Article 31

1. Pending the conclusion of commercial treaties or agreements between individual United Nations and Roumania, the Roumanian Government shall, during a period of eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, grant the following treatment to each of the United Nations which, in fact, reciprocally grants similar treatment in like matters to Roumania:

(a) In all that concerns duties and charges on importation or exportation, the internal taxation of imported goods and all regulations pertaining thereto, the United Nations shall be granted unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment;

(b) In all other respects, Roumania shall make no arbitrary discrimination against goods originating or destined for any territory of any of the United Nations as compared with like goods originating in or destined for territory of any other of the United Nations or of any other foreign country;

(c) United Nations nationals, including juridical persons, shall be granted national and most-favoured-nation treatment in all matters pertaining to commerce, industry, shipping and other forms of business activity within Roumania. These provisions shall not apply to commercial aviation;

(d) Roumania shall grant no exclusive or discriminatory right to any country with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall afford all the United Nations equality of opportunity in obtaining international commercial aviation rights in Roumanian territory, including the right to land for refueling and repair, and, with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall grant on a reciprocal and non-discriminatory basis to all United Nations the right to fly over Roumanian territory without landing. These provisions shall not affect the interests of the national defence of Roumania.

2. The foregoing undertakings by Roumania shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in commercial treaties concluded by Roumania before the war, and the provisions with respect to reciprocity granted by each of the United Nations shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in the commercial treaties concluded by that State.

Article 32

1. Any disputes which may arise in connection with Articles 23 and 24 and Annexes IV, V and VI, part B of the present Treaty shall be referred to a Conciliation Commission composed of an equal number of representatives of the United Nations Government concerned and of the Roumanian Government. If agreement has not been reached within three months of the dispute having been referred to the Conciliation Commission, either Government may require the addition of a third member to the Commission, and failing agreement between the two Governments on the selection of this member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 33

Any disputes which may arise in connection with the prices paid by the Roumanian Government for goods delivered by this Government on account of reparation and acquired from nationals of an Allied or Associated Power or companies owned by them shall be settled, without prejudice to the execution of the obligations of Roumania with regard to reparation, by means of diplomatic negotiations between the Government of the country concerned and the Roumanian Government. Should the direct diplomatic negotiations between the parties concerned not result in a solution of the dispute within two months, such dispute shall be referred to the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Bucharest of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America for settlement. In case the Heads of Mission fail to reach agreement within two months, either party may request the Secretary-General of the United Nations to appoint an arbitrator whose decision shall be binding on the parties to the dispute.

Article 34

Articles 23, 24, 31 and Annex VI of the present Treaty shall apply to the Allied and Associated Powers and France and to those of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Roumania have been broken off during the war.

Article 35

The provisions of Annexes IV, V and VI shall, as in the case of the other Annexes, have force and effect as integral parts of the present Treaty.

PART VII. CLAUSE RELATING TO THE DANUBE

Article 36

Navigation on the Danube shall be free and open for the nationals, vessels of commerce, and goods of all States, on a footing of equality in regard to port and navigation charges and conditions for merchant shipping. The foregoing shall not apply to traffic between ports of the same State.

PART VIII. FINAL CLAUSES

Article 37

1. For a period not to exceed eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Bucharest of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, acting in concert, will represent the Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the Roumanian Government in all matters concerning the execution and interpretation of the present Treaty.

2. The Three Heads of Mission will give the Roumanian Government such guidance, technical advice and clarification as may be necessary to ensure the rapid and efficient execution of the present Treaty both in letter and in spirit.

3. The Roumanian Government shall afford the said Three Heads of Mission all necessary information and any assistance which they may require in the fulfilment of the tasks devolving on them under the present Treaty.

Article 38

1. Except where another procedure is specifically provided under any Article of the present Treaty, any dispute concerning the interpretation or execution of the Treaty, which is not settled by direct diplomatic negotiations, shall be referred to the Three Heads of Mission acting under Article 37, except that in this case the Heads of Mission will not be restricted by the time limit provided in that Article. Any such dispute not resolved by them within a period of two months shall, unless the parties to the dispute mutually agree upon another means of settlement, be referred at the request of either party to the dispute to a Commission composed of one representative of each party and a third member selected by mutual agreement of the two parties from nationals of a third country. Should the two parties fail to agree within a period of one month upon the appointment of the third member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission, and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 39

1. Any member of the United Nations, not a signatory to the present Treaty, which is at war with Roumania, may accede to the Treaty and upon accession shall be deemed to be an Associated Power for the purposes of the Treaty.

2. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and shall take effect upon deposit.

Article 40

The present Treaty, of which the Russian and English texts are authentic, shall be ratified by the Allied and Associated Powers. It shall also be ratified by Roumania. It shall come into force immediately upon the deposit of ratifications by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America. The instruments of ratification shall, in the shortest time possible, be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

With respect to each Allied or Associated Power whose instrument of ratification is thereafter deposited, the Treaty shall come into force upon the date of deposit. The present Treaty shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which shall furnish certified copies to each of the signatory States.

ANNEX II

(See Article 13)

Definition of military, military air and naval training

1. Military training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specially designed or adapted for army purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and carrying out of all drill or movements which teach or practice evolutions performed by fighting forces in battle; and the organised study of tactics, strategy and staff work.

2. Military air training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specially designed or adapted for air force purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and practice of all specialised evolutions, including formation flying, performed by aircraft in the accomplishment of an air force mission; and the organised study of air tactics, strategy and staff work.

3. Naval training is defined as: the study, administration or practice in the use of warships or naval establishments as well as the study or employment of all apparatus and training devices relative thereto, which are used in the prosecution of naval warfare, except for those which are also normally used for civilian purposes; also the teaching practice or organised study of naval tactics, strategy and staff work including the execution of all operations and manoeuvres not required in the peaceful employment of ships.

ANNEX III

(See Article 16)

Definition and list of war material

The term "war material" as used in the present Treaty shall include all arms, ammunition and implements specially designed or adapted for use in war as listed below.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to amend the list periodically by modification or addition in the light of subsequent scientific development.

Category I.

1. Military rifles, carbines, revolvers and pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use.

2. Machine guns, military automatic or autoloading rifles, and machine pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; machine gun mounts.

3. Guns, howitzers, mortars, cannon special to aircraft; breechless or recoil-less guns and flamethrowers; barrels and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; carriages and mountings for the foregoing.

4. Rocket projectors; launching and control mechanisms for self-propelling and guided missiles; mountings for same.

5. Self-propelling and guided missiles, projectiles, rockets, fixed ammunition and cartridges, filled or unfilled, for the arms listed in subparagraphs 1–4 above and fuses, tubes or contrivances to explode or operate them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

6. Grenades, bombs, torpedoes, mines, depth charges and incendiary materials or charges, filled or unfilled; all means for exploding or operating them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

7. Bayonets.

Category II.

1. Armoured fighting vehicles; armoured trains, not technically convertible to civilian use.

2. Mechanical and self-propelled carriages for any of the weapons listed in Category I; special type military chassis or bodies other than those enumerated in sub-paragraph 1 above.

3. Armour plate, greater than three inches in thickness, used for protective purposes in warfare.

Category III.

1. Aiming and computing devices, including predictors and plotting apparatus, for fire control; direction of fire instruments; gun sights; bomb sights; fuse setters; equipment for the calibration of guns and fire control instruments.

2. Assault bridging, assault boats and storm boats.

3. Deceptive warfare, dazzle and decoy devices.

4. Personal war equipment of a specialised nature not readily adaptable to civilian use.

Category IV.

1. Warships of all kinds, including converted vessels and craft designed or intended for their attendance or support, which cannot be technically reconverted to civilian use, as well as weapons, armour, ammunition, aircraft and all other equipment, material, machines and installations not used in peace time on ships other than warships.

2. Landing craft and amphibious vehicles or equipment of any kind; assault boats or devices of any type as well as catapults or other apparatus for launching or throwing aircraft, rockets, propelled weapons or any other missile, instrument or device whether manned or unmanned, guided or uncontrolled.

3. Submersible or semi-submersible ships, craft, weapons, devices or apparatus of any kind, including specially designed harbour defence booms, except as required by salvage, rescue or other civilian uses, as well as all equipment, accessories, spare parts, experimental or training aids, instruments or installations as may be specially designed for the construction, testing, maintenance or housing of the same.

Category V.

1. Aircraft, assembled or unassembled, both heavier and lighter than air, which are designed or adapted for aerial combat by the use of machine guns, rocket projectors or artillery or for the carrying and dropping of bombs, or which are equipped with, or which by reason of their design or construction are prepared for, any of the appliances referred to in subparagraph 2 below.

2. Aerial gun mounts and frames, bomb racks, torpedo carriers and bomb release or torpedo release mechanisms; gun turrets and blisters.

3. Equipment specially designed for and used solely by airborne troops.

4. Catapults or launching apparatus for ship-borne, land- or sea-based aircraft; apparatus for launching aircraft weapons.

5. Barrage balloons.

Category VI.

Asphyxiating, lethal, toxic or incapacitating substances intended for war purposes, or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VII.

Propellants, explosives, pyrotechnics or liquefied gases destined for the propulsion, explosion, charging or filing of, or for use in connection with, the war material in the present categories, not capable of civilian use or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VIII.

Factory and tool equipment specially designed for the production and maintenance of the material enumerated above and not technically convertible to civilian use.

ANNEX IV

Special provisions relating to certain kinds of property

A. Industrial, Literary and Artistic Property

1. (a) A period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be accorded to the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals without extension fees or other penalty of any sort in order to enable them to accomplish all necessary acts for the obtaining or preserving in Roumania of rights in industrial, literary and artistic property which were not capable of accomplishment owing to the existence of a state of war.

(b) Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals who had duly applied in the territory of any Allied or Associated Power for a patent or registration of a utility model not earlier than twelve months before the outbreak of the war with Roumania or during the war, or for the registration of an industrial design or model or trade mark not earlier than six months before the outbreak of the war with Roumania or during the war, shall be entitled within twelve months after the coming into force of the present Treaty to apply for corresponding rights in Roumania, with a right of priority based upon the previous filing of the application in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power.

(c) Each of the Allied and Associated Powers and its nationals shall be accorded a period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty during which they may institute proceedings in Roumania against those natural or juridical persons who are alleged illegally to have infringed their rights in industrial, literary or artistic property between the date of the outbreak of the war and the coming into force of the Treaty.

2. A period from the outbreak of the war until a date eighteen months after the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded in determining the time within which a patent must be worked or a design or trade mark used.

3. The period from the outbreak of the war until the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded from the normal term of rights in industrial, literary and artistic property which were in force in Roumania at the outbreak of the war or which are recognized or established under part A of this Annex and belong to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals. Consequently, the normal duration of such rights shall be deemed to be automatically extended in Roumania for a further term corresponding to the period so excluded.

4. The foregoing provisions concerning the rights in Roumania of the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals shall apply equally to the rights in the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers of Roumania and its nationals. Nothing, however, in these provisions shall entitle Roumania or its nationals to more favourable treatment in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers than is accorded by such Power in like cases to other United Nations or their nationals, nor shall Roumania be thereby required to accord to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or its nationals more favourable treatment than Roumania or its nationals receive in the territory of such Power in regard to the matters dealt with in the foregoing provisions.

5. Third parties in the territories of any of the Allied and Associated Powers or Roumania who, before the coming into force of the present Treaty, had bona fide acquired industrial, literary or artistic property rights conflicting with rights restored under part A of this Annex or with rights obtained with the priority provided thereunder, or had bona fide manufactured, published, reproduced, used or sold the subject matter of such rights, shall be permitted, without any liability for infringement, to continue to exercise such rights and to continue or to resume such manufacture, publication, reproduction, use or sale which had been bona fide acquired or commenced. In Roumania, such permission shall take the form of a nonexclusive licence granted on terms and conditions to be mutually agreed by the parties thereto or, in default of agreement, to be fixed by the Conciliation Commission established under Article 32 of the present Treaty. In the territories of each of the Allied and Associated Powers, however, bona fide third parties shall receive such protection as is accorded under similar circumstances to bona fide third parties whose rights are in conflict with those of the nationals of other Allied and Associated Powers.

6. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be construed to entitle Roumania or its nationals to any patent or utility model rights in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to inventions, relating to any article listed by name in Annex III of the present Treaty, made, or upon which applications were filed, by Roumania, or any of its nationals, in Roumania or in the territory of any other of the Axis Powers, or in any territory occupied by the Axis forces, during the time when such territory was under the control of the forces or authorities of the Axis Powers.

7. Roumania shall likewise extend the benefits of the foregoing provisions of this Annex to France, and to other United Nations which are not Allied or Associated Powers, whose diplomatic relations with Roumania have been broken off during the war and which undertake to extend to Roumania the benefits accorded to Roumania under the said provisions.

8. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be understood to conflict with Articles 24, 27, and 29 of the present Treaty.

B. Insurance

1. No obstacles, other than any applicable to insurers generally, shall be placed in the way of the resumption by insurers who are United Nations nationals of their former portfolios of business.

2. Should an insurer, who is a national of any of the United Nations, wish to resume his professional activities in Roumania, and should the value of the guarantee deposits or reserves required to be held as a condition of carrying on business in Roumania be found to have decreased as a result of the loss or depreciation of the securities which constituted such deposits or reserves, the Roumanian Government undertakes to accept, for a period of eighteen months, such securities as still remain as fulfilling any legal requirements in respect of deposits and reserves.

ANNEX V

Contracts, prescription and negotiable instruments

A. Contracts

1. Any contract which required for its execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex, shall, subject to the exceptions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 below, be deemed to have been dissolved as from the time when any of the parties thereto became enemies. Such dissolution, however, is without prejudice to the provisions of Article 29 of the present Treaty, nor shall it relieve any party to the contract from the obligation to repay amounts received as advances or as payments on account and in respect of which such party has not rendered performance in return.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 above, there shall be excepted from dissolution and, without prejudice to the rights contained in Article 27 of the present Treaty, there shall remain in force such parts of any contract as are severable and did not require for their execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto, having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex. Where the provisions of any contract are not so severable, the contract shall be deemed to have been dissolved in its entirety. The foregoing shall be subject to the application of domestic laws, orders or regulations made by any of the Allied and Associated Powers having jurisdiction over the contract or over any of the parties thereto and shall be subject to the terms of the contract.

3. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be deemed to invalidate transactions lawfully carried out in accordance with a contract between enemies if they have been carried out with the authorization of the Government of one of the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, contracts of insurance and re-insurance shall be subject to separate agreements between the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned and the Government of Roumania.

B. Periods of Prescription

1. All periods of prescription or limitation of right of action or of the right to take conservatory measures in respect of relations affecting persons or property, involving United Nations nationals and Roumanian nationals who, by reason of the state of war, were unable to take judicial action or to comply with the formalities necessary to safeguard their rights, irrespective of whether these periods commenced before or after the outbreak of war, shall be regarded as having been suspended, for the duration of the war, in Roumanian territory on the one hand, and on the other hand in the territory of those United Nations which grant to Roumania, on a reciprocal basis, the benefit of the provisions of this paragraph. These periods shall begin to run again on the coming into force of the present Treaty. The provisions of this paragraph shall be applicable in regard to the periods fixed for the presentation of interest or dividend coupons or for the presentation for payment of securities drawn for repayment or repayable on any other ground.

2. Where, on account of failure to perform any act or to comply with any formality during the war, measures of execution have been taken in Roumanian territory to the prejudice of a national of one of the United Nations, the Roumanian Government shall restore the rights which have been detrimentally affected. If such restoration is impossible or would be inequitable, the Roumanian Government shall provide that the United Nations national shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances.

C. Negotiable Instruments

1. As between enemies, no negotiable instrument made before the war shall be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of failure within the required time to present the instrument for acceptance or payment, or to give notice of non-acceptance or non-payment to drawers or endorsers, or to protest the instrument, nor by reason of failure to complete any formality during the war.

2. Where the period within which a negotiable instrument should have been presented for acceptance or for payment, or within which notice of non-acceptance or non-payment should have been given to the drawer or endorser, or within which the instrument should have been protested, has elapsed during the war, and the party who should have presented or protested the instrument or have given notice of non-acceptance or non-payment has failed to do so during the war, a period of not less than three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be allowed within which presentation, notice of non-acceptance or non-payment, or protest may be made.

3. If a person has, either before or during the war, incurred obligations under a negotiable instrument in consequence of an undertaking given to him by a person who has subsequently become an enemy, the latter shall remain liable to indemnify the former in respect of these obligations, notwithstanding the outbreak of war.

D. Special Provisions

1. For the purposes of this Annex, natural or juridical persons shall be regarded as enemies from the date when trading between them shall have become unlawful under laws, orders or regulations to which such persons or the contracts were subject.

2. Having regard to the legal system of the United States of America, the provisions of this Annex shall not apply as between the United States of America and Roumania.

ANNEX VI

Prize courts and judgments

A. Prize Courts

Each of the Allied and Associated Powers reserves the right to examine, according to a procedure to be established by it, all decisions and orders of the Roumanian Prize Courts in cases involving ownership rights of its nationals, and to recommend to the Roumanian Government that revision shall be undertaken of such of those decisions or orders as may not be in conformity with international law.

The Roumanian Government undertakes to supply copies of all documents comprising the records of these cases, including the decisions taken and orders issued, and to accept all recommendations made as a result of the examination of the said cases, and to give effect to such recommendations.

B. Judgments

The Roumanian Government shall take the necessary measures to enable nationals of any of the United Nations at any time within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty to submit to the appropriate Roumanian authorities for review any judgment given by a Roumanian court between June 22, 1941, and the coming into force of the present Treaty in any proceeding in which the United Nations national was unable to make adequate presentation of his case either as plaintiff or defendant. The Roumanian Government shall provide that, where the United Nations national has suffered injury by reason of any such judgment, he shall be restored in the position in which he was before the judgment was given or shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances. The term "United Nations nationals" includes corporations or associations organized or constituted under the laws of any of the United Nations.

In faith whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in the city of Paris in the Russian, English, French and Roumanian languages this tenth day of February, One Thousand Nine Hundred Forty-Seven.

Here follow the signatures of the Plenipotentiaries of: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America, Australia, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechosovakia, India, New Zealand, Ukranian Soviet Socialist Republic, Union of South Africa, Roumania.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaty is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive G, Eightieth Congress, first session, the treaty of peace with Rumania which was signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH BULGARIA

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive H (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the treaty of peace with Bulgaria, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF PEACE WITH BULGARIA

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Australia, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Czechoslovakia, Greece, India, New Zealand, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Union of South Africa and the People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as the States which are at war with Bulgaria and actively waged war against the European enemy states with substantial military forces, hereinafter referred to as "the Allied and Associated Powers", of the one part, and Bulgaria, of the other part;

Whereas Bulgaria, having become an ally of Hitlerite Germany and having participated on her side in the war against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and other United Nations, bears her share of responsibility for this war;

Whereas, however, Bulgaria, having ceased military operations against the United Nations, broke off relations with Germany, and, having concluded on October 28, 1944, an Armistice with the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, acting on behalf of all the United Nations at war with Bulgaria, took an active part in the war against Germany; and

Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria are desirous of concluding a treaty of peace, which, conforming to the principles of justice, will settle questions still outstanding as a result of the events hereinbefore recited and form the basis of friendly relations between them, thereby enabling the Allied and Associated Powers to support Bulgaria's application to become a member of the United Nations and also to adhere to any Convention concluded under the auspices of the United Nations;

Have therefore agreed to declare the cessation of the state of war and for this purpose to conclude the present Treaty of Peace, and have accordingly appointed the undersigned Plenipotentiaries who, after presentation of their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed on the following provisions:

PART I. FRONTIERS OF BULGARIA

Article 1

The frontiers of Bulgaria, as shown on the map annexed to the present Treaty (Annex I), shall be those which existed on January 1, 1941.

PART II. POLITICAL CLAUSES

Section I

Article 2

Bulgaria shall take all measures necessary to secure to all persons under Bulgarian jurisdiction, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting.

Article 3

Bulgaria, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures to set free, irrespective of citizenship and nationality, all persons held in confinement on account of their activities in favour of, or because of their sympathies with, the United Nations or because of their racial origin, and to repeal discriminatory legislation and restrictions imposed thereunder, shall complete these measures and shall in future not take any measures or enact any laws which would be incompatible with the purposes set forth in this Article.

Article 4

Bulgaria, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures for dissolving all organisations of a Fascist type on Bulgarian territory, whether political, military or para-military, as well as other organisations conducting propaganda hostile to the United Nations, shall not permit in future the existence and activities of organisations of that nature which have as their aim denial to the people of their democratic rights.

Article 5

1. Bulgaria shall take all necessary steps to ensure the apprehension and surrender for trial of:

(a) Persons accused of having committed, ordered or abetted war crimes and crimes against peace or humanity;

(b) Nationals of any Allied or Associated Power accused of having violated their national law by treason or collaboration with the enemy during the war.

2. At the request of the United Nations Government concerned, Bulgaria shall likewise make available as witnesses persons within its jurisdiction, whose evidence is required for the trial of the persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. Any disagreement concerning the application of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be referred by any of the Governments concerned to the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Sofia of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, who will reach agreement with regard to the difficulty.

Section II

Article 6

Bulgaria undertakes to recognize the full force of the Treaties of Peace with Italy, Roumania, Hungary and Finland and other agreements or arrangements which have been or will be reached by the Allied and Associated Powers in respect of Austria, Germany and Japan for the restoration of peace.

Article 7

Bulgaria undertakes to accept any arrangements which have been or may be agreed for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Article 8

1. Each Allied or Associated Power will notify Bulgaria, within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, which of its pre-war bilateral treaties with Bulgaria it desires to keep in force or revive. Any provisions not in conformity with the present Treaty shall, however, be deleted from the above-mentioned treaties.

2. All such treaties so notified shall be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. All such treaties not so notified shall be regarded as abrogated.

PART III. MILITARY, NAVAL AND AIR CLAUSES

Section I

Article 9

The maintenance of land, sea and air armaments and fortifications shall be closely restricted to meeting tasks of an internal character and local defence of frontiers. In accordance with the foregoing, Bulgaria is authorised to have armed forces consisting of not more than:

(a) A land army, including frontier troops, with a total strength of 55,000 personnel;

(b) Anti-aircraft artillery with a strength of 1,800 personnel;

(c) A navy with a personnel strength of 3,500 and a total tonnage of 7,250 tons;

(d) An air force, including any naval air arm, of 90 aircraft, including reserves, of which not more than 70 may be combat types of aircraft, with a total personnel strength of 5,200. Bulgaria shall not possess or acquire any aircraft designed primarily as bombers with internal bomb-carrying facilities.

These strengths shall in each case include combat, service and overhead personnel.

Article 10

The personnel of the Bulgarian Army, Navy and Air Force in excess of the respective strengths permitted under Article 9 shall be disbanded within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Article 11

Personnel not included in the Bulgarian Army, Navy or Air Force shall not receive any form of military training, naval training or military air training as defined in Annex II.

Article 12

1. The following construction to the north of the Greco-Bulgarian frontier is prohibited: permanent fortifications where weapons capable of firing into Greek territory can be emplaced; permanent military installations capable of being used to conduct or direct fire into Greek territory; and permanent supply and storage facilities emplaced solely for the use of the said fortifications and installations.

2. This prohibition does not include other types of non-permanent fortifications or surface accommodations and installations which are designed to meet only requirements of an internal character and of local defence of the frontiers.

Article 13

Bulgaria shall not possess, construct or experiment with any atomic weapon, any self-propelled or guided missiles or apparatus connected with their discharge (other than torpedoes and torpedo-launching gear comprising the normal armament of naval vessels permitted by the present Treaty), sea mines or torpedoes of non-contact types actuated by influence mechanisms, torpedoes capable of being manned, submarines or other submersible craft, motor torpedo boats, or specialised types of assault craft.

Article 14

Bulgaria shall not retain, produce or otherwise acquire, or maintain facilities for the manufacture of, war material in excess of that required for the maintenance of the armed forces permitted under Article 9 of the present Treaty.

Article 15

1. Excess war material of Allied origin shall be placed at the disposal of the Allied or Associated Power concerned according to the instructions given by that Power. Excess Bulgarian war material shall be placed at the disposal of the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. Bulgaria shall renounce all rights to this material.

2. War material of German origin or design in excess of that required for the armed forces permitted under the present Treaty shall be placed at the disposal of the Three Governments. Bulgaria shall not acquire or manufacture any war material of German origin or design, or employ or train any technicians, including military and civil aviation personnel, who are or have been nationals of Germany.

3. Excess war material mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be handed over or destroyed within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

4. A definition and list of war material for the purposes of the present Treaty are contained in Annex III.

Article 16

Bulgaria shall co-operate fully with the Allied and Associated Powers with a view to ensuring that Germany may not be able to take steps outside German territory towards rearmament.

Article 17

Bulgaria shall not acquire or manufacture civil aircraft which are of German or Japanese design or which embody major assemblies of German or Japanese manufacture or design.

Article 18

Each of the military, naval and air clauses of the present Treaty shall remain in force until modified in whole or in part by agreement between the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria or, after Bulgaria becomes a member of the United Nations, by agreement between the Security Council and Bulgaria.

Section II

Article 19

1. Bulgarian prisoners of war shall be repatriated as soon as possible, in accordance with arrangements agreed upon by the individual Powers detaining them and Bulgaria.

2. All costs, including maintenance costs, incurred in moving Bulgarian prisoners of war from their respective assembly points, as chosen by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned, to the point of their entry into Bulgarian territory, shall be borne by the Bulgarian Government.

PART IV. WITHDRAWAL OF ALLIED FORCES

Article 20

1. All armed forces of the Allied and Associated Powers shall be withdrawn from Bulgaria as soon as possible and in any case not later than 90 days from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

2. All unused Bulgarian currency and all Bulgarian goods in possession of the Allied forces in Bulgaria, acquired pursuant to Article 15 of the Armistice Agreement, shall be returned to the Bulgarian Government within the same period of 90 days.

3. Bulgaria shall, however, provide, during the period between the coming into force of the present Treaty and the final withdrawal of Allied forces, all such supplies and facilities as may be specifically required for the forces of the Allied and Associated Powers which are being withdrawn, and due compensation shall be paid to the Bulgarian Government for such supplies and facilities.

PART V. REPARATION AND RESTITUTION

Article 21

1. Losses caused to Yugoslavia and Greece by military operations and by the occupation by Bulgaria of the territory of those States shall be made good by Bulgaria to Yugoslavia and Greece, but, taking into consideration that Bulgaria has not only withdrawn from the war against the United Nations, but has declared and, in fact, waged war against Germany, the Parties agree that compensation for the above losses will be made by Bulgaria not in full but only in part, namely in the amount of $70,000,000 payable in kind from the products of manufacturing and extractive industries and agriculture over eight years beginning from the coming into force of the present Treaty. The sum to be paid to Greece shall amount to $45,000,000 and the sum to be paid to Yugoslavia shall amount to $25,000,000.

2. The quantities and categories of goods to be delivered shall be determined by agreements to be concluded by the Governments of Greece and Yugoslavia with the Government of Bulgaria. These agreements shall be communicated to the Heads of the Diplomatic Mission in Sofia of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America.

3. The basis of calculation for the settlement provided in this Article will be the United States dollar at its gold parity on July 1, 1946, i. e. $35 for one ounce of gold.

4. The basis of valuation of goods delivered under this Article shall be the 1938 international market prices in United States dollars, with an increase of fifteen per cent. for industrial products and ten per cent. for other products. The cost of transport to the Greek or Yugoslav frontier shall be chargeable to the Bulgarian Government.

Article 22

1. Bulgaria accepts the principles of the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943, and shall return, in the shortest possible time, property removed from the territory of any of the United Nations.

2. The obligation to make restitution applies to all identifiable property at present in Bulgaria which was removed by force or duress by any of the Axis Powers from the territory of any of the United Nations, irrespective of any subsequent transactions by which the present holder of any such property has secured possession.

3. If, in particular cases, it is impossible for Bulgaria to make restitution of objects of artistic, historic or archaeological value, belonging to the cultural heritage of the United Nation from whose territory such objects were removed by force or duress by Bulgarian forces, authorities or nationals, Bulgaria shall transfer to the United Nation concerned objects of the same kind as, and of approximately equivalent value to, the objects removed, in so far as such objects are obtainable in Bulgaria.

4. The Bulgarian Government shall return the property referred to in this Article in good order and, in this connection, shall bear all costs in Bulgaria relating to labour, materials and transport.

5. The Bulgarian Government shall cooperate with the United Nations in, and shall provide at its own expense all necessary facilities for, the search for and restitution of property liable to restitution under this Article.

6. The Bulgarian Government shall take the necessary measures to effect the return of property covered by this Article held in any third country by persons subject to Bulgarian jurisdiction.

7. Claims for the restitution of property shall be presented to the Bulgarian Government by the Government of the country from whose territory the property was removed, it being understood that rolling stock shall be regarded as having been removed from the territory to which it originally belonged. The period during which such claims may be presented shall be six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

8. The burden of identifying the property and of proving ownership shall rest on the claimant Government, and the burden of proving that the property was not removed by force or duress shall rest on the Bulgarian Government.

PART VI. ECONOMIC CLAUSES

Article 23

1. In so far as Bulgaria has not already done so, Bulgaria shall restore all legal rights and interests in Bulgaria of the United Nations and their nationals as they existed on April 24, 1941, and shall return all property in Bulgaria of the United Nations and their nationals as it now exists.

2. The Bulgarian Government undertakes that all property, rights and interests passing under this Article shall be restored free of all encumbrances and charges of any kind to which they may have become subject as a result of the war and without the imposition of any charges by the Bulgarian Government in connection with their return. The Bulgarian Government shall nullify all measures, including seizures, sequestration or control, taken by it against United Nations property between April 24, 1941, and the coming into force of the present Treaty. In cases where the property has not been returned within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, application shall be made to the Bulgarian authorities not later than twelve months from the coming into force of the Treaty, except in cases in which the claimant is able to show that he could not file his application within this period.

3. The Bulgarian Government shall invalidate transfers involving property, rights and interests of any description belonging to United Nations nationals, where such transfers resulted from force or duress exerted by Axis Governments or their agencies during the war.

4. (a) The Bulgarian Government shall be responsible for the restoration to complete good order of the property returned to United Nations nationals under paragraph 1 of this Article. In cases where property cannot be returned or where, as a result of the war, a United Nations national has suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Bulgaria, he shall receive from the Bulgarian Government compensation in levas to the extent of two-thirds of the sum necessary, at the date of payment, to purchase similar property or to make good the loss suffered. In no event shall United Nations nationals receive less favourable treatment with respect to compensation than that accorded to Bulgarian nationals.

(b) United Nations nationals who hold, directly or indirectly, ownership interests in corporations or associations which are not United Nations nationals within the meaning of paragraph 8 (a) of this Article, but which have suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Bulgaria, shall receive compensation in accordance with sub-paragraph (a) above. This compensation shall be calculated on the basis of the total loss or damage suffered by the corporation or association and shall bear the same proportion to such loss or damage as the beneficial interests of such nationals in the corporation or association bear to the total capital thereof.

(c) Compensation shall be paid free of any levies, taxes or other charges. It shall be freely usable in Bulgaria but shall be subject to the foreign exchange control regulations which may be in force in Bulgaria from time to time.

(d) The Bulgarian Government shall accord to United Nations nationals the same treatment in the allocation of materials for the repair or rehabilitation of their property in Bulgaria and in the allocation of foreign exchange for the importation of such materials as applies to Bulgarian nationals.

(e) The Bulgarian Government shall grant United Nations nationals an indemnity in levas at the same rate as provided in sub-paragraph (a) above to compensate them for the loss or damage due to special measures applied to their property during the war, and which were not applicable to Bulgarian property. This sub-paragraph does not apply to a loss of profit.

5. All reasonable expenses incurred in Bulgaria in establishing claims, including the assessment of loss or damage, shall be borne by the Bulgarian Government.

6. United Nations nationals and their property shall be exempted from any exceptional taxes, levies or imposts imposed on their capital assets in Bulgaria by the Bulgarian Government or any Bulgarian authority between the date of the Armistice and the coming into force of the present Treaty for the specific purpose of meeting charges arising out of the war or of meeting the costs of occupying forces or of reparation payable to any of the United Nations. Any sums which have been so paid shall be refunded.

7. The owner of the property concerned and the Bulgarian Government may agree upon arrangements in lieu of the provisions of this Article.

8. As used in this Article:

(a) "United Nations nationals" means individuals who are nationals of any of the United Nations, or corporations or associations organised under the laws of any of the United Nations, at the coming into force of the present Treaty, provided that the said individuals, corporations or associations also had this status at the date of the Armistice with Bulgaria.

The term "United Nations nationals" also includes all individuals, corporations or associations which, under the laws in force in Bulgaria during the war, have been treated as enemy;

(b) "Owner" means the United Nations national, as defined in subparagraph (a) above, who is entitled to the property in question, and includes a successor of the owner, provided that the successor is also a United Nations national as defined in sub-paragraph (a). If the successor has purchased the property in its damaged state, the transferor shall retain his rights to compensation under this Article, without prejudice to obligations between the transferor and the purchaser under domestic law;

(c) "Property" means all movable or immovable property, whether tangible or intangible, including industrial, literary and artistic property, as well as all rights or interests of any kind in property.

Article 24

Bulgaria recognizes that the Soviet Union is entitled to all German assets in Bulgaria transferred to the Soviet Union by the Control Council for Germany and undertakes to take all necessary measures to facilitate such transfers.

Article 25

1. Each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to seize, retain, liquidate or take any other action with respect to all property, rights and interests which at the coming into force of the present Treaty are within its territory and belong to Bulgaria or to Bulgarian nationals, and to apply such property or the proceeds thereof to such purposes as it may desire, within the limits of its claims and those of its nationals against Bulgaria or Bulgarian nationals, including debts, other than claims fully satisfied under other Articles of the present Treaty. All Bulgarian property, or the proceeds thereof, in excess of the amount of such claims, shall be returned.

2. The liquidation and disposition of Bulgarian property shall be carried out in accordance with the law of the Allied or Associated Power concerned. The Bulgarian owner shall have no rights with respect to such property except those which may be given him by that law.

3. The Bulgarian Government undertakes to compensate Bulgarian nationals whose property is taken under this Article and not returned to them.

4. No obligation is created by this Article on any Allied or Associated Power to return industrial property to the Bulgarian Government or Bulgarian nationals, or to include such property in determining the amounts which may be retained under paragraph 1 of this Article. The Government of each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to impose such limitations, conditions and restrictions on rights or interests with respect to industrial property in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power, acquired prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty by the Government or nationals of Bulgaria, as may be deemed by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power to be necessary in the national interest.

5. The property covered by paragraph 1 of this Article shall be deemed to include Bulgarian property which has been subject to control by reason of a state of war existing between Bulgaria and the Allied or Associated Power having jurisdiction over the property, but shall not include:

(a) Property of the Bulgarian Government used for consular or diplomatic purposes;

(b) Property belonging to religious bodies or private charitable institutions and used for religious or charitable purposes;

(c) Property of natural persons who are Bulgarian nationals permitted to reside within the territory of the country in which the property is located or to reside elsewhere in United Nations territory, other than Bulgarian property which at any time during the war was subjected to measures not generally applicable to the property of Bulgarian nationals resident in the same territory;

(d) Property rights arising since the resumption of trade and financial relations between the Allied and Associated Powers and Bulgaria, or arising out of transactions between the Government of any Allied or

Associated Power and Bulgaria since October 28, 1944;

(e) Literary and artistic property rights.

Article 26

1. From the coming into force of the present Treaty, property in Germany of Bulgaria and of Bulgarian nationals shall no longer be treated as enemy property and all restrictions based on such treatment shall be removed.

2. Identifiable property of Bulgaria and of Bulgarian nationals removed by force or duress from Bulgarian territory to Germany by German forces or authorities after October 28, 1944, shall be eligible for restitution.

3. The restoration and restitution of Bulgarian property in Germany shall be effected in accordance with measures which will be determined by the Powers in occupation of Germany.

4. Without prejudice to these and to any other dispositions in favour of Bulgaria and Bulgarian nationals by the Powers occupying Germany, Bulgaria waives on its own behalf and on behalf of Bulgarian nationals all claims against Germany and German nationals outstanding on May 8, 1945, except those arising out of contracts and other obligations entered into, and rights acquired, before September 1, 1939. This waiver shall be deemed to include debts, all intergovernmental claims in respect of arrangements entered into in the course of the war and all claims for loss or damage arising during the war.

Article 27

1. The existence of the state of war shall not, in itself, be regarded as affecting the obligation to pay pecuniary debts arising out of obligations and contracts which existed, and rights which were acquired, before the existence of the state of war, which became payable prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty, and which are due by the Government or nationals of Bulgaria to the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers or are due by the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers to the Government or nationals of Bulgaria.

2. Except as otherwise expressly provided in the present Treaty, nothing therein shall be construed as impairing debtor-creditor relationships arising out of pre-war contracts concluded either by the Government or nationals of Bulgaria.

Article 28

1. Bulgaria waives all claims of any description against the Allied and Associated Powers on behalf of the Bulgarian Government or Bulgarian nationals arising directly out of the war or out of actions taken because of the existence of a state of war in Europe after September 1, 1939, whether or not the Allied or Associated Power was at war with Bulgaria at the time, including the following:

(a) Claims for losses or damages sustained as a consequence of acts of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers;

(b) Claims arising from the presence, operations or actions of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers in Bulgarian territory;

(c) Claims with respect to the decrees or orders of Prize Courts of Allied or Associated Powers, Bulgaria agreeing to accept as valid and binding all decrees and orders of such Prize Courts on or after September 1, 1939, concerning Bulgarian ships or Bulgarian goods or the payment of costs;

(d) Claims arising out of the exercise or purported exercise of belligerent rights.

2. The provisions of this Article shall bar, completely and finally, all claims of the nature referred to herein, which will be henceforward extinguished, whoever may be the parties in interest. The Bulgarian Government agrees to make equitable compensation in levas to persons who furnished supplies or services on requisition to the forces of Allied or Associated Powers in Bulgarian territory and in satisfaction of noncombat damage claims against the forces of Allied or Associated Powers arising in Bulgarian territory.

3. Bulgaria likewise waives all claims of the nature covered by paragraph 1 of this Article on behalf of the Bulgarian Government or Bulgarian nationals against any of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Bulgaria were broken off during the war and which took action in cooperation with the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. The waiver of claims by Bulgaria under paragraph 1 of this Article includes any claims arising out of actions taken by any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to Bulgarian ships between September 1, 1939, and the coming into force of the present Treaty, as well as any claims and debts arising out of the Conventions on prisoners of war now in force.

Article 29

1. Pending the conclusion of commercial treaties or agreements between individual United Nations and Bulgaria, the Bulgarian Government shall, during a period of eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, grant the following treatment to each of the United Nations which, in fact, reciprocally grants similar treatment in like matters to Bulgaria:

(a) In all that concerns duties and charges on importation or exportation, the internal taxation of imported goods and all regulations pertaining thereto, the United Nations shall be granted unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment;

(b) In all other respects, Bulgaria shall make no arbitrary discrimination against goods originating in or destined for any territory of any of the United Nations as compared with like goods originating in or destined for territory of any other of the United Nations or of any other foreign country;

(c) United Nations nationals, including juridical persons, shall be granted national and most-favoured-nation treatment in all matters pertaining to commerce, industry, shipping and other forms of business activity within Bulgaria. These provisions shall not apply to commercial aviation;

(d) Bulgaria shall grant no exclusive or discriminatory right to any country with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall afford all the United Nations equality of opportunity in obtaining international commercial aviation rights in Bulgarian territory, including the right to land for refueling and repair, and, with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall grant on a reciprocal and non-discriminatory basis to all United Nations the right to fly over Bulgarian territory without landing. These provisions shall not affect the interests of the national defence of Bulgaria.

2. The foregoing undertakings by Bulgaria shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in commercial treaties concluded by Bulgaria before the war, and the provisions with respect to reciprocity granted by each of the United Nations shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in the commercial treaties concluded by that State.

Article 30

Bulgaria shall facilitate as far as possible railway traffic in transit through its territory at reasonable rates and shall negotiate with neighboring States all reciprocal agreements necessary for this purpose.

Article 31

1. Any disputes which may arise in connection with Articles 22 and 23 and Annexes IV, V and VI of the present Treaty shall be referred to a Conciliation Commission composed of an equal number of representatives of the United Nations Government concerned and of the Bulgarian Government. If agreement has not been reached within three months of the dispute having been referred to the Conciliation Commission, either Government may require the addition of a third member to the Commission, and failing agreement between the two Governments on the selection of this member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 32

Articles 22, 23, 29 and Annex VI of the present Treaty shall apply to the Allied and Associated Powers and France and to those of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Bulgaria have been broken off during the war.

Article 33

The provisions of Annexes IV, V, and VI shall, as in the case of the other Annexes, have force and effect as integral parts of the present Treaty.

PART VII. CLAUSE RELATING TO THE DANUBE

Article 34

Navigation on the Danube shall be free and open for the nationals, vessels of commerce, and goods of all States, on a footing of equality in regard to port and navigation charges and conditions for merchant shipping. The foregoing shall not apply to traffic between ports of the same State.

PART VIII. FINAL CLAUSES

Article 35

1. For a period not to exceed eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Sofia of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, acting in concert, will represent the Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the Bulgarian Government in all matters concerning the execution and interpretation of the present Treaty.

2. The Three Heads of Mission will give the Bulgarian Government such guidance, technical advice and clarification as may be necessary to ensure the rapid and efficient execution of the present Treaty both in letter and in spirit.

3. The Bulgarian Government shall afford the said Three Heads of Mission all necessary information and any assistance which they may require in the fulfilment of the tasks devolving on them under the present Treaty.

Article 36

1. Except where another procedure is specifically provided under any Article of the present Treaty, any dispute concerning the interpretation or execution of the Treaty, which is not settled by direct diplomatic negotiations, shall be referred to the Three Heads of Mission acting under Article 35, except that in this case the Heads of Mission will not be restricted by the time limit provided in that Article. Any such dispute not resolved by them within a period of two months shall, unless the parties to the dispute mutually agree upon another means of settlement, be referred at the request of either party to the dispute to a Commission composed of one representative of each party and a third member selected by mutual agreement of the two parties from nationals of a third country. Should the two parties fail to agree within a period of one month upon the appointment of the third member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission, and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 37

1. Any member of the United Nations, not a signatory to the present Treaty, which is at war with Bulgaria, may accede to the Treaty and upon accession shall be deemed to be an Associated Power for the purposes of the Treaty.

2. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and shall take effect upon deposit.

Article 38

The present Treaty, of which the Russian and English texts are authentic, shall be ratified by the Allied and Associated Powers. It shall also be ratified by Bulgaria. It shall come into force immediately upon the deposit of ratifications by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America. The instruments of ratification shall, in the shortest time possible, be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

With respect to each Allied or Associated Power whose instrument of ratfication is thereafter deposited, the Treaty shall come into force upon the date of deposit. The present Treaty shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which shall furnish certified copies to each of the signatory States.

ANNEX I

(See Article 1)

Map of the Bulgarian frontiers

ANNEX II

(See Article 11)

Definition of military, military air and naval training

1. Military training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specially designed or adapted for army purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and carrying out of all drill or movements which teach or practice evolutions performed by fighting forces in battle; and the organised study of tactics, strategy and staff work.

2. Military air training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specially designed or adapted for air force purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and practice of all specialised evolutions, including formation flying, performed by aircraft in the accomplishment of an air force mission; and the organised study of air tactics, strategy and staff work.

3. Naval training is defined as: the study, administration or practice in the use of warships or naval establishments as well as the study or employment of all apparatus and training devices relative thereto, which are used in the prosecution of naval warfare, except for those which are also normally used for civilian purposes; also the teaching, practice or organised study of naval tactics, strategy and staff work including the execution of all operations and manoeuvres not required in the peaceful employment of ships.

ANNEX III

(See Article 15)

Definition and list of war material

The term "war material" as used in the present Treaty shall include all arms, ammunition and implements specially designed or adapted for use in war as listed below.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to amend the list periodically by modification or addition in the light of subsequent scientific development.

Category I.

1. Military rifles, carbines, revolvers and pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use.

2. Machine guns, military automatic or autoloading rifles, and machine pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; machine gun mounts.

3. Guns, howitzers, mortars, cannon special to aircraft; breechless or recoil-less guns and flamethrowers; barrels and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; carriages and mountings for the foregoing.

4. Rocket projectors; launching and control mechanisms for self-propelling and guided missiles; mountings for same.

5. Self-propelling and guided missiles, projectiles, rockets, fixed ammunition and cartridges, filled or unfilled, for the arms listed in sub-paragraphs 1–4 above and fuses, tubes or contrivances to explode or operate them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

6. Grenades, bombs, torpedoes, mines, depth charges and incendiary material or charges, filled or unfilled; all means for exploding or operating them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

7. Bayonets.

Category II.

1. Armoured fighting vehicles; armoured trains, not technically convertible to civilian use.

2. Mechanical and self-propelled carriages for any of the weapons listed in Category I; special type military chassis or bodies other than those enumerated in sub-paragraph 1 above.

3. Armour plate, greater than three inches in thickness, used for protective purposes in warfare.

Category III.

1. Aiming and computing devices, including predictors and plotting apparatus, for fire control; direction of fire instruments; gun sights; bomb sights; fuse setters; equipment for the calibration of guns and fire control instruments.

2. Assault bridging, assault boats and storm boats.

3. Deceptive warfare, dazzle and decoy devices.

4. Personal war equipment of a specialised nature not readily adaptable to civilian use.

Category IV.

1. Warships of all kinds, including converted vessels and craft designed or intended for their attendance or support, which cannot be technically reconverted to civilian use, as well as weapons, armour, ammunition, aircraft and all other equipment, material, machines and installations not used in peacetime on ships other than warships.

2. Landing craft and amphibious vehicles or equipment of any kind; assault boats or devices of any type as well as catapults or other apparatus for launching or throwing aircraft, rockets, propelled weapons or any other missile, instrument or device whether manned or unmanned, guided or uncontrolled.

3. Submersible or semi-submersible ships, craft, weapons, devices or apparatus of any kind, including specially designed harbour defence booms, except as required by salvage, rescue or other civilian uses, as well as all equipment, accessories, spare parts, experimental or training aids, instruments or installations as may be specially designed for the construction, testing, maintenance or housing of the same.

Category V.

1. Aircraft, assembled or unassembled, both heavier and lighter than air, which are designed or adapted for aerial combat by the use of machine guns, rocket projectors or artillery or for the carrying and dropping of bombs, or which are equipped with, or which by reason of their design or construction are prepared for, any of the appliances referred to in sub-paragraph 2 below.

2. Aerial gun mounts and frames, bomb racks, torpedo carriers and bomb release or torpedo release machanisms; gun turrets and blisters.

3. Equipment specially designed for and used solely by airborne troops.

4. Catapults or launching apparatus for ship-borne, land- or sea-based aircraft; apparatus for launching aircraft weapons.

5. Barrage balloons.

Category VI.

Asphyxiating, lethal, toxic or incapacitating substances intended for war purposes, or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VII.

Propellants, explosives, pyrotechnics or liquefied gases destined for the propulsion, explosion, charging or filling of, or for use in connection with, the war material in the present categories, not capable of civilian use or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VIII.

Factory and tool equipment specially designed for the production and maintenance of the material enumerated above and not technically convertible to civilian use.

ANNEX IV

Industrial, literary and artistic property

1. (a) A period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be accorded to the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals without extension fees or other penalty of any sort in order to enable them to accomplish all necessary acts for the obtaining or preserving in Bulgaria of rights in industrial, literary and artistic property which were not capable of accomplishment owing to the existence of a state of war.

(b) Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals who had duly applied in the territory of any Allied or Associated Power for a patent or registration of a utility model not earlier than twelve months before the outbreak of the war with Bulgaria or during the war, or for the registration of an industrial design or model or trade mark not earlier than six months before the outbreak of the war with Bulgaria or during the war, shall be entitled within twelve months after the coming into force of the present Treaty to apply for corresponding rights in Bulgaria, with a right of priority based upon the previous filing of the application in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power.

(c) Each of the Allied and Associated Powers and its nationals shall be accorded a period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty during which they may institute proceedings in Bulgaria against those natural or juridical persons who are alleged illegally to have infringed their rights in industrial, literary, or artistic property between the date of the outbreak of the war and the coming into force of the Treaty.

2. A period from the outbreak of the war until a date eighteen months after the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded in determining the time within which a patent must be worked or a design or trade mark used.

3. The period from the outbreak of the war until the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded from the normal term of rights in industrial, literary and artisic property which were in force in Bulgaria at the outbreak of the war or whch are recognized or established under this Annex and belong to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals. Consequently, the normal duration of such rights shall be deemed to be automatically extended in Bulgaria for a further term corresponding to the period so excluded.

4. The foregoing provisions concerning the rights in Bulgaria of the Allied and Associated Powers and ther nationals shall apply equally to the rights in the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers of Bulgaria and its nationals. Nothing, however, in these provisions shall entitle Bulgaria or its nationals to more favorable treatment in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers than is accorded by such Power in like cases to other United Nations or their nationals, nor shall Bulgaria be thereby required to accord to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or its nationals more favorable treatment than Bulgaria or its nationals receive in the territory of such Power in regard to the matters dealt with in the foregoing provisions.

5. Third parties in the territories of any of the Allied and Associated Powers or Bulgaria who, before the coming into force of the present Treaty, had bona fide acquired industrial, literary or artistic property rights conflicting with rights restored under this Annex or with rights obtained with the priority provided thereunder or had bona fide manufactured, published, reproduced, used or sold the subject matter of such rights, shall be permitted, without any liability for infringement, to continue to exercise such rights and to continue or to resume such manufacture, publication, reproduction, use or sale which had been bona fide acquired or commenced. In Bulgaria, such permission shall take the form of a non-exclusive licence granted on terms and conditions to be mutually agreed by the parties thereto or, in default of agreement, to be fixed by the Conciliation Commission established under Article 31 of the present Treaty. In the territories of each of the Allied and Associated Powers, however, bona fide third parties shall receive such protection as is accorded under similar circumstances to bona fide third parties whose rights are in conflict with those of the nationals of other Allied and Associated Powers.

6. Nothing in this Annex shall be construed to entitle Bulgaria or its nationals to any patent or utility model rights in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to inventions, relating to any article listed by name in Annex III of the present Treaty, made, or upon which applications were filed, by Bulgaria, or any of its nationals, in Bulgaria or in the territory of any other of the Axis Powers, or in any territory occupied by the Axis forces, during the time when such territory was under the control of the forces or authorities of the Axis Powers.

7. Bulgaria shall likewise extend the benefits of the foregoing provisions of this Annex to France, and to other United Nations which are not Allied or Associated Powers, whose diplomatic relations with Bulgaria have been broken off during the war and which undertake to extend to Bulgaria the benefits accorded to Bulgaria under the said provisions.

8. Nothing in this Annex shall be understood to conflict with Articles 23, 25 and 27 of the present Treaty.

ANNEX V

Contracts, prescription and negotiable instruments

A. Contracts

1. Any contract which required for its execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex, shall, subject to the exceptions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 below, be deemed to have been dissolved as from the time when any of the parties thereto became enemies. Such dissolution, however, is without prejudice to the provisions of Article 27 of the present Treaty, nor shall it relieve any party to the contract from the obligation to repay amounts received as advances or as payments on account and in respect of which such party has not rendered performance in return.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 above, there shall be excepted from dissolution and, without prejudice to the rights contained in Article 25 of the present Treaty, there shall remain in force such parts of any contract as are severable and did not require for their execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto, having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex. Where the provisions of any contract are not so severable, the contract shall be deemed to have been dissolved in its entirety. The foregoing shall be subject to the application of domestic laws, orders or regulations made by any of the Allied and Associated Powers having jurisdiction over the contract or over any of the parties thereto and shall be subject to the terms of the contract.

3. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be deemed to invalidate transactions lawfully carried out in accordance with a contract between enemies if they have been carried out with the authorization of the Government of one of the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, contracts of insurance and re-insurance shall be subject to separate agreements between the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned and the Government of Bulgaria.

B. Periods of Prescription

1. All periods of prescription or limitation of right of action or of the right to take conservatory measures in respect of relations affecting persons or property, involving United Nations nationals and Bulgarian nationals who, by reason of the state of war, were unable to take judicial action or to comply with the formalities necessary to safeguard their rights, irrespective of whether these periods commenced before or after the outbreak of war, shall be regarded as having been suspended, for the duration of the war, in Bulgarian territory on the one hand, and on the other hand in the territory of those United Nations which grant to Bulgaria, on a reciprocal basis, the benefit of the provisions of this paragraph. These periods shall begin to run again on the coming into force of the present treaty. The provisions of this paragraph shall be applicable in regard to the periods fixed for the presentation of interest or dividend coupons or for the presentation for payment of securities drawn for repayment or repayable on any other ground.

2. Where, on account of failure to perform any act or to comply with any formality during the war, measures of execution have been taken in Bulgarian territory to the prejudice of a national of one of the United Nations, the Bulgarian Government shall restore the rights which have been detrimentally affected. If such restoration is impossible or would be inequitable, the Bulgarian Government shall provide that the United Nations national shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances.

C. Negotiable Instruments

1. As between enemies, no negotiable instrument made before the war shall be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of failure within the required time to present the instrument for acceptance or payment, or to give notice of non-acceptance or non-payment to drawers or endorsers, or to protest the instrument, nor by reason of failure to complete any formality during the war.

2. Where the period within which a negotiable instrument should have been presented for acceptance or for payment, or within which notice of non-acceptance or non-payment should have been given to the drawer or endorser, or within which the instrument should have been protested, has elapsed during the war, and the party who should have presented or protested the instrument or have given notice of non-acceptance or non-payment has failed to do so during the war, a period of not less than three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be allowed within which presentation, notice of non-acceptance or non-payment, or protest may be made.

3. If a person has, either before or during the war, incurred obligations under a negotiable instrument in consequence of an undertaking given to him by a person who has subsequently become an enemy, the latter shall remain liable to indemnify the former in respect of these obligations, notwithstanding the outbreak of war.

D. Special Provisions

1. For the purposes of this Annex, natural or juridical persons shall be regarded as enemies from the date when trading between them shall have become unlawful under laws, orders or regulations to which such persons or the contracts were subject.

2. Having regard to the legal system of the United States of America, the provisions of this Annex shall not apply as between the United States of America and Bulgaria.

ANNEX VI

Judgments

The Bulgarian Government shall take the necessary measures to enable nationals of any of the United Nations at any time within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty to submit to the appropriate Bulgarian authorities for review any judgment given by a Bulgarian court between April 24, 1941, and the coming into force of the present Treaty in any proceeding in which the United Nations national was unable to make adequate presentation of his case either as plaintiff or defendant. The Bulgarian Government shall provide that, where the United Nations national has suffered injury by reason of any such judgment, he shall be restored in the position in which he was before the judgment was given or shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances. The term "United Nations nationals" includes corporations or associations organised or constituted under the laws of any of the United Nations.

In faith whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in the city of Paris in the Russian, English, French and Bulgarian languages this tenth day of February, One Thousand Nine Hundred Forty-Seven.

Here follow the signatures of the Plenipotentiaries of: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America, Australia, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Czechoslovakia, Greece, India, New Zealand, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Union of South Africa, People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Bulgaria.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaty is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive H, Eightieth Congress, first session, the Treaty of Peace with Bulgaria, which was signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to and the treaty is ratified.

TREATY OF PEACE WITH HUNGARY

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider Executive I (80th Cong., 1st sess.), the Treaty of Peace With Hungary, signed at Paris on February 10, 1947, which was read the second time, as follows:

TREATY OF PEACE WITH HUNGARY

The Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Australia, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, the Union of South Africa, and the People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, as the States which are at war with Hungary and actively waged war against the European enemy States with substantial military forces, hereinafter referred to as "the Allied and Associated Powers", of the one part, and Hungary, of the other part;

Whereas Hungary, having become an ally of Hitlerite Germany and having participated on her side in the war against the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, the United States of America and other United Nations, bears her share of responsibility for this war;

Whereas, however, Hungary on December 28, 1944, broke off relations with Germany, declared war on Germany and on January 20, 1945, concluded an Armistice with the Governments of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom, and the United States of America, acting on behalf of all the United Nations which were at war with Hungary; and

Whereas the Allied and Associated Powers and Hungary are desirous of concluding a treaty of peace, which, conforming to the principles of justice, will settle questions still outstanding as a result of the events hereinbefore recited and form the basis of friendly relations between them, thereby enabling the Allied and Associated Powers to support Hungary's application to become a member of the United Nations and also to adhere to any Convention concluded under the auspices of the United Nations;

Have therefore agreed to declare the cessation of the state of war and for this purpose to conclude the present Treaty of Peace, and have accordingly appointed the undersigned Plenipotentiaries who, after presentation of their full powers, found in good and due form, have agreed on the following provisions:

PART I. FRONTIERS OF HUNGARY

Article 1

1. The frontiers of Hungary with Austria and with Yugoslavia shall remain those which existed on January 1, 1938.

2. The decisions of the Vienna Award of August 30, 1940, are declared null and void. The frontier between Hungary and Roumania as it existed on January 1, 1938, is hereby restored.

3. The frontier between Hungary and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, from the point common to the frontier of those two States and Roumania to the point common to the frontier of those two States and Czechoslovakia, is fixed along the former frontier between Hungary and Czechoslovakia as it existed on January 1, 1938.

4. (a) The decisions of the Vienna Award of November 2, 1938, are declared null and void.

(b) The frontier between Hungary and Czechoslovakia from the point common to the frontier of those two States and Austria to the point common to those two States and the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics is hereby restored as it existed on January 1, 1938, with the exception of the change resulting from the stipulations of the following sub-paragraph.

(c) Hungary shall cede to Czechoslovakia the villages of Horvathjarfalu, Oroszvar and Dunacsun, together with their cadastral territory as indicated on Map No. IA annexed to the present Treaty. Accordingly, the Czechoslovak frontier on this sector shall be fixed as follows: from the point common to the frontiers of Austria, Hungary and Czechoslovakia, as they existed on January 1, 1938, the present Hungarian-Austrian frontier shall become the frontier between Austria and Czechoslovakia as far as a point roughly 500 meters south of hill 134 (3.5 kilometers northwest of the church of Rajka), this point now becoming common to the frontiers of the three named States; thence the new frontier between Czechoslovakia and Hungary shall go eastwards along the northern cadastral boundary of the village of Rajka to the right bank of the Danube at a point approximately 2 kilometers north of hill 128 (3.5 kilometers east of the church of Rajka), where the new frontier will, in the principal channel of navigation of the Danube, join the Czechoslovak-Hungarian frontier as it existed on January 1, 1938; the dam and spillway within the village limits of Rajka will remain on Hungarian territory.

(d) The exact line of the new frontier between Hungary and Czechoslovakia laid down in the preceding sub-paragraph shall be determined on the spot by a boundary Commission composed of the representatives of the two Governments concerned. The Commission shall complete its work within two months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

(e) In the event of a bilateral agreement not being concluded between Hungary and Czechoslovakia concerning the transfer to Hungary of the population of the ceded area, Czechoslovakia guarantees them full human and civic rights. All the guarantees and prerogatives stipulated in the Czechoslovak-Hungarian Agreement of February 27, 1946, on the exchange of populations will be applicable to those who voluntarily leave the area ceded to Czechoslovakia.

5. The frontiers described above are shown on Maps I and IA in Annex I of the present Treaty.

PART II. POLITICAL CLAUSES

Section I

Article 2

1. Hungary shall take all measures necessary to secure to all persons under Hungarian jurisdiction, without distinction as to race, sex, language or religion, the enjoyment of human rights and of the fundamental freedoms, including freedom of expression, of press and publication, of religious worship, of political opinion and of public meeting.

2. Hungary further undertakes that the laws in force in Hungary shall not, either in their content or in their application, discriminate or entail any discrimination between persons of Hungarian nationality on the ground of their race, sex, language or religion, whether in reference to their persons, property, business, professional or financial interests, status, political or civil rights or any other matter.

Article 3

Hungary, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures to set free, irrespective of citizenship and nationality, all persons held in confinement on account of their activities in favour of, or because of their sympathies with, the United Nations or because of their racial origin, and to repeal discriminatory legislation and restrictions imposed thereunder, shall complete these measures and shall in future not take any measures or enact any laws which would be incompatible with the purposes set forth in this Article.

Article 4

Hungary, which in accordance with the Armistice Agreement has taken measures for dissolving all organisations of a Fascist type on Hungarian territory, whether political, military or para-military, as well as other organisations conducting propaganda, including revisionist propaganda, hostile to the United Nations, shall not permit in future the existence and activities of organizations of that nature which have as their aim denial to the people of their democratic rights.

Article 5

1. Hungary shall enter into negotiations with Czechoslovakia in order to solve the problem of those inhabitants of Magyar ethnic origin, residing in Czechoslovakia, who will not be settled in Hungary in accordance with the provisions of the Agreement of February 27, 1946, on exchange of populations.

2. Should no agreement be reached within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, Czechoslovakia shall have the right to bring this question before the Council of Foreign Ministers and to request the assistance of the Council in effecting a final solution.

Article 6

1. Hungary shall take all necessary steps to ensure the apprehension and surrender for trial of:

(a) Persons accused of having committed, ordered or abetted war crimes and crimes against peace or humanity;

(b) Nationals of any Allied or Associated Power accused of having violated their national law by treason or collaboration with the enemy during the war.

2. At the request of the United Nations Government concerned, Hungary shall likewise make available as witnesses persons within its jurisdiction, whose vidence is required for the trial of the persons referred to in paragraph 1 of this Article.

3. Any disagreement concerning the application of the provisions of paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be referred by any of the Governments concerned to the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Budapest of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, who will reach agreement with regard to the difficulty.

Section II

Article 7

Hungary undertakes to recognise the full force of the Treaties of Peace with Italy, Roumania, Bulgaria and Finland and other agreements or arrangements which have been or will be reached by the Allied and Associated Powers in respect of Austria, Germany and Japan for the restoration of peace.

Article 8

The state of war between Hungary and Roumania shall terminate upon the coming into force both of the present Treaty of Peace and the Treaty of Peace between the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, the United States of America, Australia, the Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand, the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and the Union of South Africa, of the one part, and Roumania of the other part.

Article 9

Hungary undertakes to accept any arrangements which have been or may be agreed for the liquidation of the League of Nations and the Permanent Court of International Justice.

Article 10

1. Each Allied or Associated Power will notify Hungary, within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, which of its pre-war bilateral treaties with Hungary it desires to keep in force or revive. Any provisions not in conformity with the present Treaty shall, however, be deleted from the above-mentioned treaties.

2. All such treaties so notified shall be registered with the Secretariat of the United Nations in accordance with Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.

3. All such treaties not so notified shall be regarded as abrogated.

Article 11

1. Hungary shall hand over to Yugoslavia and to Czechoslovakia, within a period of not more than eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, objects of the following categories constituting the cultural heritage of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia which originated in those territories and which, after 1848, came into the possession of the Hungarian State or of Hungarian public institutions as a consequence of Hungarian domination over those territories prior to 1919:

(a) Historical archives which came into being as integral wholes in Yugoslav or Czechoslovak territories;

(b) Libraries, historical documents, antiquities and other cultural objects which belonged to the institutions on Yugoslav or Czechoslovak territories or to historical personalities of the Yugoslav and Czechoslovak peoples;

(c) Original artistic, literary and scientific objects which are the work of Yugoslav or Czechoslovak artists, writers and scientists.

2. Objects acquired by purchase, gift or legacy and original works of Hungarians are excluded from the provisions of paragraph 1.

3. Hungary shall also hand over to Yugoslavia the archives of the Illyrian Deputation, the Illyrian Commission and Illyrian Chancellery, which relate to the 18th century.

4. The Hungarian Government shall, on the coming into force of the present Treaty, give the authorized representatives of Yugoslavia and Czechoslovakia all necessary assistance in finding these objects and making them available for examination. Thereafter, but no later than one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Yugoslav and Czechoslovak Governments shall hand the Hungarian Government a list of the objects claimed under this Article. Should the Hungarian Government, within three months of the receipt of the list, raise objection to the inclusion therein of any objects, and should no agreement be reached between the Governments concerned within a further month, the dispute shall be settled in accordance with the provisions of Article 40 of the present Treaty.

PART III. MILITARY AND AIR CLAUSES

Section I

Article 12

The maintenance of land and air armaments and fortifications shall be closely restricted to meeting tasks of an internal character and local defense of frontiers. In accordance with the foregoing, Hungary is authorised to have armed forces consisting of not more than:

(a) A land army, including frontier troops, anti-aircraft and river flotilla personnel, with a total strength of 65,000 personnel;

(b) An air force of 90 aircraft, including reserves, of which not more than 70 may be combat types of aircraft, with a total personnel strength of 5,000. Hungary shall not possess or acquire any aircraft designed primarily as bombers with internal bomb-carrying facilities.

These strengths shall in each case include combat, service and overhead personnel.

Article 13

The personnel of the Hungarian Army and Air Force in excess of the respective strengths permitted under Article 12 shall be disbanded within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

Article 14

Personnel not included in the Hungarian Army or Air Force shall not receive any form of military training or military air training as defined in Annex II.

Article 15

Hungary shall not possess, construct or experiment with any atomic weapon, any self-propelled or guided missiles or apparatus connected with their discharge (other than torpedoes and torpedo launching gear comprising the normal armament of naval vessels permitted by the present Treaty), sea mines or torpedoes of non-contact types actuated by influence mechanisms, torpedoes capable of being manned, submarines or other submersible craft, motor torpedo boats, or specialised types of assault craft.

Article 16

Hungary shall not retain, produce or otherwise acquire, or maintain facilities for the manufacture of, war material in excess of that required for the maintenance of the armed forces permitted under Article 12 of the present Treaty.

Article 17

1. Excess war material of Allied origin shall be placed at the disposal of the Allied or Associated Power concerned according to the instructions given by that Power. Excess Hungarian war material shall be placed at the disposal of the Governments of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America. Hungary shall renounce all rights to this material.

2. War material of German origin or design in excess of that required for the armed forces permitted under the present Treaty shall be placed at the disposal of the Three Governments. Hungary shall not acquire or manufacture any war material of German origin or design, or employ or train any technicians, including military and civil aviation personnel, who are or have been nationals of Germany.

3. Excess war material mentioned in paragraphs 1 and 2 of this Article shall be handed over or destroyed within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

4. A definition and list of war material for the purposes of the present Treaty are contained in Annex III.

Article 18

Hungary shall co-operate fully with the Allied and Associated Powers with a view to ensuring that Germany may not be able to take steps outside German territory towards rearmament.

Article 19

Hungary shall not acquire or manufacture civil aircraft which are of German or Japanese design or which embody major assemblies of German or Japanese manufacture or design.

Article 20

Each of the military and air clauses of the present Treaty shall remain in force until modified in whole or in part by agreement between the Allied and Associated Powers and Hungary or, after Hungary becomes a member of the United Nations, by agreement between the Security Council and Hungary.

Section II

Article 21

1. Hungarian prisoners of war shall be repatriated as soon as possible, in accordance with arrangements agreed upon by the individual Powers detaining them and Hungary.

2. All costs, including maintenance costs, incurred in moving Hungarian prisoners of war from their respective assembly points, as chosen by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned, to the point of their entry into Hungarian territory, shall be borne by the Hungarian Government.

PART IV. WITHDRAWAL OF ALLIED FORCES

Article 22

1. Upon the coming into force of the present Treaty, all Allied forces shall, within a period of 90 days, be withdrawn from Hungary, subject to the right of the Soviet Union to keep on Hungarian territory such armed forces as it may need for the maintenance of the lines of communication of the Soviet Army with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria.

2. All unused Hungarian currency and all Hungarian goods in possession of the Allied forces in Hungary, acquired pursuant to Article 11 of the Armistice Agreement, shall be returned to the Hungarian Government within the same period of 90 days.

3. Hungary shall, however, make available such maintenance and facilities as may specifically be required for the maintenance of the lines of communication with the Soviet zone of occupation in Austria, for which due compensation will be made to the Hungarian Government.

PART V. REPARATION AND RESTITUTION

Article 23

1. Losses caused to the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia by military operations and by the occupation by Hungary of the territories of these States shall be made good by Hungary to the Soviet Union, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia, but, taking into consideration that Hungary has not only withdrawn from the war against the United Nations, but has also declared war on Germany, the Parties agree that compensation for the above losses will be made by Hungary not in full but only in part, namely in the amount of $300,000,000 payable over eight years from January 20, 1945, in commodities (machine equipment, river craft, grain and other commodities), the sum to be paid to the Soviet Union to amount to $200,000,000, and the sum to be paid to Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia to amount to $100,000,000.

2. The basis of calculation for the settlement provided in this Article will be the United States dollar at its gold parity on the day of the signing of the Armistice Agreement, i. e. $35 for one ounce of gold.

Article 24

1. Hungary accepts the principles of the United Nations Declaration of January 5, 1943, and shall return, in the shortest possible time, property removed from the territory of any of the United Nations.

2. The obligation to make restitution applies to all identifiable property at present in Hungary which was removed by force or duress by any of the Axis Powers from the territory of any of the United Nations, irrespective of any subsequent transactions by which the present holder of any such property has secured possession.

3. If, in particular cases, it is impossible for Hungary to make restitution of objects of artistic, historic or archaeological value, belonging to the cultural heritage of the United Nation from whose territory such objects were removed by force or duress by Hungarian forces, authorities or nationals, Hungary shall transfer to the United Nation concerned objects of the same kind as, and of approximately equivalent value to, the objects removed, in so far as such objects are obtainable in Hungary.

4. The Hungarian Government shall return the property referred to in this Article in good order and, in this connection, shall bear all costs in Hungary relating to labour, materials and transport.

5. The Hungarian Government shall cooperate with the United Nations in, and shall provide at its own expense all necessary facilities for, the search for and restitution of property liable to restitution under this Article.

6. The Hungarian Government shall take the necessary measures to effect the return of property covered by this Article held in any third country by persons subject to Hungarian jurisdiction.

7. Claims for the restitution of property shall be presented to the Hungarian Government by the Government of the country from whose territory the property was removed, it being understood that rolling stock shall be regarded as having been removed from the territory to which it originally belonged. The period during which such claims may be presented shall be six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

8. The burden of identifying the property and of proving ownership shall rest on the claimant Government, and the burden of proving that the property was not removed by force or duress shall rest on the Hungarian Government.

Article 25

The annulment of the Vienna Award of November 2, 1938, as provided in Article I, paragraph 4, of the present Treaty, shall entail the annulment of the agreements, as well as the legal consequences ensuing therefrom, relating to matters of finance and public and private insurance, concluded between or on behalf of the two States concerned or between Czechoslovak and Hungarian juridical persons on the basis of the Vienna Award and in respect of the material handed over in accordance with the Protocol of May 22, 1940. This annulment shall not apply in any way to relations between physical persons. The details of the above-mentioned settlement shall be arranged by bilateral agreements between the Governments concerned, within a period of six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty.

PART VI. ECONOMIC CLAUSES

Article 26

1. In so far as Hungary has not already done so, Hungary shall restore all legal rights and interests in Hungary of the United Nations and their nationals as they existed on September 1, 1939, and shall return all property in Hungary of the United Nations and their nationals as it now exists.

2. The Hungarian Government undertakes that all property, rights and interests passing under this Article shall be restored free of all encumbrances and charges of any kind to which they may have become subject as a result of the war and without the imposition of any charges by the Hungarian Government in connection with their return. The Hungarian Government shall nullify all measures, including seizures, sequestration or control, taken by it against United Nations property between September 1, 1939, and the coming into force of the present Treaty. In cases where the property has not been returned within six months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, application shall be made to the Hungarian authorities not later than twelve months from the coming into force of the Treaty, except in cases in which the claimant is able to show that he could not file his application within this period.

3. The Hungarian Government shall invalidate transfers involving property, rights and interests of any description belonging to United Nations nationals, where such transfers resulted from force or duress exerted by Axis Governments or their agencies during the war.

In the case of Czechoslovak nations, this paragraph shall also include transfers after November 2, 1938, which resulted from force or duress or from measures taken under discriminatory internal legislation by the Hungarian Government or its agencies in Czechoslovak territory annexed by Hungary.

4. (a) The Hungarian Government shall be responsible for the restoration to complete good order of the property returned to United Nations nationals under paragraph 1 of this Article. In cases where property cannot be returned or where, as a result of the war, a United Nations national has suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Hungary, he shall receive from the Hungarian Government compensation in Hungarian currency to the extent of two-thirds of the sum necessary, at the date of payment, to purchase similar property or to make good the loss suffered. In no event shall United Nations nationals receive less favourable treatment with respect to compensation than that accorded to Hungarian nationals.

(b) United Nations nationals who hold, directly or indirectly, ownership interests in corporations or associations which are not United Nations nationals within the meaning of paragraph 9 (a) of this Article, but which have suffered a loss by reason of injury or damage to property in Hungary, shall receive compensation in accordance with sub-paragraph (a) above. This compensation shall be calculated on the basis of the total loss or damage suffered by the corporation or association and shall bear the same proportion to such loss or damages as the beneficial interests of such nationals in the corporation or association bear to the total capital thereof.

(c) Compensation shall be paid free of any levies, taxes or other charges. It shall be freely usable in Hungary but shall be subject to the foreign exchange control regulations which may be in force in Hungary from time to time.

(d) The Hungarian Government shall accord to United Nations nationals the same treatment in the allocation of materials for the repair or rehabilitation of their property in Hungary and in the allocation of foreign exchange for the importation of such materials as applies to Hungarian nationals.

(e) The Hungarian Government shall grant United Nations nationals an indemnity in Hungarian currency at the same rate as provided in sub-paragraph (a) above to compensate them for the loss or damage due to special measures applied to their property during the war, and which were not applicable to Hungarian property. This sub-paragraph does not apply to a loss of profit.

5. The provisions of paragraph 4 of this Article shall apply to Hungary in so far as the action which may give rise to a claim for damage to property in Northern Transylvania belonging to the United Nations or their nationals took place during the period when this territory was subject to Hungarian authority.

6. All reasonable expenses incurred in Hungary in establishing claims, including the assessment of loss or damage, shall be borne by the Hungarian Government.

7. United Nations nationals and their property shall be exempted from any exceptional taxes, levies or imposts imposed on their capital assets in Hungary by the Hungarian Government or any Hungarian authority between the date of the Armistice and the coming into force of the present Treaty for the specific purpose of meeting charges arising out of the war or of meeting the costs of occupying forces or of reparation payable to any of the United Nations. Any sums which have been so paid shall be refunded.

8. The owner of the property concerned and the Hungarian Government may agree upon arrangements in lieu of the provisions of this Article.

9. As used in this Article:

(a) "United Nations nationals" means individuals who are nationals of any of the United Nations, or corporations or associations organised under the laws of any of the United Nations, at the coming into force of the present Treaty, provided that the said individuals, corporations or associations also had this status at the date of the Armistice with Hungary.

The term "United Nations nationals" also includes all individuals, corporations or associations which, under the laws in force in Hungary during the war, have been treated as enemy;

(b) "Owner" means the United Nation, or the United Nations national as defined in sub-paragraph (a) above, entitled to the property in question, and includes a successor of the owner, provided that the successor is also a United Nation, or a United Nations national as defined in sub-paragraph (a). If the successor has purchased the property in its damaged state, the transferor shall retain his rights to compensation under this Article, without prejudice to obligations between the transferor and the purchaser under domestic law;

(c) "Property" means all movable or immovable property, whether tangible or intangible, including industrial, literary and artistic property, as well as all rights or interests of any kind in property.

10. The Hungarian Government recognizes that the Brioni Agreement of August 10, 1942, is null and void. It undertakes to participate with the other signatories of the Rome Agreement of May 29, 1923, in any negotiations having the purpose of introducing into its provisions the modifications necessary to ensure the equitable settlement of the annuities which it provides.

Article 27

1. Hungary undertakes that in all cases where the property, legal rights or interests in Hungary of persons under Hungarian jurisdiction have, since September 1, 1939, been the subject of measures of sequestration, confiscation or control on account of the racial origin or religion of such persons, the said property, legal rights and interests shall be restored together with their accessories or, if restoration is impossible, that fair compensation shall be made therefor.

2. All property, rights and interests in Hungary of persons, organisations or communities which, individually or as members of groups, were the object of racial, religious or other Fascist measures of persecution, and remaining heirless or unclaimed for six months after the coming into force of the present Treaty, shall be transferred by the Hungarian Government to organisations in Hungary representative of such persons, organisations or communities. The property transferred shall be used by such organisations for purposes of relief and rehabilitation of surviving members of such groups, organisations and communities in Hungary. Such transfer shall be effected within twelve months from the coming into force of the Treaty, and shall include property, rights and interests required to be restored under paragraph 1 of this Article.

Article 28

Hungary recognizes that the Soviet Union is entitled to all German assets in Hungary transferred to the Soviet Union by the Control Council for Germany and undertakes to take all necessary measures to facilitate such transfers.

Article 29

1. Each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to seize, retain, liquidate or take any other action with respect to all property, rights and interests which at the coming into force of the present Treaty are within its territory and belong to Hungary or to Hungarian nationals, and to apply such property or the proceeds thereof to such purposes as it may desire, within the limits of its claims and those of its nationals against Hungary or Hungarian nationals, including debts, other than claims fully satisfied under other Articles of the present Treaty. All Hungarian property, or the proceeds thereof, in excess of the amount of such claims, shall be returned.

2. The liquidation and disposition of Hungarian property shall be carried out in accordance with the law of the Allied or Associated Power concerned. The Hungarian owner shall have no rights with respect to such property except those which may be given him by that law.

3. The Hungarian Government undertakes to compensate Hungarian nationals whose property is taken under this Article and not returned to them.

4. No obligation is created by this Article on any Allied or Associated Power to return industrial property to the Hungarian Government or Hungarian nationals, or to include such property in determining the amounts which may be retained under paragraph 1 of this Article. The Government of each of the Allied and Associated Powers shall have the right to impose such limitations, conditions and restrictions on rights or interests with respect to industrial property in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power, acquired prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty by the Government or nationals of Hungary, as may be deemed by the Government of the Allied or Associated Power to be necessary in the national interest.

5. The property covered by paragraph 1 of this Article shall be deemed to include Hungarian property which has been subject to control by reason of a state of war existing between Hungary and the Allied or Associated Power having jurisdiction over the property, but shall not include:

(a) Property of the Hungarian Government used for consular or diplomatic purposes;

(b) Property belonging to religious bodies or private charitable institutions and used for religious or charitable purposes;

(c) Property of natural persons who are Hungarian nationals permitted to reside within the territory of the country in which the property is located or to reside elsewhere in United Nations territory, other than Hungarian property which at any time during the war was subjected to measures not generally applicable to the property of Hungarian nationals resident in the same territory;

(d) Property rights arising since the resumption of trade and financial relations between the Allied and Associated Powers and Hungary, or arising out of transactions between the Government of any Allied or Associated Power and Hungary since January 20, 1945;

(e) Literary and artistic property rights.

Article 30

1. From the coming into force of the present Treaty, property in Germany of Hungary and of Hungarian nationals shall no longer be treated as enemy property and all restrictions based on such treatment shall be removed.

2. Identifiable property of Hungary and of Hungarian nationals removed by force or duress from Hungarian territory to Germany by German forces or authorities after January 20, 1945, shall be eligible for restitution.

3. The restoration and restitution of Hungarian property in Germany shall be effected in accordance with measures which will be determined by the Powers in occupation of Germany.

4. Without prejudice to these and to any other dispositions in favour of Hungary and Hungarian nationals by the Powers occupying Germany, Hungary waives on its own behalf and on behalf of Hungarian nationals all claims against Germany and German nationals outstanding on May 8, 1945, except those arising out of contracts and other obligations entered into, and rights acquired, before September 1, 1939. This waiver shall be deemed to include debts, all inter-governmental claims in respect of arrangements entered into in the course of the war and all claims for loss or damage arising during the war.

Article 31

1. The existence of the state of war shall not, in itself, be regarded as affecting the obligation to pay pecuniary debts arising out of obligations and contracts which existed, and rights which were acquired, before the existence of the state of war, which became payable prior to the coming into force of the present Treaty, and which are due by the Government or nationals of Hungary to the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers or are due by the Government or nationals of one of the Allied and Associated Powers to the Government or nationals of Hungary.

2. Except as otherwise expressly provided in the present Treaty, nothing therein shall be construed as impairing debtor-creditor relationships arising out of pre-war contracts concluded either by the Government or nationals of Hungary.

Article 32

1. Hungary waives all claims of any description against the Allied and Associated Powers on behalf of the Hungarian Government or Hungarian nationals arising directly out of the war or out of actions taken because of the existence of a state of war in Europe after September 1, 1939, whether or not the Allied or Associated Power was at war with Hungary at the time, including the following:

(a) Claims for losses or damages sustained as a consequence of acts of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers;

(b) Claims arising from the presence, operations or actions of forces or authorities of Allied or Associated Powers in Hungarian territory;

(c) Claims with respect to the decrees or orders of Prize Courts of Allied or Associated Powers, Hungary agreeing to accept as valid and binding all decrees and orders of such Prize Courts on or after September 1, 1939, concerning Hungarian ships or Hungarian goods or the payment of costs;

(d) Claims arising out of the exercise or purported exercise of belligerent rights.

2. The provisions of this Article shall bar, completely and finally, all claims of the nature referred to herein, which will be henceforward extinguished, whoever may be the parties in interest. The Hungarian Government agrees to make equitable compensation in Hungarian currency to persons who furnished supplies or services on requisition to the forces of Allied or Associated Powers in Hungarian territory and in satisfaction of non-combat damage claims against the forces of Allied or Associated Powers arising in Hungarian territory.

3. Hungary likewise waives all claims of the nature covered by paragraph 1 of this Article on behalf of the Hungarian Government or Hungarian nationals against any of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Hungary were broken off during the war and which took action in co-operation with the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. The Hungarian Government shall assume full responsibility for all Allied military currency issued in Hungary by the Allied military authorities, including all such currency in circulation at the coming into force of the present Treaty.

5. The waiver of claims by Hungary under paragraph 1 of this Article includes any claims arising out of actions taken by any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to Hungarian ships between September 1, 1939, and the coming into force of the present Treaty, as well as any claims and debts arising out of the Conventions on prisoners of war now in force.

Article 33

1. Pending the conclusion of commercial treaties or agreements between individual United Nations and Hungary, the Hungarian Government shall, during a period of eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, grant the following treatment to each of the United Nations which, in fact, reciprocally grants similar treatment in like matters to Hungary:

(a) In all that concerns duties and charges on importation or exportation, the internal taxation of imported goods and all regulations pertaining thereto, the United Nations shall be granted unconditional most-favoured-nation treatment;

(b) In all other respects, Hungary shall make no arbitrary discrimination against goods originating in or destined for any territory of any of the United Nations as compared with like goods originating in or destined for territory of any other of the United Nations or of any other foreign country;

(c) United Nations nationals, including juridical persons, shall be granted national and most-favoured-nation treatment in all matters pertaining to commerce, industry, shipping and other forms of business activity within Hungary. These provisions shall not apply to commercial aviation;

(d) Hungary shall grant no exclusive or discriminatory right to any country with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall afford all the United Nations equality of opportunity in obtaining international commercial aviation rights in Hungarian territory, including the right to land for refueling and repair, and, with regard to the operation of commercial aircraft in international traffic, shall grant on a reciprocal and non-discriminatory basis to all United Nations the right to fly over Hungarian territory without landing. These provisions shall not affect the interests of the national defence of Hungary.

2. The foregoing undertakings by Hungary shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in commercial treaties concluded by Hungary before the war, and the provisions with respect to reciprocity granted by each of the United Nations shall be understood to be subject to the exceptions customarily included in the commercial treaties concluded by that State.

Article 34

Hungary shall facilitate as far as possible railway traffic in transit through its territory at reasonable rates and shall negotiate with neighbouring States all reciprocal agreements necessary for this purpose.

Article 35

1. Any disputes which may arise in connection with Articles 24, 25 and 26 and Annexes IV, V and VI of the present Treaty shall be referred to a Conciliation Commission composed of an equal number of representatives of the United Nations Government concerned and of the Hungarian Government. If agreement has not been reached within three months of the dispute having been referred to the Conciliation Commission, either Government may require the addition of a third member to the Commission, and failing agreement between the two Governments on the selection of this member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 36

Articles 24, 26, 33 and Annex VI of the present Treaty shall apply to the Allied and Associated Powers and France and to those of the United Nations whose diplomatic relations with Hungary have been broken off during the war.

Article 37

The provisions of Annexes IV, V and VI shall, as in the case of the other Annexes, have force and effect as integral parts of the present Treaty.

PART VII. CLAUSE RELATING TO THE DANUBE

Article 38

Navigation on the Danube shall be free and open for the nationals, vessels of commerce, and goods of all States, on a footing of equality in regard to port and navigation charges and conditions for merchant shipping. The foregoing shall not apply to traffic between ports of the same State.

PART VIII. FINAL CLAUSES

Article 39

1. For a period not to exceed eighteen months from the coming into force of the present Treaty, the Heads of the Diplomatic Missions in Budapest of the Soviet Union, the United Kingdom and the United States of America, acting in concert, will represent the Allied and Associated Powers in dealing with the Hungarian Government in all matters concerning the execution and interpretation of the present Treaty.

2. The Three Heads of Mission will give the Hungarian Government such guidance, technical advice and clarification as may be necessary to ensure the rapid and efficient execution of the present Treaty both in letter and in spirit.

3. The Hungarian Government shall afford the said Three Heads of Mission all necessary information and any assistance which they may require in the fulfilment of the tasks devolving on them under the present Treaty.

Article 40

1. Except where another procedure is specifically provided under any Article of the present Treaty, any dispute concerning the interpretation or execution of the Treaty, which is not settled by direct diplomatic negotiations, shall be referred to the Three Heads of Mission acting under Article 39, except that in this case the Heads of Mission will not be restricted by the time limit provided in that Article. Any such dispute not resolved by them within a period of two months shall, unless the parties to the dispute mutually agree upon another means of settlement, be referred at the request of either party to the dispute to a Commission composed of one representative of each party and a third member selected by mutual agreement of the two parties from nationals of a third country. Should the two parties fail to agree within a period of one month upon the appointment of the third member, the Secretary-General of the United Nations may be requested by either party to make the appointment.

2. The decision of the majority of the members of the Commission shall be the decision of the Commission, and shall be accepted by the parties as definitive and binding.

Article 41

1. Any member of the United Nations, not a signatory to the present Treaty, which is at war with Hungary, may accede to the Treaty and upon accession shall be deemed to be an Associated Power for the purposes of the Treaty.

2. Instruments of accession shall be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics and shall take effect upon deposit.

Article 42

The present Treaty, of which the Russian and English texts are authentic, shall be ratified by the Allied and Associated Powers. It shall also be ratified by Hungary. It shall come into force immediately upon the deposit of ratifications by the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, and the United States of America. The instruments of ratification shall, in the shortest time possible, be deposited with the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics.

With respect to each Allied or Associated Power whose instrument of ratification is thereafter deposited, the Treaty shall come into force upon the date of deposit. The present Treaty shall be deposited in the archives of the Government of the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, which shall furnish certified copies to each of the signatory States.

Definition of military and military air training

1. Military training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specifically designed or adapted for army purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and carrying out of all drill or movements which teach or practice evolutions performed by fighting forces in battle; and the organised study of tactics, strategy and staff work.

2. Military air training is defined as: the study of and practice in the use of war material specially designed or adapted for air force purposes, and training devices relative thereto; the study and practice of all specialised evolutions, including formation flying, performed by aircraft in the accomplishment of an air force mission; and the organised study of air tactics, strategy and staff work.

ANNEX III

(See Article 17)

Definition and list of war material

The term "war material" as used in the present Treaty shall include all arms, ammunition and implements specially designed or adapted for use in war as listed below.

The Allied and Associated Powers reserve the right to amend the list periodically by modification or addition in the light of subsequent scientific development.

Category I.

1. Military rifles, carbines, revolvers and pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use.

2. Machine guns, military automatic or autoloading rifles, and machine pistols; barrels for these weapons and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; machine gun mounts.

3. Guns, howitzers, mortars, cannon special to aircraft; breechless or recoil-less guns and flamethrowers; barrels and other spare parts not readily adaptable for civilian use; carriages and mountings for the foregoing.

4. Rocket projectors; launching and control mechanisms for self-propelling and guided missiles; mountings for same.

5. Self-propelling and guided missiles, projectiles, rockets, fixed ammunition and cartridges, filled or unfilled, for the arms listed in sub-paragraphs 1–4 above and fuses, tubes or contrivances to explode or operate them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

6. Grenades, bombs, torpedoes, mines, depth charges and incendiary materials or charges, filled or unfilled; all means for exploding or operating them. Fuses required for civilian use are not included.

7. Bayonets.

Category II.

1. Armoured fighting vehicles; armoured trains, not technically convertible to civilian use.

2. Mechanical and self-propelled carriages for any of the weapons listed in Category I; special type military chassis or bodies other than those enumerated in sub-paragraph 1 above.

3. Armour plate, greater than three inches in thickness, used for protective purposes in warfare.

Category III.

1. Aiming and computing devices, including predictors and plotting apparatus, for fire control; direction of fire instruments; gun sights; bomb sights; fuse setters; equipment for the calibration of guns and fire control instruments.

2. Assault bridging, assault boats and storm boats.

3. Deceptive warfare, dazzle and decoy devices.

4. Personal war equipment of a specialised nature not readily adaptable to civilian use.

Category IV.

1. Warships of all kinds, including converted vessels and craft designed or intended for their attendance or support, which cannot be technically reconverted to civilian use, as well as weapons, armour, ammunition, aircraft and all other equipment, material, machines and installations not used in peace time on ships other than warships.

2. Landing craft and amphibious vehicles or equipment of any kind; assault boats or devices of any type as well as catapults or other apparatus for launching or throwing aircraft, rockets, propelled weapons or any other missile, instrument or device whether manned or unmanned, guided or uncontrolled.

3. Submersible or semi-submersible ships, craft, weapons, devices or apparatus of any kind, including specially designed harbour defence booms, except as required by salvage, rescue or other civilian uses, as well as all equipment, accessories, spare parts, experimental or training aids, instruments or installations as may be specially designed for the construction, testing, maintenance or housing of the same.

Category V.

1. Aircraft, assembled or unassembled, both heavier and lighter than air, which are designed or adapted for aerial combat by the use of machine guns, rocket projectors or artillery or for the carrying and dropping of bombs, or which are equipped with, or which by reason of their design or construction are prepared for, any of the appliances referred to in sub-paragraph 2 below.

2. Aerial gun mounts and frames, bomb racks, torpedo carriers and bomb release or torpedo release mechanisms; gun turrets and blisters.

3. Equipment specially designed for and used solely by airborne troops.

4. Catapults or launching apparatus for ship-borne, land- or sea-based aircraft; apparatus for launching aircraft weapons.

5. Barrage balloons.

Category VI.

Asphyxiating, lethal, toxic or incapacitating substances intended for war purposes, or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VII.

Propellants, explosives, pyrotechnics or liquefied gases destined for the propulsion, explosion, charging or filling of, or for use in connection with, the war material in the present categories, not capable of civilian use or manufactured in excess of civilian requirements.

Category VIII.

Factory and tool equipment specially designed for the production and maintenance of the material enumerated above and not technically convertible to civilian use.

ANNEX IV

Special provisions relating to certain kinds of property

A. Industrial, Literary and Artistic Property

1. (a) A period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be accorded to the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals without extension fees or other penalty of any sort in order to enable them to accomplish all necessary acts for the obtaining or preserving in Hungary of rights in industrial, literary and artistic property which were not capable of accomplishment owing to the existence of a state of war.

(b) Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals who had duly applied in the territory of any Allied or Associated Power for a patent or registration of a utility model not earlier than twelve months before the outbreak of the war with Hungary or during the war, or for the registration of an industrial design or model or trade mark not earlier than six months before the outbreak of the war with Hungary or during the war, shall be entitled within twelve months after the coming into force of the present Treaty to apply for corresponding rights in Hungary, with a right of priority based upon the previous filing of the application in the territory of that Allied or Associated Power.

(c) Each of the Allied and Associated Powers and its nationals shall be accorded a period of one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty during which they may institute proceedings in Hungary against those natural or juridical persons who are alleged illegally to have infringed their rights in industrial, literary or artistic property between the date of the outbreak of the war and the coming into force of the Treaty.

2. A period from the outbreak of the war until a date eighteen months after the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded in determining the time within which a patent must be worked or a design or trade mark used.

3. The period from the outbreak of the war until the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be excluded from the normal term of rights in industrial, literary and artistic property which were in force in Hungary at the outbreak of the war or which are recognized or established under part A of this Annex and belong to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or their nationals. Consequently, the normal duration of such rights shall be deemed to be automatically extended in Hungary for a further term corresponding to the period so excluded.

4. The foregoing provisions concerning the rights in Hungary of the Allied and Associated Powers and their nationals shall apply equally to the rights in the territories of the Allied and Associated Powers of Hungary and its nationals. Nothing, however, in these provisions shall entitle Hungary or its nationals to more favourable treatment in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers than is accorded by such Power in like cases to other United Nations or their nationals, nor shall Hungary be thereby required to accord to any of the Allied and Associated Powers or its nationals more favourable treatment than Hungary or its nationals receive in the territory of such Power in regard to the matters dealt with in the foregoing provisions.

5. Third parties in the territories of any of the Allied and Associated Powers or Hungary who, before the coming into force of the present Treaty, had bona fide acquired industrial, literary or artistic property rights conflicting with rights restored under part A of this Annex or with rights obtained with the priority provided thereunder, or had bona fide manufactured, published, reproduced, used or sold the subject matter of such rights, shall be permitted, without any liability for infringement, to continue to exercise such rights and to continue or to resume such manufacture, publication, reproduction, use or sale which had been bona fide acquired or commenced. In Hungary, such permission shall take the form of a non-exclusive license granted on terms and conditions to be mutually agreed by the parties thereto or, in default of agreement, to be fixed by the Conciliation Commission established under Article 35 of the present Treaty. In the territories of each of the Allied and Associated Powers, however, bona fide third parties shall receive such protection as is accorded under similar circumstances to bona fide third parties whose rights are in conflict with those of the nationals of other Allied and Associated Powers.

6. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be construed to entitle Hungary or its nationals to any patent or utility model rights in the territory of any of the Allied and Associated Powers with respect to inventions, relating to any article listed by name in Annex III of the present Treaty, made, or upon which applications were filed, by Hungary, or any of its nationals, in Hungary or in the territory of any other of the Axis Powers, or in any territory occupied by the Axis forces, during the time when such territory was under the control of the forces or authorities of the Axis Powers.

7. Hungary shall likewise extend the benefits of the foregoing provisions of this Annex to France, and to other United Nations which are not Allied or Associated Powers, whose diplomatic relations with Hungary have been broken off during the war and which undertake to extend to Hungary the benefits accorded to Hungary under the said provisions.

8. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be understood to conflict with Articles 26, 29 and 31 of the present Treaty.

B. Insurance

1. No obstacles, other than any applicable to insurers generally, shall be placed in the way of the resumption by insurers who are United Nations nationals of their former portfolios of business.

2. Should an insurer, who is a national of any of the United Nations, wish to resume his professional activities in Hungary, and should the value of the guarantee deposits or reserves required to be held as a condition of carrying on business in Hungary be found to have decreased as a result of the loss or depreciation of the securities which constituted such deposits or reserves, the Hungarian Government undertakes to accept, for a period of eighteen months, such securities as still remain as fulfilling any legal requirements in respect of deposits and reserves.

ANNEX V

Contracts, prescription and negotiable instruments

A. Contracts

1. Any contract which required for its execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex, shall, subject to the exceptions set out in paragraphs 2 and 3 below, be deemed to have been dissolved as from the time when any of the parties thereto became enemies. Such dissolution, however, is without prejudice to the provisions of Article 31 of the present Treaty, nor shall it relieve any party to the contract from the obligation to repay amounts received as advances or as payments on account and in respect of which such party has not rendered performance in return.

2. Notwithstanding the provisions of paragraph 1 above, there shall be excepted from dissolution and, without prejudice to the rights contained in Article 29 of the present Treaty, there shall remain in force such parts of any contract as are severable and did not require for their execution intercourse between any of the parties thereto, having become enemies as defined in part D of this Annex. Where the provisions of any contract are not so severable, the contract shall be deemed to have been dissolved in its entirety. The foregoing shall be subject to the application of domestic laws, orders or regulations made by any of the Allied and Associated Powers having jurisdiction over the contract or over any of the parties thereto and shall be subject to the terms of the contract.

3. Nothing in part A of this Annex shall be deemed to invalidate transactions lawfully carried out in accordance with a contract between enemies if they have been carried out with the authorization of the Government of one of the Allied and Associated Powers.

4. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions, contracts of insurance and re-insurance shall be subject to separate agreements between the Government of the Allied or Associated Power concerned and the Government of Hungary.

B. Periods of Prescription

1. All periods of prescription or limitation of right of action or of the right to take conservatory measures in respect of relations affecting persons or property, involving United Nations nationals and Hungarian nationals who, by reason of the state of war, were unable to take judicial action or to comply with the formalities necessary to safeguard their rights, irrespective of whether these periods commenced before or after the outbreak of war, shall be regarded as having been suspended, for the duration of the war, in Hungarian territory on the one hand, and on the other hand in the territory of those United Nations which grant to Hungary, on a reciprocal basis, the benefit of the provisions of this paragraph. These periods shall begin to run again on the coming into force of the present Treaty. The provisions of this paragraph shall be applicable in regard to the periods fixed for the presentation of interest or dividend coupons or for the presentation for payment of securities drawn for repayment or repayable on any other ground.

2. Where, on account of failure to perform any act or to comply with any formality during the war, measures of execution have been taken in Hungarian territory to the prejudice of a national of one of the United Nations, the Hungarian Government shall restore the rights which have been detrimentally affected. If such restoration is impossible or would be inequitable, the Hungarian Government shall provide that the United Nations national shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances.

C. Negotiable Instruments

1. As between enemies, no negotiable instrument made before the war shall be deemed to have become invalid by reason only of failure within the required time to present the instrument for acceptance or payment, or to give notice of non-acceptance or non-payment to drawers or endorsers, or to protest the instrument, nor by reason of failure to complete any formality during the war.

2. Where the period within which a negotiable instrument should have been presented for acceptance or for payment, or within which notice of non-acceptance or non-payment should have been given to the drawer or endorser, or within which the instrument should have been protested, has elapsed during the war, and the party who should have presented or protested the instrument or have given notice of non-acceptance or non-payment has failed to do so during the war, a period of not less than three months from the coming into force of the present Treaty shall be allowed within which presentation, notice of non-acceptance or non-payment, or protest may be made.

3. If a person has, either before or during the war, incurred obligations under a negotiable instrument in consequence of an undertaking given to him by a person who has subsequently become an enemy, the latter shall remain liable to indemnify the former in respect of these obligations, notwithstanding the outbreak of war.

D. Special Provisions

1. For the purposes of this Annex, natural or juridical persons shall be regarded as enemies from the date when trading between them shall have become unlawful under laws, orders or regulations to which such persons or the contracts were subject.

2. Having regard to the legal system of the United States of America, the provisions of this Annex shall not apply as between the United States of America and Hungary.

ANNEX VI

Judgments

The Hungarian Government shall take the necessary measures to enable nationals of any of the United Nations at any time within one year from the coming into force of the present Treaty to submit to the appropriate Hungarian authorities for review any judgment given by a Hungarian court between April 10, 1941, and the coming into force of the present Treaty in any proceeding in which the United Nations national was unable to make adequate presentation of his case either as plaintiff or defendant. The Hungarian Government shall provide that, where the United Nations national has suffered injury by reason of any such judgment, he shall be restored in the position in which he was before the judgment was given or shall be afforded such relief as may be just and equitable in the circumstances. The term "United Nations nationals" includes corporations or associations organised or constituted under the laws of any of the United Nations.

In faith whereof the undersigned Plenipotentiaries have signed the present Treaty and have affixed thereto their seals.

Done in the city of Paris in the Russian, English, French and Hungarian languages this tenth day of February, One Thousand Nine Hundred Forty-Seven.

Here follow the signatures of the Plenipotentiaries of: Union of Soviet Socialist Republics, United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland, United States of America, Australia, Byelorussian Soviet Socialist Republic, Canada, Czechoslovakia, India, New Zealand, Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic, Union of South Africa, People's Federal Republic of Yugoslavia, Hungary.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The treaty is open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be proposed, the treaty will be reported to the Senate.

The treaty was reported to the Senate without amendment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The resolution of ratification will be read.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Resolved (two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein), That the Senate advise and consent to the ratification of Executive I, Eightieth Congress, first session, the treaty of peace with Hungary, which was signed at Paris on February 10, 1947.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the resolution of ratification. [Putting the question.] Two-thirds of the Senators present concurring therein, the resolution of ratification is agreed to, and the treaty is ratified.

TRANSACTION OF LEGISLATIVE BUSINESS

The Senate resumed consideration of legislative business.

CONFEREE ON RENT-CONTROL BILL

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. FULBRIGHT] has notified me, through his office, that he cannot serve as a conferee on the rent-control bill, and therefore requests that he be excused. In view of that fact, I ask the Chair to appoint the Senator from Alabama [Mr. SPARKMAN] in his place.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the following letters, which were referred as indicated:

MATERIALS, SUPPLIES, AND EQUIPMENT FOR PUBLIC INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to authorize any agency of the United States Government to furnish or to procure and furnish materials, supplies and equipment to public international organizations (with an accompanying paper); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

MEMBERSHIP AND PARTICIPATION BY UNITED STATES IN SOUTH PACIFIC COMMISSION

A letter from the Secretary of State, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation providing for membership and participation by the United States in the South Pacific Commission and authorizing an appropriation therefor (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

LAWS ENACTED BY MUNICIPAL COUNCIL OF ST. THOMAS AND ST. JOHN, V. I.

A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Interior, transmitting, pursuant to law, copies of laws enacted by the Municipal Council of St. Thomas and St. John, V. I. (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands.

STANDARD OF ELECTRICAL AND PHOTOMETRIC MEASUREMENTS

A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to redefine the units and establish the standards of electrical and photometric measurements (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

AUDIT REPORT OF FEDERAL PRISON INDUSTRIES, INC.

A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, an audit report of the Federal Prison Industries, Inc., for the fiscal year ended June 30, 1946 (with an accompanying report); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIAL

Petitions, etc., were laid before the Senate, or presented, and referred as indicated:

By the PRESIDENT pro tempore:

A telegram in the nature of a petition from the Novick Transfer Co., New York, N. Y., praying for the enactment of the so-called Taft-Hartley labor relations bill; ordered to lie on the table.

A telegram in the nature of a petition from Toni Miller, secretary of the Alpine Brotherhood, of New York, N. Y., praying that the people of South Tyrol be heard before ratification of the Italian peace treaty by the Senate; ordered to lie on the table.

By Mr. GEORGE:

A resolution adopted by the board of directors of the Georgia Forestry Association, protesting against Senate Resolution No. 20 of the General Assembly of the State of Georgia, favoring the enactment of legislation providing for cooperative agreement contracts between the State of Georgia and the Federal Government for the management and control of certain Federal forests in Georgia; to the Committee on Public Lands.

LABOR RELATIONS—MEMORIALS

Mr. CAIN. Mr. President, I have received a letter from Lewis G. Hines, national legislative representative, American Federation of Labor, Washington, D. C., transmitting a letter from E. M. Weston, president, Washington State Federation of Labor, and memorials of members of the Washington State Federation of Labor. I ask unanimous consent to present the letters together with the memorials, for appropriate reference, and request that the letters and one of the memorials, without the signatures attached, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letters and memorials were received, ordered to lie on the table, and to be printed in the RECORD without the signatures attached, as follows:

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Washington, D. C., June 5, 1947.

Hon. HARRY P. CAIN,
United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: We are in receipt of the attached petitions which contain 3,000 names. These are in addition to the 32,000 already presented on behalf of the Washington State Federation of Labor, and represent the sentiment of a total of 35,000 members of the American Federation of Labor in protest against the Taft-Hartley bill.

It is the desire of the Washington State Federation of Labor that these petitions be presented on the floor of the Senate on behalf of our members in the State of Washington.

Sincerely,

LEWIS G. HINES,
National Legislative Representative.

WASHINGTON STATE
FEDERATION OF LABOR,
Seattle, Wash., June 2, 1947.

WILLIAM GREEN,
President, American Federation of Labor,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR BROTHER GREEN: Suplementing my letters of recent date, I am enclosing an additional 3,000 names of workers protesting the passage of Taft-Hartley labor bills.

Fraternally,

E. M. WESTON,
President.

We, the undersigned members of organizations affiliated with the American Federation of Labor in the State of Washington, employed at trades and for firms designated below, wish to continue to work under union-shop agreements between our respective unions and employers. For this reason we are unalterably opposed to the Hartley-Taft labor bills.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. GURNEY, from the Committee on Armed Services:

S. 758. A bill to promote the national security by providing for a National Defense Establishment, which shall be administered by a Secretary of National Defense, and for a Department of the Army, a Department of the Navy, and a Department of the Air Force within the National Defense Establishment, and for the coordination of the activities of the National Defense Establishment with other departments and agencies of the Government concerned with the national security; with amendments (Rept. No. 239).

By Mr. AIKEN, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments:

S. 544. A bill to further amend section 3 of the Subsistence Expense Act of 1926, as amended; with amendments (Rept. No. 240); and

S. 1316. A bill to establish a procedure for facilitating the payment of certain Government checks, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. No. 241).

REPORT ON INVESTIGATION OF MINE EXPLOSION AT CENTRALIA, ILL. (S. REPT. NO. 238)

Mr. CORDON. Mr. President, from the Committee on Public Lands, I ask unanimous consent to submit a report, pursuant to Senate Resolution 98, to investigate the explosion at Centralia coal mine No. 5, Wamac, Ill., on March 25, 1947, agreed to on March 26, 1947, and I request that it be printed. I shall discuss the contents of the report at a later date.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the report will be received and printed.

REORGANIZATION PLAN NO. 1 OF 1947

Mr. AIKEN. Mr. President, from the Committee on Expenditures in the Executive Departments, I ask unanimous consent to submit an unofficial report of that committee relating to Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1947, and request that it be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

While not required to do so, this committee is reporting unofficially favorably on Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1947, in order that the record may be clear and that the Senate may take cognizance of the inspection of the plan by the committee as required by law. The committee finds nothing in the Reorganization Plan which would be objectionable.

We feel that it is unnecessary to again outline the details of the plan since these are completely set forth in the letter of the President dated May 1, 1947, as shown in Document No. 230 of the House of Representatives.

The committee makes the following comment and recommendation to the President in carrying out the plan:

1. A simplification of nomenclature being very desirable in the executive branch, the committee recommends that the agricultural research functions, included in Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1947, be consolidated in a Bureau of Research in the Department of Agriculture, and it further recommends that each subordinate group within that Bureau be named a Division, for example, the Division of Agriculture and Industrial Chemistry, the Division of Animal Industry, the Division of Dairy Industry, the Division of Entomology and Plant Quarantine, the Division of Human Nutrition and Home Economics, the Division of Plant Industry, Soils, and Agricultural Engineering, and the Division of Experiment Stations.

This recommendation is in line with others of a similar nature, wherein this committee will lend its influence toward making nomenclature and structure within the executive branch simpler and more regular.

2. While there is now no objection to the transfer of the Federal credit union functions to the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the committee feels that this is not a proper function to be continued by the latter agency. However, we should prefer to change its location at a later time when the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation itself would be transferred to a more appropriate location within the executive branch.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, June 5, 1947, he presented to the President of the United States the enrolled bill (S. 135) to legalize the admission into the United States of Frank Schindler.

BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION INTRODUCED

Bills and a joint resolution were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. THYE:

S. 1381. A bill to amend the Civil Service Retirement Act, approved May 29, 1930, as amended, so as to make such act applicable to officers and employees of national farm-loan associations; to the Committee on Civil Service.

S. 1382. A bill for the relief of the estate of John Deiman; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PEPPER:

S. 1383. A bill for the relief of Mrs. Eugene Brodbeck; and

S. 1384. A bill to amend the Motor Vehicle Theft Act so as to include thereunder motor vehicles and aircraft which have been embezzled; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MURRAY

S. 1385. A bill authorizing the issuance of a patent in fee to George Peters; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. MURRAY (for himself, Mr. YOUNG, and Mr. ECTON):

S. 1386. A bill authorizing modifications in the repayment contracts with the Lower Yellowstone Irrigation District No. 1 and the Lower Yellowstone Irrigation District No. 2; to the Committee on Public Lands.

By Mr. TYDINGS:

S. 1387. A bill to incorporate National Service Star Legion; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. McCARTHY (for himself and Mr. JOHNSON of Colorado):

S. 1388. A bill to protect consumers, retailers, distributors, manufacturers, dealers, and producers from misnaming, misbranding, improper identification, and deceptive or misleading advertising of fur products and articles made in part or in whole from fur, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

(Mr. MORSE introduced Senate bill 1389, to provide for the licensing of marine radiotelegraph operators, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. MORSE (for himself and Mr. THOMAS of Utah) introduced Senate bill 1390, to broaden the cooperative extension system as established in the act of May 8, 1914, and acts supplemental thereto by providing for cooperative extension work between colleges receiving the benefits of this act and the acts of July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1890, and other qualified colleges, universities, and research agencies, and the United States Department of Labor, which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. BALL, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL) introduced Senate bill 1391, to authorize payments by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on the purchase of automobiles or other conveyances by certain disabled veterans, and for other purposes; which was referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and appears under a separate heading.)

(Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL) introduced the following bills, which were referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and appear under separate headings:

S. 1392. A bill to prescribe certain dates for the purpose of determining eligibility of veterans for vocational rehabilitation, and for education, training, guaranty of loans, and readjustment allowances under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended;

S. 1393. A bill to increase the permitted rate of allowance and compensation for training on the job under Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended; and

S. 1394. A bill to provide increased subsistence allowance to veterans pursuing certain courses under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, and for other purposes.)

By Mr. HATCH:

S. 1395. A bill for the relief of Jose Maria Gerardo de Amusategui and Ramon de Amusategui; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CAIN:

S. 1396. A bill to authorize the construction, protection, operation, and maintenance of a public airport in the Territory of Alaska; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

(Mr. WILEY introduced Senate Joint Resolution 123, declaring that in interpreting certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions and proclamations World War II, the limited emergency and the unlimited emergency shall be construed as terminated and peace established, which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary, and appears under a separate heading.)

LICENSING OF MARINE RADIOTELEGRAPH OPERATORS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, before I discuss the pending conference report on the labor bill, I wish to make a few brief remarks on some other proposed legislation I shall introduce at this time.

Earlier in the session I introduced Senate bill 75, a bill to provide for the licensing of radiotelegraph operators. The bill was modified somewhat, and I think beneficially modified, in the House of Representatives, by Mr. Bradley, of Michigan, and I ask unanimous consent now to introduce, as a substitute for my bill, which is S. 75, a companion bill, H. R. 1036.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1389) to provide for the licensing of marine radiotelegraph operators, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MORSE, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

LABOR EXTENSION SERVICE IN LABOR DEPARTMENT

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I also ask leave to introduce, for the senior Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS] and for myself, for appropriate reference a bill which seeks to create a Labor Extension Service in the Department of Labor.

I wish to say that at the request of the senior Senator from Utah, who has just left for Geneva, Switzerland, on official business, I ask permission to have the bill introduced for the two of us, and printed in the RECORD, and also ask to have inserted in the RECORD the remarks the Senator from Utah would have made had it been possible for him to be here today.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the bill will be received and appropriately referred, and, without objection, the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], together with the bill, will be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1390), to broaden the cooperative extension system as established in the act of May 8, 1914, and acts supplemental thereto by providing for cooperative extension work between colleges receiving the benefits of this act and the acts of July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1890, and other qualified colleges, universities, and research agencies, and the United States Department of Labor, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself and Mr. THOMAS of Utah), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in order to broaden and further develop the cooperative extension system as established by the act of May 8, 1914, and acts supplemental thereto, and to aid in diffusing useful and practical information among the wage earners of the United States and increase the resources and facilities available to them, there shall be established in cooperation with colleges receiving the benefits of the acts of July 2, 1862, August 30, 1890, and the aforementioned act and other colleges, universities, and research agencies as designated in the several States a labor extension service in the Department of Labor, administered by the Secretary of Labor.

It is declared to be the policy of the Congress that the purposes of this program shall be to enable the Secretary of Labor, in accordance with his duty to promote the welfare of wage earners, through a program for the dissemination of useful knowledge to provide a means by which the Nation may conserve the creative capacities of workers who, together with farmers, comprise the Nation's basic productive asset.

SEC. 2. (a) There shall be established in the Department of Labor a Labor Extension Service. The program of the Labor Extension Service shall include the following:

(1) Promotion of the welfare of wage earners and thereby the industries of which they are a part by developing and making available information useful to wage earners and their bona fide labor organizations in presenting factually and effectively their contribution to production as a basis for compensation and by making available information on the best practices in writing collective bargaining agreements and in carrying out collective bargaining activities and practices;

(2) Making available information and research facilities concerning principles required to assure production, including standards of quality and quantity in an economy of maximum employment;

(3) Making available information concerning living and working conditions;

(4) Making available information on labor law and legislation and its administration;

(5) Promoting through dissemination of knowledge constructive relations between workers and management which will contribute to the advancement of the public interest and of the national welfare and security;

(6) Making available information promoting the understanding and appreciation of democratic procedures in their historical perspective and continuing development.

(b) The Labor Extension Service shall utilize appropriate facilities within the States in carrying out the purposes of this act in accordance with State plans approved by the Secretary of Labor after consultation with the National Labor Extension Council, provided for in section 4 of this act.

SEC. 3. (a) There is hereby created within the Department of Labor under the direction and supervision of the Secretary of Labor, a Labor Extension Division. The Division shall be headed by a director to be known as the Director of the Labor Extension Division, who shall be appointed by the President with the advice and consent of the Senate and shall receive a compensation at the rate of $10,000 a year. The Director may, subject to the civil-service laws, appoint such employees as he deems necessary to carry out his functions and duties under this act and shall fix their compensation in accordance with the Classification Act of 1923, as amended. The Director may utilize such regional, local, or other agencies, and such voluntary and uncompensated services, as may from time to time be needed. The Director shall have authority, with the approval of the Secretary of Labor to issue such rules and regulations as are necessary to carry out the purposes of this act.

(b) The Secretary of Labor shall formulate general policies for the administration of this act after consultation with the Director. The Secretary shall consult the National Labor Extension Council, hereinafter provided for, prior to the approval of general policies and rules and regulations governing the administration of this act.

SEC. 4 (a) There is hereby established a National Labor Extension Council (hereinafter referred to as the "Council") to advise the Secretary of Labor and the Director in formulating general policies governing the administration of the provisions of this act.

(b) The Council shall consist of 15 members chosen by the Secretary of Labor of whom a majority shall be chosen from a panel submitted by bona fide labor organizations national in scope. The remaining membership of the Council shall include representatives of cooperating institutions designated as such by the States, of research agencies operating in the field of social science, and of workers' education organizations, and one person principally engaged in the field of adult education. For purposes of initial appointments to the Council pursuant to this section, cooperating institutions shall include institutions planning labor extension services. Five members shall be appointed for a term of 1 year, five members for a term of 2 years, and five members for a term of 3 years; and thereafter, each appointment shall be for a term of 3 years. The Council shall meet at the request of the Secretary of Labor, but in any case not less frequently than twice each year, and whenever at least one-third of the members request a meeting. The members of the Council shall receive compensation while attending meetings and performing work of the Council at such rate, not exceeding $25 a day, as may be fixed by the Secretary of Labor, and shall receive necessary travel and other expenses incurred in connection with the work of the Council. Such compensation and expenses shall be paid in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Labor.

The Secretary of Labor shall provide such data and information, clerical assistance, and other services and facilities as may be necessary for the Council.

SEC. 5. In order for any State to qualify for funds appropriated under this act the Governor of such State, after receiving requests for services from bona-fide labor organizations State-wide in scope, shall appoint a State Labor Extension Board (hereinafter referred to as the "State Board") of at least 9 and not more than 15 persons of whom a majority shall be chosen from a panel submitted by bona-fide labor organizations State-wide in scope. The remaining members shall include the head of the State agency charged with primary responsibility in labor matters, one or more representatives of cooperating institutions participating in the program, one person principally engaged in the field of adult education, and, where feasible, a person representing organizations in the field of workers' education.

SEC. 6. (a) A plan for participating in the program authorized by this act must, when submitted—

(1) summarize the services requested in line with the purposes of this act including evidence of the requests from bona-fide labor organizations which have formed committees for the purpose of requesting such services of cooperating institutions;

(2) provide that institutions within the State may apply for allocation of funds and designation by the State board as cooperating institutions under this act;

(3) contain a general statement of the purposes, procedures, and methods to guide institutions using the funds granted under the authority of this act;

(4) provide that these cooperating institutions shall establish conveniently located labor extension centers;

(5) provide evidence that funds requested for services under this act will be expended, without discrimination on the basis of race, creed, color, sex, or national origin, for labor extension services for wage earners;

(6) provide that at least 25 percent of each allotment of Federal funds under this act shall be matched by any or all of the following ways: State appropriation, college or university appropriation, contributions, fees or grants in kind by individuals or groups benefiting or interested in the program;

(7) contain a complete budget in such detail as may be required by the Secretary of Labor covering the entire period for which funds are being sought;

(8) provide a schedule of times and places where activities will be carried out under the program of this act;

(9) provide such methods of administration as are necessary for the proper and efficient operation of the plan, including the establishment of a full-time office which shall be responsible for the administration of plans in the State;

(10) provide that the State board shall make such reports in such form and contain such information as the Secretary of Labor may from time to time require, and give the Secretary of Labor, upon demand, access to the records on which such reports are based;

(11) contain such other provisions as the Secretary of Labor finds necessary to effectuate the purposes of this act.

(b) The Secretary of Labor shall approve any plan which complies with the provisions of subsection (a) of this section.

SEC. 7. (a) For the purpose of providing for the development of the Labor Extension Service and for its administration within the Department of Labor, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1948, the sum of $_____; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1949, the sum of $_____; for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1950, and annually thereafter, the sum of $_____. In each year, not more than $_____ of the appropriation shall be available for administrative expenses of the Department of Labor in administering this act.

(b) The Secretary of Labor shall determine, in accordance with the provisions of this act, the amount to be allotted within each State for carrying on a labor extension program in such State for each fiscal year. Out of the sums appropriated pursuant to this section for each fiscal year the Secretary shall make allotments to each State totaling not more than such part as he finds that the number of wage earners in such State bore to the total number of wage earners in the United States in the last calendar year for which the Bureau of the Census has available statistics. The Secretary of Labor shall certify the amount, so determined for each cooperating institution, to the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury through the Division of Disbursement of the Treasury Department, and prior to audit or settlement by the General Accounting Office shall pay to each such cooperating institution such amounts as shall be certified from time to time by the Secretary of Labor upon receipt of such certification, but provided such payments shall not exceed in the aggregate the annual allotment which has been certified to the Secretary of the Treasury by the Secretary of Labor for such State.

(c) Amounts paid to any State under this section shall be expended solely in accordance with plans which meet the requirements of section 6 of this act and which have been approved by the Secretary of Labor in accordance with such section.

SEC. 8. (a) Each State board shall be required to make to the Secretary of Labor, on or before the 1st day of October in each year, a report for the previous fiscal year ending June 30, containing such information as may be required by the Secretary of Labor.

(b) The amount of any allotment to a State under section 7 for any fiscal year remaining unexpended or unpaid to such State at the end of such fiscal year shall be available for expenditure or for payment to such State until the end of the second succeeding fiscal year. No payment to a State shall be made out of its allotment for any fiscal year until its allotment for the preceding fiscal year has been exhausted or has ceased to be available.

SEC 9. The Secretary of Labor shall make an annual report to the Congress on or before the 1st day of December of the conduct, results, receipts, and expenditures of the labor extension work carried on in all of the States receiving the benefits of this act, including a full statement of any proceedings conducted pursuant to section 10 of this act, and, where a determination has been made that a State has failed to comply with the provisions of its plan, a statement of any action taken by such State to come into compliance.

SEC. 10. In the case of any plan which has been approved, if the Secretary of Labor, after reasonable notice and opportunity for hearing to the State board which submitted the plan, finds that in the administration of the plan there is a failure to comply substantially with any provision required by this act to be included in the plan, he shall notify such State that further payments will not be made to the State until he is satisfied that there is no longer any such failure to comply. Until he is so satisfied, he shall make no further certification to the Secretary of the Treasury with respect to such State.

SEC. 11. Definitions:

For the purpose of this act—

(a) "Wage earners" include wage and salary earners.

(b) "State" means any State of the United States, the District of Columbia, Alaska, Hawaii, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

(c) "Cooperating institution" means any college or institution in any State receiving the benefits of the act of July 2, 1862, and August 30, 1890, and acts supplemental thereto, and any other public or private nonprofit college, university, or research agency in any State, certified as eligible by the State Board.

(d) "Bona fide labor organization" means any voluntary organization of employees, not company dominated, formed for the purpose of advancing the interests of its members with respect to wages, hours, and conditions of employment.

SEC. 12. If any provision of this act or its application thereof to any institution, or circumstances, is held to be invalid, the remainder of the act, and the application of such provisions to other institutions, or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

SEC. 13. This act may be cited as the "Labor Extension Act of 1947."

The statement of Mr. THOMAS of Utah was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT BY SENATOR THOMAS OF UTAH

Mr. President, I have today joined with the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. MORSE] in introducing a bill to establish a Labor Extension Service in the Department of Labor. Under the bill assistance would be given to wage and salary earners and institutions of higher learning in furnishing instruction and educational materials for labor-extension classes in ways, places, and times suited to the expressed needs and desires of workers themselves. It would give to more than 42,000,000 wage and salary earners services similar to those now offered some 6,000,000 farm families through the Agricultural Extension Service in the Department of Agriculture.

Mr. President, this bill has the wholehearted support of the American Federation of Labor, the Congress of Industrial Organizations, rail labor, the National Federation of Telephone Workers, and of leaders in labor extension work.

Throughout this session we have heard that labor has refused to come forward with a constructive proposal for the improvement of industrial relations. Well, here is a constructive proposal, endorsed by all of labor. Labor is united in asking us to enact this legislation.

This bill is not spectacular. It is not advertised as an overnight cure for inflamed industrial relations, nor for all the many human, mechanical, economic, and other problems that arise daily in relations between employers and employees. But it is a gradual, sure, and lasting remedy.

In supporting this bill, and in asking the Congress to consider it at this time, labor is challenging all of us on a very vital point. We have been saying for months that we are for peaceful industrial relations. We have debated, amended, and passed a bill which, its proponents insist, will promote industrial peace and do so without sacrificing the interest or welfare of employees.

Labor has objected, saying that the proposed cure is worse than the disease. It has been stated, and I am inclined to agree, that the underlying cause of troubled industrial relations today is a distribution of income that is economically unhealthy and certain to result in a drying up of the consumer market for our potentially abundant farm and factory production. We who hold this view contend that the so-called labor bill ignores this cause. Instead of treating the cause, it attempts to deal with symptons of our economic sickness. At a time when labor is a principal victim of expanding profits and shrinking real wages and buying power, the labor bill proposes to discipline labor as the principal culprit.

At this moment, when the Congress is about to send to the President a bill purporting to promote industrial justice and peace and to do so over labor's unanimous protests, all of organized labor challenges us to consider a bill which, its proponents contend, will really promote healthy and peaceful industrial relations.

How?

Not by prohibitions, nor injunctions, nor by rules and regulations, but by equipping wage earners with a better and more up-to-date knowledge of the world, the Nation, the State, and the community in which they work and live, with a better knowledge of the economic facts about their own industry and plant and their relation to other industries, plants, and to the entire economy of the Nation.

Let me read from section 2 of the bill, wherein the scope of the extension classes and services are set forth:

"SEC. 2. (a) There shall be established in the Department of Labor a Labor Extension Service. The program of the Labor Extension Service shall include the following:

"(1) promotion of the welfare of wage earners and thereby the industries of which they are a part by developing and making available information useful to wage earners and their bona fide labor organizations in presenting factually and effectively their contribution to production as a basis for compensation and by making available information on the best practices in writing collective-bargaining agreements and in carrying out collective-bargaining activities and practices;

"(2) making available information and research facilities concerning principles required to assure production, including standards of quality and quantity in an economy of maximum employment;

"(3) making available information concerning living and working conditions;

"(4) making available information on labor law and legislation and its administration;

"(5) promoting through dissemination of knowledge constructive relations between workers and management which will contribute to the advancement of the public interest and of the national welfare and security; and

"(6) making available information promoting the understanding and appreciation of democratic procedures in their historical perspective and continuing development."

Equipped with this knowledge, and with training in its use, labor can negotiate more effectively and more reasonably with employers and better meet its citizenship obligations.

Here, Mr. President, are labor and experienced workers in labor-extension work knocking at the door, asking us to implement the principles and methods of peaceful, reasonable, and equitable industrial relations to which we have all given such eloquent lip service in the debates of the past 4 months.

I think the Congress should accept this challenge. I propose to urge that consideration be given this bill at the very earliest possible date after we return from the summer recess. I wish that hearings might be had and action taken before we adjourn.

So long as we do not move to accept the challenge to aid labor—as farmers have long been aided—in the use of facts and reason while at the same time we move with awful force to regulate labor with all the vast power of the state, so long do we run the risk of suggesting to labor that its remedy and relief are to be found, if at all, not at the bargaining table, but on the battle lines of desperate industrial warfare such as we witnessed in the twenties and the early thirties. This, I am sure, is not a suggestion we would wish to make to the working men and women of the Nation.

Mr. President, the hunger and thirst for knowledge back of this bill, the reaching out for more facts and training in their use, are not new. Nor is the demand for extension classes for employed persons an overnight development. It should always be remembered that we have free education in this Nation today because labor asked for it and insisted upon it. Over long, hard years, labor disposed of the old argument that education, to be valued and assimilated, should be paid for by the parents of the children.

For more than a quarter of a century, intelligent leaders in labor and in extension work have seen that education of the child is not enough, that education should continue through adult life and that, in the case of workers, it should be related to the individual's living and working conditions and should deal with his rights and duties and responsibilities both as a worker and as a citizen in a democracy. This is the more true for workers because of the fact that, through stern economic necessity, most of them have had to leave school early to begin earning a living.

Today, more than 50 universities and colleges throughout the Nation have established labor extension services. I am informed that the expressed and demonstrated need far outruns the resources of unions and of institutions of higher learning. This presents the Congress, it seems to me, with a priceless opportunity to bring aid to an educational process that can serve both the cause of industrial peace and the national welfare. As has been said, we are all in a race between education and catastrophe. New knowledge new facts, new techniques, new decisions flood in on us so fast as to exceed our ability to understand, evaluate, and act intelligently. Education is the only road to wisdom for an individual, a group, or a nation. It is a slow road, but a sure one, to fair dealing between man and man, between employers and employees, between and among nations.

Labor is willing and eager to travel that road.

The longest journey, said the Chinese sage, begins with the first step. I have hope that, at a not distant date, this bill will receive the sympathetic and friendly consideration of the Senate Labor and Public Welfare Committee and be reported favorably to the floor for consideration and final vote.

AUTOMOBILES FOR CERTAIN VETERANS

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, I wish now to make a few brief remarks in connection with certain veterans' legislation which I am now introducing in behalf of a majority of the subcommittee of the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare dealing with veterans' affairs, of which committee it is my privilege to serve as chairman.

Our committee met yesterday afternoon for the last of a series of meetings, following public hearings on legislation which is pending before the Senate in the form of several bills dealing with such questions as the raising of the ceilings for the on-the-job training program, raising the subsistence allowances for veterans attending college, the granting of automobiles to amputees and similarly disabled, and the fixing of some termination date on which benefits under the GI bill of rights as to new recruits will no longer vest.

The committee decided that it was almost impossible to reconcile the many differences existing between and among the several bills we had before us. We felt that no one bill was acceptable, and hence we have decided to submit a series of committee bills, so that the full committee, when it meets on Thursday next week, can have a set of clean bills to consider, based upon the action taken by our subcommittee yesterday afternoon.

With a very brief word of explanation in regard to each of these bills, Mr. President, I am going to offer them at this time.

The first bill is a bill to authorize payments by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on the purchase of automobiles or other conveyances by certain disabled veterans and for other purposes. I submit the bill in behalf of myself, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL].

Briefly, it provides that an automobile allowance of $1,600 will be granted to those veterans who have lost the use of one or both legs or one or both arms, or have lost their sight, subject to certain conditions set out in the bill. It is to be a 3-year program, rather than the present program, which will come to an end on June 30 of this year. It is to allow a veteran to pay, in addition to the $1,600, an additional amount, to come out of his own pocket, if he wishes to purchase a car the sale price of which is in excess of $1,600.

The testimony in our public hearings indicated that that would be desirable, because it was testified that in the cases of certain types of disabilities certain higher-priced cars which have special accessories or mechanical devices upon them are more suitable for disabled veterans who are suffering from certain injuries.

Therefore, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill, with this explanatory remark, and I ask to have the bill printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1391) to authorize payments by the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs on the purchase of automobiles or other conveyances by certain disabled veterans, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. BALL, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL), was received, read twice by its title, referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That, subject to the conditions hereinafter set forth, the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs is authorized and directed to provide or assist in providing an automobile or other conveyance, by paying on the purchase price of such automobile or other conveyance not to exceed $1,600, including equipment with such special attachments and devices as the Administrator may deem necessary, for each veteran of World War II who is entitled to compensation under the laws administered by the Veterans' Administration for any of the following:

(a) Loss or permanent loss of use of one or both feet;

(b) Loss or permanent loss of use of one or both hands;

(c) Permanent impairment of vision of both eyes of the following status: Central visual acuity of 20/200 or less in the better eye, with corrective glasses, or central visual acuity of more than 20/200 if there is a field defect in which the peripheral field has contracted to such an extent that the widest diameter of visual field subtends an angular distance no greater than 20° in the better eye.

SEC. 2. The benefits of section 1 shall be granted under the following conditions:

(a) That under such regulations as the Administrator may prescribe the furnishing of such automobile or other conveyance, or the assisting therein, shall be accomplished by the Administrator paying the total purchase price, if not in excess of $1,600, or the amount of $1,600, if the total purchase price is in excess of $1,600, to the seller from whom the veteran is purchasing under sales agreement between the seller and the veteran: Provided, That no veteran shall be given an automobile or other conveyance, under the provisions of section 1 (a) and (b) of this act, until it is established to the satisfaction of the Administrator that such veteran will be able to operate such automobile or other conveyance in a manner consistent with his own safety and the safety of others and will be licensed to operate such automobile or other conveyance by the State of his residence or other proper licensing authority.

(b) The United States shall not be liable for the repair, maintenance, or replacement of any automobile or other conveyance provided under the provisions of the first section of this act and shall not be liable to any person by reason of any damage caused by the use of such automobile or other conveyance.

(c) No veteran shall be entitled to receive more than one automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this act; and no veteran who has received or may receive an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of the paragraph under the heading "Veterans' Administration" in the First Supplemental Appropriation Act, 1947, shall be entitled to receive an automobile or other conveyance under the provisions of this act.

(d) The benefits provided in this act shall not be available to any veteran who has not made application for such benefits to the Administrator within 3 years after the effective date of this act, or within 3 years after the date of the veteran's discharge from the armed forces if the veteran shall not be discharged until on or after said effective date.

ELIGIBILITY OF VETERANS FOR VOCATIONAL REHABILITATION, ETC.

Mr. MORSE. The next bill I introduce on behalf of myself, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], is one to prescribe certain dates for the purpose of determining the eligibility of veterans for vocational rehabilitation, and for education, training, guaranty of loans, and readjustment allowances under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, to take the place of a bill we had before our committee, Senate bill 977.

I wish to make as clear as I can, Mr. President, the objective of the bill, because at least one press story I have read today missed entirely the purpose of the bill.

I wish to make clear that what we want to do in the bill is to fix a terminal date so that new recruits who are being enlisted in the armed services will not have the benefits of the GI bill of rights. It does not provide, and there is no intention on the part of the subcommittee to so provide, that as of a certain date existing rights under the GI bill of rights now accruing to veterans will come to an end. The newspaper stories to that effect are very much in error.

What is happening is that the Army and the Navy, in their enlistment and recruiting programs, are pointing out that new recruits, those who enlist now, will have the advantages of the GI bill of rights if they enlist prior to the time Congress takes any such action as we propose in this bill, or prior to the time of a declaration of the end of the war.

It is the opinion of the subcommittee, at least the majority of us that are proposing this bill, that that issue must be faced. We feel that it is unreasonable and that it is not fair, so far as wartime veterans are concerned, to permit new recruits and enlistees to enjoy all the benefits that Congress originally intended for those men that served their country in time of war, and who ran the risks of war service. I want to say, Mr. President, that we are introducing it now so that we can have a clean bill, a bill to which the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy can reply, and a bill which our committee can consider next week. A hearing has been set on Monday of next week at 2 o'clock, at which time we shall give the Secretary of War and the Secretary of the Navy an opportunity to express their views on the bill which I now introduce. I ask unanimous consent that it be received.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1392) to prescribe certain dates for the purpose of determining eligibility of veterans for vocational rehabilitation, and for education, training, guaranty of loans, and readjustment allowances under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

COMPENSATION FOR TRAINING ON THE JOB FOR VETERANS

Mr. MORSE. I now introduce, Mr. President, a bill, in behalf of myself, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL], dealing with the question of ceilings for the on-the-job training program.

The ceilings, as the President knows, are $175 for single veterans, $200 for married veterans; but there is a great deal of misunderstanding and misinterpretation as to the operation of those ceilings. What the present on-the-job training program provides is that if a veteran, holding a job, being a single veteran, does not earn more than $175, he will be allowed by the Veterans Administration a subsistence allowance of $65, provided that the $65, with his actual wage, is not in excess of $175. To the extent that it is in excess of $175, that amount will be subtracted from the $65 allowance. Of course, if he earns as much as $175 and is a single veteran, he would not get any subsistence allowance. Likewise, the same formula applies to married veterans, except that, under the present program, married veterans are allowed a $90 subsistence, if they do not earn a total of more than $200.

Now, Mr. President, we had a variety of bills on this issue pending before us, and I want to be very frank about the action of the committee yesterday. We had proposals that the ceilings should be lifted entirely, that the subsistence should be allowed irrespective of how much money the veteran earned. It should be made clear that the ceilings were put on in the first instance by the Seventy-ninth Congress, after the Director of the Veterans' Administration, General Bradley, pointed out to us certain abuses that were developing in regard to the on-the-job-training program. There were instances, for example, in which vice presidents of banks were training to become presidents of banks, and still collecting the $65 subsistence allowance. Vice presidents of corporations were training to become presidents of corporations and at the same time collecting subsistence allowance.

Of course, the real spirit and intent of Congress, when the program was first set up, was to be of aid and assistance to veterans in readjusting themselves to peacetime economic life, but not to give them a law which would allow them to indulge in the type of abusive practices pointed out by General Bradley. So it was our opinion that we could not approve the legislation proposed, which sought to lift the ceilings entirely, because, if we did so, we would simply reinstitute the abuses which gave rise to restrictive legislation, in the first place. Then there were a variety of proposals in other bills on this subject as to the amounts the ceilings should be increased. When I said, Mr. President, that I wanted to be perfectly frank about it, I meant this: We were of the opinion that, in fixing the ceiling amounts they would have to be compromised amounts—because all legislation of such controversial nature as this is bound to end up in a compromise proposal. We took the position the compromise had to be a compromise which we were satisfied in the first instance we could pass through the Congress. It does not do any good to sit down and, on paper, make proposals that some may think may please certain veterans' organizations, if we know down in our own hearts that those proposals have no chance of being passed by the Congress. In fact, I think that to follow that strategy involves a form of political hypocrisy to which we on my subcommittee simply will not be parties.

We intend to propose only that legislation which we think is fair and reasonable and equitable, and which has a good chance of being passed through the Congress. I want to say now to the veterans' organizations of the country, that by taking that stand we are most fair to them and we would be very unfair to them if we followed any other approach, such as was proposed in certain of the legislation, to the effect that we either take the ceilings off entirely, or put exceedingly high ceilings in the legislation. Such legislation could not pass, and it should not pass, on its merits.

Hence, Mr. President, I offer you now a bill which proposes to lift the ceilings for single veterans in the on-the-job training program to $200, and for married veterans, to $250. We think it is an equitable and a fair and a reasonable compromise of this controversial issue. We shall recommend it next week to the full committee. I introduce the bill at this time.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1393) to increase the permitted rate of allowance and compensation for training on the job under Veterans Regulation No. 1 (a), as amended, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

INCREASE SUBSISTENCE ALLOWANCE TO VETERANS TAKING COLLEGE COURSES

Mr. MORSE. Mr. President, the last bill that I introduced on behalf of myself, the Senator from New York [Mr. IVES], the Senator from Indiana [Mr. JENNER], the Senator from Utah [Mr. THOMAS], the Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HILL] is a bill which goes to the problem of the subsistence allowance for veterans attending college or school.

As the President knows, the present allowance is $65 for single veterans and $90 for married veterans. In our hearings it became clear to us, on the basis of the evidence presented, that some adjustment ought to be made. However, I do want to say, Mr. President, that when we meet next week in full committee the first issue that we must decide as a full committee is going to be whether there should be any change or not in the subsistence allowances; and then the second issue, whether the change that we suggest is a reasonable and equitable change.

Speaking for myself, I think the evidence is perfectly clear in the RECORD that some upward adjustment is justified and needed. I say that, Mr. President, because the evidence is clear that a great many veterans are dropping out of school for lack of finances, that many of them have used up their savings and their bonds, that many of them, the records show, have borrowed considerable amounts of money to stay in school. Hence we think some adjustment upward should be made. But here again I think it is only fair to make as crystal clear as we can to the veterans of the country that it never was the intention of the Congress when it passed the GI bill of rights to provide for full college expenses. The bill is perfectly clear in its terms that it was to give aid and assistance to veterans going to college. Of course, if Congress wants to change that underlying principle of the GI bill of rights, that involves an entirely different issue. But our subcommittee felt, Mr. President, that we were bound to accept the underlying principle of the GI bill of rights on this point, namely, that aid and assistance should be allowed veterans, but that full college expenses should not be allowed. Well, how much of an increase should be allowed? There again let me be very frank. It was a matter of compromising differences in points of view. We came out with figures which I think we can clearly substantiate on the basis of the record. Some of the proposals would go higher, some would go lower. I think our agreed-upon amounts represent a fair compromise.

The bill proposes, Mr. President, that as to single veterans we will increase the allowance from $65 to $75; for married veterans we will increase the allowance from $90 to $105 when the married couple does not have children or other dependents, but in case of children or other dependents the increase shall be to $120.

I think I should add that the bill is not applicable to those veterans who are participating in the on-the-job training program. Their subsistence allowance will remain at $65 for single veterans and at $90 for married veterans, for reasons which I will advance in greater detail if and when the full committee reports the bill to the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce the bill for appropriate reference, and request to have it published in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill (S. 1394) to provide increased subsistence allowance to veterans pursuing certain courses under the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, and for other purposes, introduced by Mr. MORSE (for himself, Mr. IVES, Mr. JENNER, Mr. THOMAS of Utah, Mr. PEPPER, and Mr. HILL), was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That so much of paragraph 6 of part VIII of Veterans Regulation Numbered 1 (a), as amended, as precedes the proviso, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"6. While enrolled in and pursuing a course under this part, such person, upon application to the Administrator, shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $65 per month, if without a dependent or dependents, or $90 per month, if he has a dependent or dependents, including regular holidays and leave not exceeding 30 days in a calendar year: Except, that while enrolled in and pursuing a course of full-time institutional training under this part, such person, upon application to the Administrator, shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $75 per month, if without a dependent or dependents, or $105 per month if he has one dependent, or $120 per month if he has more than one dependent, including regular holidays and leave not exceeding thirty days in a calendar year. Such person attending a course on a part-time basis and such person receiving compensation for productive labor whether performed as part of his apprentice or other training on the job at institutions, business or other establishments, or otherwise, shall be entitled to receive such lesser sums, if any, as subsistence or dependency allowances as may be determined by the Administrator."

SEC. 2. So much of paragraph 3 of part VII of Veterans Regulation Numbered 1 (a), as amended, as precedes the first proviso, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"3. While pursuing training prescribed herein, and for 2 months after his employability is determined, each veteran pursuing a course under this part, shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $65 per month, if without a dependent or dependents, of $90 per month, if he has a dependent or dependents: Except, That each veteran pursuing a full-time institutional course under this part shall be paid a subsistence allowance of $75 per month, if without a dependent or dependents, or $105 per month, if he has one dependent, or $120 per month, if he has more than one dependent."

SEC. 3. This act shall take effect on the first day of the second calendar month next succeeding its enactment.

TERMINATION OF WAR CONTROLS

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to introduce for appropriate reference a joint resolution declaring that in interpreting certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations, World War II, the limited emergency and the unlimited emergency shall be construed as terminated and peace established.

On January 8, 1947, I submitted Senate Resolution 35, which directed each standing committee of the Senate to make a full and complete study of all existing temporary and permanent emergency and wartime legislation which falls within its jurisdiction and to transmit its recommendations to the Committee on the Judiciary for review and correlation.

The joint resolution, which I have just introduced, is the result of the recommendations and review which have thus far been made. There are approximately 550 war and emergency statutes. Of this number approximately one-half have specific termination dates without reference to the war or emergency proclamations, and will not be affected by the joint resolution. Of the remaining number approximately 66 basic provisions are, under the terms of the joint resolution, retained in full force and effect. The balance of these statutes will, under the terms of the joint resolution, be terminated insofar as they depend upon the existence of a state of war or the proclamations of the President declaring the existence of emergencies. May I emphasize that the provisions of this joint resolution are tentative and subject to such changes as may be proper in view of further facts which may be developed in the hearings.

Attention is especially directed to the fact that the question of extending the Export Control Act and title III of the Second War Powers Act, both of which expire on June 30, is currently under study by subcommittees of the Committee on the Judiciary.

There being no objection, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 123) declaring that in interpreting certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations, World War II, the limited emergency and the unlimited emergency shall be construed as terminated and peace established, introduced by Mr. WILEY, was received, read twice by its title, and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I wish to announce that beginning on Tuesday, June 10, 1947, at 10 a. m. a subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee will hold public hearings in connection with Senate Joint Resolution 123, which declares that in interpreting certain acts of Congress, joint resolutions, and proclamations, World War II, the limited emergency and the unlimited emergency shall be construed as terminated and peace established.

ACCEPTANCE OF THE STATUE OF WILLIAM E. BORAH

Mr. DWORSHAK. I ask unanimous consent to submit a concurrent resolution, and I request its immediate consideration.

There being no objection, the concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17) was considered, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That the statue of the late William E. Borah, presented by the State of Idaho, now in the Capitol Building, is accepted in the name of the United States, and that the thanks of Congress be tendered to the State for the contribution of the statue of one of its most eminent citizens, illustrious for his historic renown and distinguished civic services.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions, suitably engrossed and duly authenticated, be transmitted to the Governor of Idaho.

UNVEILING OF STATUE OF WILLIAM E. BORAH—ORDER FOR RECESS TOMORROW

Mr. DWORSHAK. Mr. President, tomorrow afternoon appropriate exercises will be held in connection with the unveiling of a statue of Hon. William E. Borah, to be placed in Statuary Hall. The senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. VANDENBERG] will deliver the principal address in honor of one of the most distinguished Senators who ever sat in this body.

I should like to invite the Members of the Senate to attend the exercises, and therefore I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess at 2:15 o'clock p. m. tomorrow, June 6, for 1 hour, or subject to the call of the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Idaho that the Senate stand in recess tomorrow afternoon for the period of 1 hour, beginning at 2:15 o'clock p. m.? The Chair hears no objection, and the order is made.

NECESSITY OF TAX REDUCTION

Mr. WILEY. Mr. President, I have today released a public statement on behalf of enactment into law of the tax reduction bill. I ask that my statement be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD as follows:

PARTISAN POLITICS MUST NOT BE ALLOWED TO KILL TAX CUT BILL

If the tax bill is vetoed it will be because of partisan party politics, and the American people will neither forget nor forgive that fact.

In the light of all the following truths, no other conclusion can be drawn.

The facts clearly indicate that adequate funds will be available in 1948 to balance the budget, cut taxes approximately $4,000,000,000, as is proposed in the revenue bill now at the White House, and to pay several billion dollars on the national debt.

EFFECT OF BUDGET CUT

One reason that the money will be available for the tax reduction and payment on the debt is the fact that Congress has made deep slashes in the padded and bloated $37,500,000,000 budget proposed by Mr. Truman.

The Chief Executive unwisely opposed these reductions in expenditures, just as he has unwisely opposed the reductions in taxes.

Administration economists are predicting a business recession in the near future, but are ignoring the fact that a tax cut would do more probably than any other one thing to forestall any projected slump.

MEANING TO WISCONSIN

A tax cut would increase purchasing power. In my State of Wisconsin that means increasing consumption basically for the 1,151,324 taxpayers who make under $5,000 per year and for the 22,083 folks who make between $5,000 and $10,000 per year. A tax cut would restore business confidence and it would stimulate business expansion.

In view of the data given him by his economic advisers, Mr. Truman no longer can believe that a tax cut would be inflationary, for his experts are telling him that the threat in the months ahead is deflation.

Therefore, the reports that the President is still insistent on vetoing the tax bill do not make sense any more than they make for justice.

1947 BUDGET SURPLUS

Before it became evident that there would be a surplus this year and next year also, the administration might have had some grounds for its opposition to a tax cut.

If so, these grounds have been removed long ago. Not long ago the President admitted an error of $3,500,000,000 in his estimates of Treasury receipts and expenditures on January 1, 1947.

There is likely to be a Treasury surplus of, at the minimum, $2,000,000,000 and even as much as between three and four billion dollars on June 30, 1947, instead of the $1,250,000,000 estimated not long ago by Mr. Truman.

Even were we to allow for a recession in the present rate of business activity, receipts of the Government during the next fiscal year probably will be around $41,000,000,000. Taking into account the slashes which Congress will make and has already made in Mr. Truman's budget, there is plenty of room for a tax cut of around $4,000,000,000, leaving several billion to take care of contingencies and the debt.

MENACE OF HIGH TAXES

There is no question that existing tax rates are so high that they constitute a threat to free enterprise.

With taxes at such high levels, the risks are too great for businessmen to take chances in developing new enterprises that will increase employment. If the businessmen gain, the Treasury will take most of the money. If they lose, it is their hard luck.

The taxes bear heavily upon the low income taxpayers. Approximately 45,000,000 persons are paying Federal income taxes, including 1,183,854 persons in the Badger State. A single person who receives only $1,000 a year must pay $95 in taxes. With the cost of living what it is, Federal income taxes are a real hardship on those in the low income brackets. Under the pending tax bill, the taxes in the lower brackets would by cut 30 percent.

PARTISAN POLITICS IN OPPOSING TAX CUT

It is time for the administration to stop playing politics with taxes. It is time for it to practice economy and to give the people the tax relief they want and should have.

The administration cannot get away with the pretense that the tax cut should be withheld until next year when Mr. Truman plans to run again for the Presidency.

Taxes should be cut this year and next year, too.

Let me repeat: If the tax bill is vetoed, it will be because of partisan party politics, and the American people will neither forget nor forgive that fact.

LABOR LEGISLATION—ADDRESS BY SENATOR WAGNER

[Mr. McGRATH asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an address on labor legislation, prepared by Senator WAGNER, and delivered in his behalf at an American Federation of Labor rally in Madison Square Garden, New York, June 4, 1947, which appears in the Appendix.]

OCCUPATION TROOPS IN GERMANY—REPORT BY COL. JULIUS KLEIN

[Mr. BREWSTER asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD a report on the status of our occupation troops in Germany, prepared by Col. Julius Klein, which appears in the Appendix.]

THE CLOSED SHOP—ANALYSIS OF SECTION 8 OF H. R. 3020

[Mr. MAGNUSON asked and obtained leave to have printed in the RECORD an analysis of section 8 of House bill 3020, as passed by the Senate, relative to the so-called closed-shop, which appears in the Appendix.]

LEAVES OF ABSENCE

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, for several days I have had engagements in New Mexico which I have postponed because of the imminence of votes. The weekend is approaching, and it is necessary for me to leave this afternoon to keep those engagements, which I believe to be important. I understand that it is not likely that a vote will be reached this afternoon on the pending conference report. Therefore it is very likely that I shall not be present when the vote comes. I desire to announce now that if present I would vote for the conference report. I shall try to arrange a pair.

In the light of these circumstances, I ask unanimous consent to absent myself from sessions of the Senate until next week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. MARTIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate Friday and Monday.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be absent from the Senate tomorrow on account of illness in my family.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the order is made.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Maurer, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House had passed, without amendment, the bill (S. 1135) to extend for 1 year certain provisions of section 100 of the Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, as amended, relating to the authority of the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs to enter into leases for periods not exceeding 5 years.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I submit the conference report on House bill 3020, the Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the conference report.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator wish to have the report printed in the RECORD without reading?

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it is necessary to print the entire report in the RECORD. It has been printed in the House proceedings.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The report will be printed with a cross-reference.

(For conference report see House proceedings, pp. 6361–6381, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, June 3, 1947.)

Is there objection to the present consideration of the conference report?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the report.

CONSIDERATION OF CERTAIN NOMINATIONS OF GRADUATING MIDSHIPMEN

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, about 2 weeks ago the Senate confirmed the nominations of most of the graduating midshipmen. Due to the fact that for physical reasons the names of 26 midshipmen were not included in the larger list, there are 26 who cannot graduate with the class on Saturday next if the Senate does not confirm their nominations today. I therefore ask unanimous consent, as in executive session, that the 26 nominations of midshipmen appearing on Executive Nomination Slip No. 272 be confirmed at this time.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I shall be obliged to object unless the Senator will ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, in which event I shall have no objection whatever.

Mr. GURNEY. I did not quite catch the Senator's point.

Mr. GEORGE. I shall be obliged to object to a qualified request of this character. However, I shall have no objection if the Senator will simply move to proceed to the consideration of executive business. I have no doubt that the Senate will immediately return to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. GURNEY. That is the only reason why I am asking that the Senate go into executive session. It is for the purpose of confirming the nominations of 26 midshipmen who otherwise will not graduate with the regular class Saturday of this week.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot move that the Senate go into exceutive session for a limited purpose.

Mr. GURNEY. I move that, as in executive session, these nominations be considered and confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator cannot make such a motion. He can only ask unanimous consent for a limited executive session.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard to the request of the Senator from Georgia. Objection is also heard to the request of the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. GURNEY. How can the Senator from South Dakota have these nominations of midshipmen confirmed?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota can have the nominations of midshipmen confirmed if he can inveigle the Senator from Georgia into permitting him to ask unanimous consent, successfully, to go into executive session for a limited purpose; but he cannot do it, so there is no chance.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio further yield?

Mr. O'MAHONEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. O'MAHONEY. I ask the Presiding Officer whether it would not be perfectly proper for the Senator from South Dakota to move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business, whereupon, if such motion were made and a majority of the Senate desired to confirm the nominations of midshipmen, they could be confirmed.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is partially correct. The answer to his parliamentary inquiry is that the Senator move to proceed to the consideration of executive business. Such a motion may be agreed to. If and when the Senate gets into executive session, it will have to proceed according to the rules of procedure; and the first question before the Senate will be the consideration of 50 or more motions to discharge the Committee on Civil Service from the consideration of certain postmaster confirmations.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio further yield for a brief statement?

Mr. TAFT. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, I do not believe that the Senate wishes to go on record as having failed to allow the 26 midshipmen to graduate with their class at Annapolis this week. I do not know from what States they come—probably from 26 States. Therefore I respectfully ask Senators not to object to a unanimous-consent agreement for this particular purpose. I therefore renew my unanimous-consent request, and ask that the Senate go into executive session for this purpose.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is the Senator's request simply that the Senate go into executive session, or go into executive session for the purpose of confirming these nominations?

Mr. GURNEY. For the purpose of confirming these nominations.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session for the purpose of considering the nominations of certain midshipmen. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I am obliged to object to the request. I have no objection to the Senate going into executive session, and so far as I am concerned I shall press nothing else.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state it.

Mr. BARKLEY. I ask the Chair whether it would be in order for the Senator from South Dakota to move that the Senate go into executive session without restriction. If that motion were agreed to, would it then be in order, in executive session, for the Senator to ask unanimous consent that the nominations of midshipmen be considered first?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would.

Mr. BARKLEY. Following which it would be in order to move that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator is correct.

Is there objection to the request of the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I object.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I object because I do not wish to precipitate any debate before the consideration of the conference report on the labor bill. If the Senator can devise some arrangement by which there will be no debate, I shall be glad to yield the floor. However, the business before the Senate is the consideration of the conference report on the labor bill, and I do not wish to take a chance of having debate on a great many other subjects before we proceed to consideration of the conference report.

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. GEORGE. Let me say to the Senator from Ohio that I have not the slightest idea that any debate will ensue. However, I believe that the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] should have the right to present a nomination which he presented yesterday, and which was not acted upon because of this same situation.

I have no objection to the Senate proceeding to the consideration of executive business by unanimous consent, and will have no objection to a request then for the consideration of only these matters. I shall not object to dispensing with the formal executive procedure in order that we may return immediately to the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. TAFT. However, any Senator could object to the second unanimous-consent request.

Mr. GEORGE. That is true. I can speak only for myself.

Mr. TAFT. That is the problem which I face.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair suggests at this point that if the picture painted by the Senator from Georgia should not develop any Senator could move to resume the consideration of legislative business.

Mr. GEORGE. That is quite true. The majority can return to the consideration of legislative business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority would be completely in control of the situation.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. GURNEY. Mr. President, with the permission of the Senator from Ohio [Mr. TAFT], if he will further yield, I now renew my request that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Is there objection?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business.

NOMINATIONS OF CERTAIN MIDSHIPMEN

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from South Dakota asks unanimous consent that the nominations of a certain group of midshipmen be considered. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nominations are confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

NOMINATION OF MEMBER OF SECURITIES AND EXCHANGE COMMISSION

Mr. TOBEY. Mr. President, adverting to the comments of the distinguished Senator from Georgia [Mr. GEORGE], it may be recalled that yesterday I tried to bring up the nomination of Edmond M. Hanrahan to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission. I would not think of doing so at this time except that the situation is urgent. Mr. Hanrahan was nominated by the President to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission for the term expiring June 5, 1952, to succeed himself. The Commission is holding important hearings. The nominee is awaiting word of the confirmation of his nomination. I do not believe there is the slightest objection to it. I therefore ask unanimous consent that his nomination be confirmed, and that the President be notified.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The nomination will be stated for the information of the Senate.

The legislative clerk read the nomination of Edmond M. Hanrahan to be a member of the Securities and Exchange Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. TOBEY] asks unanimous consent for the consideration of the nomination of Mr. Hanrahan. Is there objection? The Chair hears none. Without objection, the nomination is confirmed; and, without objection, the President will be notified forthwith.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations, which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(For nominations this day received, see the end of Senate proceedings.)

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF A COMMITTEE

The following favorable reports of nominations were submitted:

By Mr. MILLIKIN, from the Committee on Finance:

George J. Schoeneman, of Newport, R. I., to be Commissioner of Internal Revenue, in place of Joseph D. Nunan, Jr., resigned; and

Thomas M. Robinson, of Montana, to be collector of internal revenue for the district of Montana, in place of Lewis Penwell.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. GEORGE. Mr. President, I now ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

LABOR-MANAGEMENT RELATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT

The Senate resumed the consideration of the report of the committee on conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 3020) to prescribe fair and equitable rules of conduct to be observed by labor and management in their relations with one another which affect commerce, to protect the rights of individual workers in their relations with labor organizations whose activities affect commerce, to recognize the paramount public interest in labor disputes affecting commerce that endanger the public health, safety, or welfare, and for other purposes.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, the conference report on the labor bill is on the desks of all Senators. It has been submitted by the House conferees to their body and printed as a House report. The Senate and House bills followed in some ways the same general division of the matters which were considered in the Senate. However, they were basically so different in many respects that I suppose there may have been a hundred possible differences to be considered, and they were considered for nearly 2 weeks with the House conferees. I think that as a general proposition I can say that the Senate conferees did not yield on any matter which was the subject of controversy in the Senate; certainly not on any important matter. The bill represents substantially the Senate bill. Concessions as to language were made here and there. We made concessions on some matters which were not perhaps dealt with in the Senate bill at all. The only major additions to the bill, as I see them, deal with matters which the Senate has approved in other measures. I refer particularly to the section having to do with the Corrupt Practices Act, which limits contributions by labor organizations for political purposes.

As to the prohibition of political contributions by labor unions, it should be remembered that after the expiration of the Smith-Connally Act, on June 30, the current prohibition of political contributions by labor unions will cease to be a part of the Federal law unless new legislation is enacted. The Senate passed the Smith-Connally Act and approved it, with that provision in it, by a 2-to-1 vote. That provision was not in the Senate bill and was not considered by the Senate.

In the second place, there is a prohibition of strikes by Government employees which was not in the Senate bill or discussed in the Senate.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Has the Senator concluded his discussion on the conference report relating to the prohibition of political activities?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. I have noted that the Senator did not refer to the action which I understand the conference committee took prohibiting expenditures by labor organizations and, of course, expenditures by corporations, for political purposes. The way the provision now reads, as related to labor organizations, as I see on page 67 of the report, it is unlawful for any labor organization to make expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections and political conventions. Under the conference agreements expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections, political conventions, and caucuses are made unlawful to the same extent as those made in connection with the elections themselves.

I wish to ask the Senator, if I may, this question: Would the newspaper called Labor, which is published by the Railway Labor Executives, be permitted to put out a special edition of the paper, for example, in support of President Truman, if he should be the Democratic candidate for the Presidency next year, and in opposition to the Senator from Ohio, if he should be the Republican nominee for the Presidency, stating that President Truman was a friend of labor and that the Senator from Ohio was not friendly to labor? Would that be called a political expenditure on the part of the labor organization?

Mr. TAFT. If it were supported by union funds contributed by union members as union dues it would be a violation of the law, yes. It is exactly as if a railroad itself, using its stockholders' funds, published such an advertisement in the newspaper supporting one candidate as against another. If the paper called Labor is operated independently, if it derives its money from its subscribers, then of course there would be no violation. The prohibition is against a labor organization using its funds either as a contribution to a political campaign or as a direct expenditure of funds on its own behalf.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield further to the Senator.

Mr. PEPPER. Has the committee given consideration to whether or not that kind of a prohibition would be a denial of the freedom of the press to a newspaper which might happen to be owned by a labor organization?

Mr. TAFT. It is not a denial of the freedom of the press. It applies only if the labor organization operates the paper and uses union dues for that purpose. We have long prohibited corporations from contributing money to political campaigns. The conference report simply writes into the corporation provision a similar provision affecting labor organizations. As I said, we have long prohibited corporations from contributing money for political purposes, and it was always supposed that the law prevented a corporation from operating newspapers for that purpose or advertising in newspapers for that purpose, until labor organizations were included in the Smith-Connally Act, and then it was said that the law prohibited contributions, but that political advertisements and political pamphlets could be published by the union or corporation itself.

So what we are proposing to do is to subject labor organizations to exactly the same prohibition to which corporations have been subjected, and, so far as I know, including the things which I think the original law covered but regarding which doubt was raised by labor organizations.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further.

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator from Ohio mean to tell the Senate that a corporation owning a newspaper cannot have a free editorial policy to oppose candidates and to oppose political parties according to its own judgment.

Mr. TAFT. Not if it used its corporate funds for that purpose, instead of running a newspaper as a business. If it did it would be prosecuted immediately under the Federal law.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the Senator know how a newspaper published by a corporation can get any money to provide editorials for the paper if it does not get it from the corporate treasury?

Mr. TAFT. They get their money from advertising. They are business concerns operating newspapers. So far as I know no one has ever thought that a corporation could publish a pamphlet for one candidate as against another without violating the Corrupt Practices Act. No one has ever considered that could be done. They could not publish a special newspaper for that purpose under the previous law, because the previous law prohibited any contribution, direct or indirect, in connection with any election at which a man was a candidate for public office. We have not changed the law in that respect. We only make it clear that an expenditure for that purpose is the same as an indirect contribution, which, in my opinion, has always been unlawful.

Mr. PEPPER. I wonder if the Senator, upon reflection, really means that the newspapers of this country which are owned by corporations cannot publish an extra paper if they want to oppose some candidate or cannot put out a whole special edition giving their view about a political party or a political candidate. That is one of the civil rights in this country. Does not the Senator know that it would be unconstitutional to try to deprive a corporation owning a newspaper of the right of freedom of the press. If that be the correct premise—and I think it cannot be denied that it is—is not the Senator denying to the labor organization which may happen to own a newspaper the right to the same freedom of the press to support or oppose candidates and political parties which other newspapers enjoy? Yet the Senator from Ohio says that the newspaper Labor, published by the 21 railway labor executives, would not be permitted to publish a statement saying that it supported President Truman and opposed Candidate Taft, or vice versa. I say that would be a deprivation of the freedom of the press.

Mr. TAFT. No; I said that union funds could not be used for that purpose. They could conduct a newspaper if they wanted to, just as a corporation can conduct a newspaper. But why should a labor organization be able to publish pamphlets or special newspapers against one candidate or in favor of another candidate, using funds which that organization collected from the union members?

That is what happened in the State of Ohio. The PAC is a separate organization which raises its own funds for political purposes, and does so perfectly properly. The Smith-Connally Act prohibited the making of contributions by unions to the PAC, yet those unions took the position that they could use their funds for the publication of pamphlets for or against candidates throughout that election, and they evaded the entire law by saying that was not a contribution—not even an indirect contribution—to the candidate who received the benefit of that procedure. That is what this provision of the House bill is intended to reach, if it be agreed to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, I call the attention of the Senator from Ohio to the following practice of the railway labor executives in the past: If a certain candidate was unfriendly to the interests of labor, they would publish a special edition of their paper and would put that special edition into circulation in the area where that candidate was running for office, and would place it in the hands of labor-union members and also in the hands of the public generally.

Mr. TAFT. That is exactly what they should not be allowed to do.

Mr. PEPPER. Very well; I want it definitely understood that the Senator from Ohio intends to outlaw that privilege on the part of labor. Now that I have that clear——

Mr. TAFT. It is perfectly clear. It is perfectly clear that union funds are not to be used to interfere in political campaigns and with political candidates, either in favor of one candidate or against another candidate. That same prohibition extends against the railroads for which the union members work. For years the railroads have been prohibited from doing anything of that kind, and this provision would simply extend to labor unions the prohibition which has been applied against corporations for a long time.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose the particular publication referred to by the Senator from Florida is published and paid for by subscriptions paid to the publication by the membership of that railway labor organization?

Mr. TAFT. That will be perfectly lawful. That is the way it should be done.

Mr. BARKLEY. And suppose it is not paid for by union funds collected from the various labor unions?

Mr. TAFT. That will be perfectly proper.

Mr. BARKLEY. Would that still be prohibited?

Mr. TAFT. No; it would not be.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator has referred to the law which now prohibits corporations from making contributions to political campaigns.

Mr. TAFT. That is not the way the law is now.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator from Ohio referred to the law prohibiting the making of direct or indirect contributions by corporations as a justification for making the same provision in the case of labor unions. Let us consider the publication of a corporation which, day after day, takes a position against one candidate and in favor of another candidate, and does so in its editorials. The editorials occupy space in that newspaper or publication, and the space costs a certain amount of money. Is that a direct or an indirect contribution to a campaign; and if it is neither, what is it?

Mr. TAFT. I would say that is the operation of the newspaper itself.

Mr. BARKLEY. That is true; it is the operation of the newspaper. But I gathered the impression that in referring to the present law prohibiting the making of contributions, directly or indirectly by corporations, the Senator inferred that if a corporation publishes a newspaper—as most of them do—and uses the editorials in that publication in advocacy of or opposition to any candidate, at least that is a direct contribution to the campaign. It could not be anything else.

Mr. TAFT. I do not think it is either a direct or an indirect contribution. I do not think it is an expenditure of the sort prohibited, because it seems to me it is simply the ordinary operation of the particular corporation's business.

Mr. BARKLEY. None of us have ever assumed that the Corrupt Practices Act prevented a newspaper from writing editorials for or against any candidate.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct.

Mr. BARKLEY. Yet the Senator from Ohio is saying that law is applicable to corporations, and is saying that that is a basis for doing the same thing with respect to labor organizations which may publish newspapers.

Mr. TAFT. It never has been applied to newspapers. I say that under the Smith-Connally Act I do not think a labor organization itself should be permitted to use union funds to make such a contribution. I do not think that would be permitted under the provision to which we are now referring. I think it was clearly unlawful under the Smith-Connally Act.

As a matter of fact, the investigating committee of which the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN] was chairman, requested the Attorney General to bring suit to determine the meaning of these words. I think the committee took the position that such a direct expenditure by a labor union was illegal under the Smith-Connally Act, and directed the Attorney General to bring suit to determine that question. But the Attorney General always avoided bringing such a suit, and failed to do so.

In my opinion, the word "contribution" covers the direct expenditure of money for the same political purpose. But in order to make that matter perfectly clear, the House inserted the word "expenditure" in this measure.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Two years ago, I was a member of the committee which was headed by the Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. GREEN], as I recall. We ran into expenses on the part of corporations, as well as unions, in cases in which by making direct expenditures, as well as contributions, they certainly violated the spirit and intent of the Corrupt Practices Act. I know of one newspaper in my section of the country which makes a practice of printing hundreds of thousands of special reprints and sending them into various States, to influence the elections. I think that is prohibited, just as the practice of the labor paper to which the Senator from Florida has referred—the sending of a special edition of 200,000 or more copies into a State—would also be prohibited.

Mr. TAFT. I would say the word "expenditure' does not mean the sale of newspaper for money for their worth. If they are sold to subscribers and if the newspaper is supported by subscriptions, then I would not say that constituted such an expenditure. But if the newspapers were given away—even an ordinary newspaper—I think that would violate the Corrupt Practices Act. That act would be violated, it seems to me, if such a newspaper were given away as a political document in favor of a certain candidate. I think that would have been so under the present law, and I think we make it more clearly so, perhaps, by this measure.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, let me ask the Senator this question: Let us suppose a labor organization publishes a newspaper for the information and benefit of its members, and let us suppose that it is published regularly, whether daily or weekly or monthly, and is paid for from a fund created by the payment of dues into the organization it represents. Let us assume that the newspaper is not sold on the streets, and let us assume further that a certain subscription by the month or by the year is not charged for the newspaper. Does the Senator from Ohio advise us that under this measure such a newspaper could not take an editorial position with respect to any candidate for public office, without violating this measure?

Mr. TAFT. If it is supported by union funds, I do not think it could. If the newspaper is prepared and distributed and circulated by means of the expenditure of union funds, then how could a line be drawn between that and political literature or pamphlets or publications of that nature? It is perfectly easy for a labor union to publish lawfully a bona fide newspaper and to charge subscriptions for that newspaper, either by itself or as a corporation.

Mr. BARKLEY. So if there is a labor organization which is publishing a newspaper—not as a political newspaper, but for the benefit of its members—and if the expenses of that publication and distribution are paid from the funds raised by means of the payment of dues, and if all members of the union understand that a certain portion of their dues goes to the publication of that newspaper, then in order for that newspaper to take any position with respect to any candidate, it would have to charge a subscription by the month or by the year, in order that it might express its views in that respect; is that so?

Mr. TAFT. I am inclined to think so, just as a corporation gets out regular house organs to its members, and if that corporation interferes in a political election through one of those house organs it violates the Corrupt Practices Act. In my opinion, that has been unlawful for years, so far as that is concerned. No corporation in this country would dare to do it under the Corrupt Practices Act which has been in force for many years.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. BALL. In the case of most union papers, as I understand, the subscriptions from the union members are collected along with the dues, but they are an earmarked portion of the dues which the union collects and remits to the paper in the form of subscriptions. I take it that would be in a different category from the case where the union makes a blanket subscription and an appropriation out of union dues.

Mr. TAFT. I think if the paper is, so to speak, a going concern, it can take whatever position it wants to.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. Suppose there were a case where a number of corporations associated themselves together into an organization we will call the National Manufacturers Association, and suppose the funds of that organization are altogether contributed by corporate memberships. Is that organization, under this section, forbidden to publish any pamphlet, or send any telegrams, or make any telephone calls, or incur any expenditures, in respect to any political election of any party, or any candidate, or any caucus, or any convention?

Mr. TAFT. I think it would be. It would be a general conspiracy, I think, and would be a clear violation by all the corporations which contributed the money. Such an association could receive money by direct contributions from individual members, just as the CIO-PAC can properly operate as a political organization, raising its funds from individual members. In the same way the National Manufacturers Association could do the same thing. But no corporation could contribute to the National Manufacturers Association, and no labor union could contribute to the PAC.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is using the word "contribute." My reason for emphasizing this matter is that the conference committee has added two very important and I think very significant words. The old law, the Smith-Connally law, which has been reenacted, prohibited only contributions, but the proposed law prohibits a contribution "or expenditure" without any definition of "expenditure". That means a dollar, or 50 cents, or $500 or $1,000.

Will the distinguished Senator from Ohio yield for another question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Suppose a labor union felt that a candidate for office was unfair to labor, and that labor union wished to put out a pamphlet to advise its members about the labor record of the candidate. I ask the Senator from Ohio whether that would be forbidden as an expenditure by a labor organization in respect to a candidate or an election, under the proposed act?

Mr. TAFT. Yes, I think it would be.

Mr. PEPPER. So a workingman's organization would be deprived of the power even of advising its membership of the antilabor record of a man who might be a candidate for public office?

Mr. TAFT. Correct. Let me read the Senator the act which has been in force right along:

> It is unlawful for any national bank, or any corporation organized by authority of any law of Congress, to make a contribution in connection with any election to any political officer, or for any corporation whatever, or any labor organization to make a contribution in connection with any election—
> To make a contribution in connection with any election—
> at which Presidential and Vice Presidential electors or a Senator or Representative in Congress * * * are to be voted for.

That is the existing law.

Mr. PEPPER. It did not include the word "expenditure."

Mr. TAFT. No, it did not include the word "expenditure"; but what would the law mean if a corporation or a labor organization were prohibited from contributing to candidate X, but in spite of that, could issue its own papers, could print its own pamphlets, and issue them in behalf of candidate X?

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator is overlooking the distinction that exists in every corrupt practice act I know anything about. When in our several States we run for the office of Senator we are limited in the amount of contributions we personally make, or are responsible for, but if I have a friend in the southern part of the State who wants to put out some pamphlets for me, and distribute them over the community, he has a perfect right to do so.

Mr. TAFT. If the Senator had had a friend who was a corporation and had done that, the corporation officials would have been in jail long ago.

Mr. PEPPER. Yes; but if one of the corporations owns a newspaper, directly or indirectly, that is just what they are doing all the time.

Mr. TAFT. They have been able to sell legitimate newspapers and distribute them without question. They do not distribute corporation funds for that purpose.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the interest of clarification, because I am assuming the Senator understands his own bill——

Mr. TAFT. It is a House bill.

Mr. BARKLEY. And the Senator always gives me a frank answer—inasmuch as the National Association of Manufacturers has been mentioned, and the United States Chamber of Commerce, and, I might add, the Automobile Chamber of Commerce, I submit that the National Association of Manufacturers does not manufacture anything, the United States Chamber of Commerce does not sell anything, and the Automobile Chamber of Commerce does not manufacture or sell anything. All their funds are contributed by individual members, by way of corporations, who belong either to the National Association of Manufacturers, the United States Chamber of Commerce, or the Automobile Chamber of Commerce. They do not contribute their funds to these organizations primarily for political purposes. But suppose the National Association of Manufacturers, out of the funds contributed to it, bought a page in a newspaper, and advertised for or against some candidate, or the United States Chamber of Commerce did the same thing, or the Automobile Chamber of Commerce did the same. Would they be prohibited, under the present law, or under the conference bill, out of funds contributed by corporations into the general fund of the association, from buying newspaper space to advocate or oppose a candidate for public office, directly or indirectly; and when I say "indirectly," I mean use the space in order to advocate certain things advocated by some candidates or opposed by other candidates, without mentioning the names of the candidates.

Mr. TAFT. Of course, if the Chamber of Commerce were a corporation, as I think it is, it would be clearly illegal. In any event, so long as the money comes from corporations, and with their knowledge, I think it would be clearly illegal anyway, and they would be participating as corporations in spending for political purposes.

Mr. BARKLEY. I understand these organizations have a regular schedule of dues which are paid into the general fund by constituent members. They are not collected for political purposes, but I recall that last summer there were widespread advertisements in the newspapers of the United States, consisting of whole pages, under the names of some of these organizations. I do not know to what extent they affected anyone's vote, but they definitely had an indirect effect, and I have no doubt that they cost hundreds of thousands of dollars. Was that a violation of the law?

Mr. TAFT. The question there would be whether or not it was in connection with a Federal election.

Mr. BARKLEY. Those advertisements were very skillfully drawn, and they had no specific reference to anyone's candidacy.

Mr. TAFT. The language of the law is: "for any corporation or any labor organization to make a contribution or expenditure in connection with any election at which Presidential candidates are to be voted for." The question would be whether it was in connection with such an election.

As to the association itself, it seems to me the conditions are exactly parallel, both as to corporations and labor organizations. Such an association receiving corporation funds and using them in an election would violate the law, in my opinion, exactly as the PAC, if it got its fund from labor unions, would violate the law. If the labor people should desire to set up a political organization and obtain direct contributions for it, there would be nothing unlawful in that. If the National Association of Manufacturers, we will say, wanted to obtain individual contributions for a series of advertisements, and if it, itself, were not a corporation, then, just as in the case of PAC, it could take an active part in a political campaign. But the prohibition is against a labor organization or a corporation participating in an election either by a contribution to somebody else or by direct expenditure of its own funds. That has been understood to be the law of corporations for many years, and until labor organizations were placed under the terms of the Smith-Connally Act, no one supposed that corporations could make direct expenditures without it being considered a contribution. But after the labor organizations were included, that question was raised. In order that it might be finally resolved in this bill, we made it perfectly clear that it covers either a contribution to somebody else or an expenditure of one's own funds for the same purpose, in connection with an election.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Florida.

Mr. PEPPER. I wanted to be sure I understood the Senator about the association. If the members of a trade association are all corporations, although they make no contributions to anyone's campaign fund, would the association be able to use its funds for any political expenditure?

Mr. TAFT. In my opinion, they would be participating in the expenditure by those corporations of funds for political purposes and would violate the law.

Mr. PEPPER. Will the Senator allow one other question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does what the Senator has said in the past also apply to a radio speech? If a national labor union, for example, should believe that it was in the public interest to elect the Democratic Party instead of the Republican Party, or vice versa, would it be forbidden by this proposed act to pay for any radio time, for anybody to make a speech that would express to the people the point of view of that organization?

Mr. TAFT. If it contributed its own funds to get somebody to make the speech, I would say they would violate the law.

Mr. PEPPER. If they paid for the radio time?

Mr. TAFT. If they are simply giving the time, I would say not; I would say that is in the course of their regular business.

Mr. PEPPER. What I mean is this: I was not assuming that the radio station was owned by the labor organization. Suppose that in the 1948 campaign, Mr. William Green, as president of the American Federation of Labor, should believe it to be in the interest of his membership to go on the radio and support one party or the other in the national election, and should use American Federation of Labor funds to pay for the radio time. Would that be an expenditure which is forbidden to a labor organization under the statute?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. He would be denied the right to do that?

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator one other question?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Kentucky.

Mr. BARKLEY. Suppose a certain corporation, for instance, the corporation that makes Bayer aspirin, or Jergens lotion, or any other well-advertised product, employs a commentator to talk about various things, winding up with an advertisement of the product, and suppose that the radio commentator from day to day takes advantage of his employment or his sponsorship to make comments which are calculated to influence the opinions of men or women as to political candidates. Would the corporation sponsoring the particular commentator be violating the law?

Mr. TAFT. I should have to know the exact facts. If, for instance, apart from commentators and the radio, and taking the case of a paid advertisement, suppose a corporation advertises its products, and that every day for 2 weeks before the election it advertises a candidate. I should say that would be a violation of the law. I would say the same thing probably would be true of a radio broadcast of that kind, under certain circumstances, but I think I should like to know the exact facts before expressing an opinion.

Mr. BARKLEY. In the case of a commentator who is paid to advertise a certain product, and who in the course of his 15 minutes on the radio may also seek to influence votes, the sponsor may say, either before or after the broadcast, that he is not responsible for what the commentary says; yet he is paying the commentator for his broadcast. Would that still be a violation of law, although the sponsor might excuse himself or attempt to excuse himself by saying he was not responsible for the opinions expressed by the commentator?

Mr. TAFT. I think there are all degrees. It would be for a court to decide. I think as a matter of fact, if that had happened under the old law, there would have been the same question.

I want to make the point that we are not raising any new questions here. Those same questions could have been raised with respect to corporations during the past 25 years. It is a question of fact: Was the corporation using its money to influence a political election?

Mr. BARKLEY. We are rewriting, or substantially rewriting, the National Labor Relations Act and also the Corrupt Practices Act. Nobody can tell how things are going to be interpreted in the future.

Mr. TAFT. I may say that the amendment is in exactly the same words which were recommended by the Ellender committee, which investigated expenditures by Senators in the last election. That committee, Republicans and Democrats, in connection with the bill which was introduced by the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. ELLENDER], used exactly the same words that are found in the amendment; so that this is nothing new. A debate similar to this took place on the Smith-Connally Act. In this instance the words of the Smith-Connally Act have been somewhat changed in effect so as to plug up a loophole which obviously developed, and which, if the courts had permitted advantage to be taken of it, as a matter of fact, would absolutely have destroyed the prohibition against political advertising by corporations. If "contribution" does not mean "expenditure," then a candidate for office could have his corporation friends publish an advertisement for him in the newspapers every day for a month before election. I do not think the law contemplated such a thing, but it was claimed that it did, at least when it applied to labor organizations. So, all we are doing here is plugging up the hole which developed, following the recommendation by our own Elections Committee, in the Ellender bill.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As I understand, the wording as it applies to labor unions and corporations is now the same. Is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. Exactly; yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. But the conference committee have added to both the word "expenditure"?

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is correct.

Mr. MAGNUSON. In order to determine the meaning of that, let us assume a concrete example. The International Brotherhood of Teamsters have a newspaper, which they have published for many years. It has a circulation of probably 200,000. It is distributed to members. On the newstand, no price appears on it. No advertisements are accepted. Under this prohibition, would they be prohibited in the future from mentioning in their editorial columns, for their regular circulation, without adding anything additional, the support of a certain candidate or a certain political party?

Mr. TAFT. We discussed that. We discussed the question of whether or not that newspaper was supported in effect by contributions of corporations or labor organizations, or was paid for by the people who received it. If the latter, I do not think it was an expenditure of union funds or contributions, but if the union simply takes the union funds and publishes a newspaper and uses it as a political organ in an effort to elect or to defeat one man that is prohibited.

Mr. MAGNUSON. As a practical matter what happens in these cases I will say to the Senator from Ohio, is much like what happens when one joins a lodge. The lodge dues include for the most part subscriptions to a lodge paper. The same is true with many labor groups. They publish so-called labor organs, and a part of a member's dues goes to subscribe for the labor organ. If such an organ were not published the member's dues would be correspondingly less. The amount which would otherwise go to pay for a subscription to the organ would be subtracted. But now unions collect the subscription along with the dues.

Mr. TAFT. The case is the same as the case of a corporation house organ. A corporation house organ is published and sent out to employees, sometimes many thousands of them. A corporation which used such a house organ to try to elect or defeat a political candidate would certainly be violating the law, in my opinion. Such a law has been in existence for 25 years. What we are now doing is to write into the law the same prohibition with respect to labor organizations as now exists with respect to corporations.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Teamsters' unions publish newspapers dealing with matters in which such unions are interested. The same is true of many other unions. If the pending measure becomes a law, from now on such unions will be prohibited from advocating in their newspapers the support of any political candidates.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct, unless they sell the papers they publish to their members, if the members desire to buy them. In such a case there would be no expenditure for such a purpose of union funds.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let us consider the teamsters. Suppose they have a weekly radio program, as, indeed, they have had for a long time back. Or let us say the AFL has such a radio program. Let us assume I am running for office and they ask me to be a guest on their program. Suppose I talk on the subject of labor and do not advocate my own candidacy. Nevertheless I am on that program. My name is being advertised and I am being heard by many thousands of people. Would that be an unlawful contribution to my candidacy?

Mr. TAFT. If a labor organization is using the funds provided by its members through payment of union dues to put speakers on the radio for Mr. X against Mr. Y, that should be a violation of the law.

Mr. MAGNUSON. They are not paying me anything. They have asked me to be a guest.

Mr. TAFT. I understand, but they are paying for the time on the air. Of course, in each case there is a question of fact to be decided. I cannot answer various hypotheses without knowing all the circumstances. But in each case the question is whether or not a union or a corporation is making a contribution or expenditure of funds to elect A as against B. Labor unions are supposed to keep out of politics in the same way that corporations are supposed to keep out of politics.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Let us take the reverse situation. Suppose the General Electric Co. asked me to be its guest on its Sunday afternoon hour to talk about electrical matters. I am running for office at the time. I am introduced on their program.

Mr. TAFT. Oh, the Senator is running for office at the time?

Mr. MAGNUSON. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. Oh, I do not think that would be a contribution.

Mr. MAGNUSON. It would not be.

Mr. TAFT. There are many useful things done which do not represent contributions. Many Senators like to obtain publicity, and all sorts of indirect aids are given which cannot properly be said to be political contributions or expenditures. In each case the question of fact must be decided.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BARKLEY. The Senator does not mean to say, does he, that anything that would contribute to the election of the Senator from Washington to the Senate would not be a valuable contribution.

Mr. TAFT. It would be a contribution to the Senate, but perhaps not to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, let me ask him another question. All the funds of labor unions come from dues paid by their members. All the activities of the unions are based upon expenditure of funds provided by dues. That money is in the union's treasury. If the pending bill should become law it would mean that all labor organs which are now in existence would, from now on, be prohibited from participating in a campaign, favoring a candidate, mentioning his name, or endorsing him for public office?

Mr. TAFT. No; I do not think it means that. The union can issue a newspaper, and can charge the members for the newspaper, that is, the members who buy copies of the newspaper, and the union can put such matters in the newspaper if it wants to. The union can separate the payment of dues from the payment for a newspaper if its members are willing to do so, that is, if the members are willing to subscribe to that kind of a newspaper. I presume the members would be willing to do so. A union can publish such a newspaper, or unions can do as was done last year, organize something like the PAC, a political organization, and receive direct contributions, just so long as members of the union know what they are contributing to, and the dues which they pay into the union treasury are not used for such purpose.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I think all union members know that a part of their dues in these cases go for the publication of some labor organ.

Mr. TAFT. Yes. How fair is it? We will assume that 60 percent of a union's employees are for a Republican candidate and 40 percent are for a Democratic candidate. Does the Senator think the union members should be forced to contribute, without being asked to do so specifically, and without having a right to withdraw their payments, to the election of someone whom they do not favor? Assume the paper favors a Democratic candidate whom they oppose or a Republican candidate whom they oppose. Why should they be forced to contribute money for the election of someone to whose election they are opposed? If they are asked to contribute directly to the support of a newspaper or to the support of a labor political organization, they know what their money is to be used for and presumably approve it. From such contribution the organization can spend all the money it wants to with respect to such matters. But the prohibition is against labor unions using their members' dues for political purposes, which is exactly the same as the prohibition against a corporation using its stockholders' money for political purposes, and perhaps in violation of the wishes of many of its stockholders.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I do not question why they should do this or should not do that. I am trying to find out what practical effect the provision may have on existing labor organizations. Let me ask the Senator from Ohio a further question. Would the provision in any way deny the right of a religious organization to publish pamphlets in behalf of a candidate because, let us say, the organization supported him on moral grounds?

Mr. TAFT. If the organization is a corporation, I assume it could not do so directly. If the organization publishes religious papers that it can sell, that is all right; but the organization cannot take the church members' money and use it for the purpose of trying to elect a candidate or defeat a candidate, and they should not do so.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Would the Anti-Saloon League, for example, be prohibited from issuing pamphlets against a political candidate?

Mr. TAFT. As I understand, the league would probably receive contributions from individuals, and it would be like the PAC or any other organization which was organized for political purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Anti-Saloon League could use the dues paid by its membership to publish a pamphlet in behalf of a certain political candidate?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I must know the circumstances before I can pass upon the question. Different circumstances may arise in different cases. Any unincorporated organization can collect money from individuals for almost any purpose, and if the individuals who pay the money agree, the money can be used for purposes designated by the organization. There is no prohibition against using such money for political purposes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. My point is that all other organizations except corporations and labor unions can use the dues of their membership to publish any sort of pamphlet or publication on behalf of a candidate for public office.

Mr. TAFT. What kind of an organization does the Senator mean? Is it incorporated? Where does it obtain its money? All sorts of questions arise in every case, and I cannot answer without knowing the circumstances.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I said any organization but corporations and labor unions can do such things, but they are prohibited to those two organizations.

Mr. TAFT. Yes, that is correct, and if any abuses arise with respect to other organizations we can extend the provision of law to the other groups.

Mr. MURRAY and Mr. GREEN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, I do not yield further at this time.

The next provision which the conferees took from the House was the prohibition of strikes by Government employees. That was in the House bill and was not in the Senate bill. However, the Senate has repeatedly in a long series of appropriation bills enacted prohibitions against Government employees striking. They will be found in nearly every appropriation bill which was passed last year. The Senate has approved such prohibitions in each case. In that respect we have made it a permanent part of the law instead of having it tacked onto appropriation bills, so we do not feel that to be any departure from the action and approval of the Senate itself.

There is one further provision which may possibly be of interest, which was not in the Senate bill. The House had rather elaborate provisions prohibiting so-called feather-bedding practices and making them unlawful labor practices. The Senate conferees, while not approving of feather-bedding practices, felt that it was impracticable to give to a board or a court the power to say that so many men are all right, and so many men are too many. It would require a practical application of the law by the courts in hundreds of different industries, and a determination of facts which it seemed to me would be almost impossible. So we declined to adopt the provisions which are now in the Petrillo Act. After all, that statute applies to only one industry. Those provisions are now the subject of court procedure. Their constitutionality has been questioned. We thought that probably we had better wait and see what happened, in any event, even though we are in favor of prohibiting all feather-bedding practices. However, we did accept one provision which makes it an unlawful-labor practice for a union to accept money for people who do not work. That seemed to be a fairly clear case, easy to determine, and we accepted that additional unfair labor practice on the part of unions, which was not in the Senate bill.

Mr. President, I ask that there be printed in the RECORD at this point as a part of my remarks a summary in detail of the principal differences between the conference agreement and the bill which the Senate passed.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SHORT TITLE

The House bill provided that it was to be cited as the "Labor-Management Relations Act, 1947." The Senate amendment (sec. 504) provided that it was to be cited as the "Federal Labor Relations Act of 1947." The conference agreement adopts the title of the House bill.

DECLARATION OF POLICY

The House bill (sec. 1 (b)) contained an over-all declaration of policy covering all of the various matters dealt with in the bill. There was no corresponding over-all declaration of policy of the Senate amendment. The conference agreement contains the declaration of policy of the House bill, with one omission. One of the policies declared in the House bill was to encourage the peaceful settlement of labor disputes affecting commerce by giving the employees themselves a direct voice in the bargaining arrangements with their employers. Since under the conference agreement the provisions relating to a secret ballot on the employer's last offer of settlement (as will be hereafter explained) are not made mandatory, this particular item has been omitted from the over-all declaration of policy in the conference agreement.

TITLE I—AMENDMENT OF NATIONAL LABOR RELATIONS ACT

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment in Title I amended the National Labor Relations Act in numerous respects.

In amendment section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act (the policy thereof) the House bill omitted from the present law all of the so-called findings of fact which had been so severely criticized as being entirely one-sided. The Senate reenacted the findings and policies contained in section 1 of the National Labor Relations Act with a slight amendment so that the findings will not hereafter constitute an indictment of all employers. At the same time the Senate amendment inserted in the findings of fact a paragraph to the effect that experience has demonstrated that certain practices by labor organizations have the effect of burdening commerce through strikes and other forms of industrial unrest or through concerted activities which impair the interest of the public in the free flow of commerce. The Senate amendment further declared the elimination of such practices to be a necessary condition to the assurance of the rights herein guaranteed. Thus under the Senate amendment the findings and policies of the amended National Labor Relations Act are to be "two-sided." The conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment in this respect.

DEFINITIONS

Section 2 of the National Labor Relations Act contains definitions of the terms used therein. Both the House bill and the Senate amendment amended section 2.

(1) Person: In defining the term person, the House bill added labor organizations to the definition contained in existing law in order that there might be no question but that labor organizations were to be considered as persons within the meaning of the new amended act. The Senate amendment also added labor organizations to the definition of person, but included in addition thereto their officers and employees or members. Since officers, employees, and members of labor organizations are individuals, and the term "person" already is defined to include individuals, the conference committee deemed it unnecessary to include officers, employees, and members of labor organizations in specific terms, and thus the conference agreement adopts the definition of person contained in the House bill.

(2) Employer: In defining the term "employer" the House bill changed the definition of existing law in the following respects:

(A) Under existing law, "employer" is defined to include any person acting in the interest of an employer. The House bill changed this so as to include as an employer only persons acting as agents of an employer.

(B) The House bill excluded from the definition of employer instrumentalities of the United States.

(C) The House bill also excluded from the definition of employer all religious, charitable, scientific, and educational organizations not organized or operated for profit.

The Senate amendment changed the definition of "employer" contained in existing law in but two respects:

(A) The Senate amendment excluded from the definition of employer nonprofit corporations and associations operating hospitals.

(B) The Senate amendment also provided that for the purposes of section 9 (b) of the Labor Act (the section authorizing the Board to determine the appropriate collective bargaining unit) the term "employer" was not to include a group of employers unless they had voluntarily associated themselves together for the purposes of collective bargaining.

The conference agreement follows the provisions of the House bill in the matter of agency of an employer, and follows the Senate amendment in the matter of exclusion of nonprofit corporations and associations operating hospitals. The other nonprofit organizations excluded under the House bill are not excluded in the conference agreement. Only under exceptional circumstances and in connection with purely commercial activities have such organizations or their employees been considered as affecting commerce so as to bring them within the scope of the National Labor Relations Act. In the case of instrumentalities of the United States, the conference agreement limits the exclusion to wholly owned Government corporations and to Federal Reserve banks, the latter for the reason that such banks, by their issuance of currency and acting as fiscal agents of the Treasury, perform a vital governmental function. The treatment in the Senate amendment of the term "employer" for the purposes of section 9 (b) is omitted from the conference agreement.

(3) Employees: Although the House bill changed the definition of "employees", the definition adopted in the conference report follows the language of the Senate amendment except in two minor respects. The subsection of the Senate bill has amended the language of the Wagner Act relating to the exemption for "agricultural laborers" to read "persons employed in agriculture" and the bill had later contained a definition of the term "agriculture" which was precisely the same as the definition in the Fair Labor Standards Act. The House bill, however, had defined this exception in much broader terms by incorporating in the bill certain language in the Internal Revenue Code which would have exempted employees engaging in the packing and processing of agricultural products prior to their delivery to a terminal market. The conferees ultimately decided not to have any definition of agriculture in either bill. Thus subsection (3) in this respect now is identical with the language in the present Wagner Act. The conferees also adopted language in the House bill excluding from the definition of "employee" individuals having status of independent contractors. While the Board itself has never claimed that independent contractors were employees, the Supreme Court has (The Hearst Publications, Inc., 322 U. S. 111) held that the ordinary tests of the law of agency could be disregarded by the Board in determining if petty occupational groups were "employees" within the meaning of the Labor Relations Act. The Court consequently refused to consider the question whether certain categories of persons whom the Board had deemed to be "employees" might not, as a matter of law, have been independent contractors. The legal effect of the amendment therefore is merely to make it clear that the question whether or not a person is an employee is always a question of law, since the term is not meant to embrace persons outside that category under the general principles of the law of agency.

(8) Supervisors: Both the House bill and the Senate amendment excluded supervisors from the individuals deemed to be employees for the purposes of the act. There was a sharp divergence between the House and Senate, however, with respect to the occupational groups which fell within this definition. The Senate amendment, which the conference ultimately adopted, is limited to bona fide supervisors. The House, had included numerous other classes. There were generally (A) certain personnel who fix the amount of wages earned by other employees, such as inspectors, checkers, weighmasters, and time-study personnel (B) labor relations personnel, police, and claims personnel, and (C) confidential employees. The Senate amendment confined the definition of supervisor to individuals generally regarded as foremen and employees of like or higher rank.

In the case of persons working in labor relations personnel and employment divisions, it was not thought necessary to make specific provision, as was done in the House bill, since the Board had treated, and presumably will continue to treat, such persons as outside the scope of the act. This is the prevailing Board practice with respect to confidential secretaries as well, and it was not the intention of the conferees to alter this practice in any respect. The conference agreement does not treat time-study personnel or guards as supervisors, as did the House bill. Since, however, most time-study employees are professional personnel, the special provisions of the Senate amendment applicable with respect to professional employees will cover this category. In the case of guards, the conference agreement does not permit the certification of a labor organization as the bargaining representative of guards if it admits to membership, or is affiliated with any organization that admits to membership, employees other than guards. The provision dealing with the certification of bargaining units for guards is dealt with in section 9 (b) of the conference agreement, and the individuals who are to be considered as guards are described.

(9) Professional employees: The House bill did not contain any definition of the term "professional employees," although section 9 (f) (3) thereof recognized the principle embodied in section 9 (b) of the Senate amendment by permitting professional personnel to have voting units of their own in representation cases. The House agreed to the Senate language defining the term "professional employees."

(10) Agent: In the definition section of the conference agreement there is set forth a rule to be applied for the purpose of determining when a person is acting as an agent of another person, so as to make such other person responsible for his acts. A provision having the same effect was contained in section 12 of the House bill, under which the Norris-LaGuardia Act was made inapplicable in connection with certain activities dealt with in that section. Section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act provides that no employer or labor organization participating or interested in a labor dispute shall be held responsible for the unlawful acts of its agents except upon clear proof of actual authorization of the particular acts performed, or subsequent ratification thereof after knowledge. (Cf. United Brotherhood of Carpenters v. United States (— U. S. —; March 10, 1947)). Under the conference agreement, as under the House bill, both employers and labor organizations will be responsible for the acts of their agents in accordance with the common law rules of agency and the ordinary evidence required to establish such relationship.

National Labor Relations Board

One of the major problems with which the conferees were faced with was the reconciliation of the provisions of the House bill and the Senate amendments with respect to the reorganization of the National Labor Relations Board. Under the Senate amendment the present Board members were to be retained in office but four additional members were to be added, thus increasing the Board to seven. The House bill abolished the present Board, created a new Board of three members and limited the duties of the members to quasi-judicial functions. The House bill also created a new independent agency under an administrator to be appointed by the President (subject to Senate confirmation) to perform the investigating and prosecuting functions.

The conference agreement (section 3 (a)) retains the existing Board and increases its membership to five rather than seven. Further, it recognizes the principle of separating judicial and prosecuting functions without going to the extent of establishing a completely independent agency. It accomplishes separation of functions within the framework of the existing agency by establishing a new statutory office, that is, a general counsel of the Board to be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, for a term of 4 years. The general counsel is to have general supervision and direction of all attorneys employed by the Board (excluding the trial examiners and the legal assistants to the individual members of the Board), and of all the officers and employees in the Board's regional office. He is also to have the final authority to act in the name of, but independently of any direction, control, or review by, the Board in respect to the investigation of charges and the issuance of complaints of unfair labor practices and in the prosecution of such complaints before the Board. He is to have, in addition, such other duties as the Board may prescribe or as may be provided by law. By this provision, responsibility for what takes place in the Board's regional offices is centralized in one individual who is ultimately responsible to the President and Congress. The conferees rejected a provision in the House bill which required the regional directors and the regional attorneys to be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, in the belief that better administration will result in having responsibility lodged in one person who is responsible to the President and Congress rather than being diffused to numerous regional officials.

Section 4 of the conference agreement is substantially the language of the corresponding section in the Senate amendment. It provides that each member of the Board and general counsel shall receive a salary at the rate of $12,000 a year. It also contains a provision contained in both bills forbidding a Board to employ attorneys for the purpose of reviewing transcripts of hearings or reviewing drafts of hearings but permitting Board members to have legal assistants to assist them in such work. The House conferees agreed to include in the conference agreement that portion of the Senate amendment which provides that no trial examiner's report can be reviewed either before or after publication by any person other than a member of the Board or his legal assistant. It also forbids trial examiners to advise or consult with the Board with respect to exceptions taken to their findings, rulings, and recommendations. The combination of the provisions dealing with the authority of the general counsel, the abolition of the review division, and the limitation of duties of the trial examiners effectively limits the Board members to the performance of quasi-judicial functions.

Section 5 of the conference bill remains as in the present act.

Section 6 of the conference bill gives the Board general power to prescribe regulations necessary to carry out the provisions of the act. There was a similar provision in section 6 of the amended Labor Act in the House bill and also in the Senate amendment. The only change in this section from existing law is the insertion of the words "in the manner prescribed by the Administrative Procedure Act." This insertion appeared in the House bill, but not in the Senate amendment. It is made to assure that the subsequent amendment with the change of the National Labor Relations Act will not supersede the general rules prescribed in the Administrative Procedure Act which are now applicable to the Board's powers to promulgate regulations.

In section 7 of the conference bill there has been eliminated the first of the proposed changes contained in the House bill—that is, the language specifically excluding from the protection of section 7 unfair labor practices, unlawful concerted activities, and breaches of collective-bargaining agreements. The rejection of this clause by the conferees does not mean that concerted activities which are made unfair labor practices are lawful by reason of breaches of law, breaches of contract, or that their objectives should be deemed "protected activities" under the act. In the early period of the Board there had been decisions to the effect that the language of section 7 protected concerted activities, regardless of their nature or objectives. An outstanding decision of this sort was one involving a sit-down strike wherein the Board ordered the reinstatement of employees engaged in the unlawful activity. In another case the Board ordered certain seamen to be reinstated, although their concerted activities amounted to mutiny under another statute. In both of these instances, however, the decision of the Board was reversed by the Supreme Court (Fansteel Metallurgical Corp. v. NLRB, 306 U. S. 240; Southern Steamship Co. v. NLRB, 316 U. S. 31). The Supreme Court has also interpreted the statute as not conferring protection upon employees who strike in breach of contract (NLRB v. Sands Manufacturing Co., 306 U. S. 332).

Both the House bill and the Senate amendment preserved the right under section 7 of employees to self-organization to form, join, or assist any labor organization, and to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection. The House bill specifically set forth that employees were also to have the right to refrain from self-organization, etc., if they chose to do so.

In its most recent decisions the Board has been consistently applying the principles established by the Supreme Court. For example, in the American News Company case (55 NLRB 1302 (1944)), the Board held that employees had no right protected under the act to strike to compel an employer to violate the wage-stabilization laws. Again, in the Scullin Steel case and in the Dyson case (decided February 7, 1947), the Board held that strikes in violation of collective-bargaining contracts were not concerted activities protected by the act, and refused to reinstate employees discharged for engaging in such activities. In the second Thompson Products case (decided February 21, 1947), the Board held that strikes to compel the employer to violate the act and rulings of the Board thereunder were not concerted activities protected by the provisions of section 7. These recent decisions have had the effect of overruling the decision of the Board in Matter of Berkshire Knitting Mills (46 NLRB 955 (1943)), wherein the Board attempted to distinguish between what it considered as major crimes and minor crimes for the purpose of determining what employees were entitled to reinstatment.

By reason of the foregoing, it was believed that the specific provisions in the House bill excepting unfair labor practices, unlawful concerted activities, and violation of collective-bargaining agreements from the protection of section 7h were unnecessary. Moreover, there was a fear that the inclusion of such a provision might have a limited effect and make unlawful activities other than those specifically mentioned subject to the protection of the act. Other provisions of the conference agreement deal with this particular problem in general terms. For example, in the declaration of policy to the new National Labor Relations Act adopted by the conference committee, it is stated with reference to undesirable practices of labor organizations, their officers, and members, that the "elimination of such practices is a necessary condition to the assurance of the rights herein guaranteed." This demonstrates a clear intention that these undesirable concerted activities are not to have any protection under the act, and to the extent that the Board in the past has accorded protection to such activities, the conference agreement makes such protection no longer possible. Furthermore, in section 10 (c), as proposed in the conference agreement, it is specifically provided that no order of the Board shall require the reinstatment of any individual or the payment to him of any back pay if such individual was suspended or discharged for cause.

The second change made by the House bill in section 7 of the act (which is carried into the conference agreement) also has an important bearing on the kinds of concerted activities which are protected by section 7. That provision, as heretofore stated, provides that employees are also to have the right to refrain from concerted activities and collective bargaining if they choose to do so. Taken in conjunction with the provisions of section 8 (b) (1) of the conference agreement wherein it is made an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of rights guaranteed in section 7, many forms and varieties of concerted activities which the Board, particularly in the early days, regarded as protected by the act, will no longer be treated as having that protection.

Section 8 (a). This subsection contains the five unfair labor practices by employers. The language of the conference agreement is identical with the corresponding provisions in the Senate amendment since the Senate conference refused to yield to the House with respect to the provisions contained in the House bill amending the provisions in subsection 8 (2) relating to company-dominated unions and subsection 8 (5) relating to collective bargaining. This means that the five unfair labor practices contained in the present National Labor Relations Act remain unchanged except for the additional restrictions imposed upon agreements requiring union membership as condition of employment in the proviso to section 8 (a) (3).

When the bill passed the Senate it also contained a sixth paragraph in this subsection which made it an unfair labor practice for an employer to violate the terms of a collective-bargaining agreement or the terms of an agreement to submit a labor dispute to arbitration. The House conferees objected to this provision on the ground that it would have the effect of making the terms of every collective agreement subject to interpretation and determination by the Board, rather than by the courts. The Senate conferees ultimately agreed to its elimination as well as the deletion of a similar provision contained in subsection 8 (b) (5) of the Senate amendment which made it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization to violate the terms of collective-bargaining agreements. The provisions of the Senate amendment which conferred a right of action for damages upon a party aggrieved by breach of a collective-bargaining contract, however, were retained in the conference agreement (section 301). If both provisions had remained, there would have been a probable conflict of remedies and decisions.

Section 8 (b) contains the provisions of the conferees' agreement with respect to unfair labor practices by labor organizations or their agents. Paragraphs 1 (a) and 1 (b) relating to acts of restraint or coercion by labor organizations are identical with the paragraph dealing with the subject in the Senate amendment.

Paragraph (2), which makes it an unfair labor practice for a labor organization to cause or attempt to cause an employer to discriminate against employees, departs from the text of the corresponding paragraph in the Senate amendment in two respects. The original Senate language used the words "to persuade or attempt to persuade." The House conferees objected on the ground that it seemed inconsistent with the provisions guaranteeing all parties freedom of expression. The conferees clarified this language so that it reads "to cause or attempt to cause." The House managers also directed the attention of the Senate conferees to the fact that while the Senate bill forbade unions to discriminate against employees with respect of whom membership in a labor organization had been denied on some ground other than failure to pay dues and initiation fees it did not expressly forbid a union to attempt to bring about the discharge of an employee who is not covered by a valid compulsory membership agreement. Of course a discharge under such circumstances has been repeatedly held to be a violation of subsection 8 (3) of the present act by the Board, and since it was not the intent of the Senate to make unlawful coercion by a labor organization against employees covered by compulsory membership agreements and yet to tolerate attempts at discrimination against employee not so covered, the conferees agreed to the adoption of the phrase "in violation of subsection 8 (3)."

Subsection 8 (b) (3) is the same as 8 (a) (3) of the Senate amendment.

Subsection 8 (b) (4) relating to various kinds of boycotts and jurisdictional strikes is substantially the same as the corresponding language in the Senate amendment except that a strike or boycott to compel an employer or a self-employed person to join a labor or employer organization is also proscribed by this section. In the House bill such activities as well as a number of other kinds of concerted action, were made unlawful and excepted from the provisions of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. This meant that a private employer could secure direct injunctive relief against labor organizations or their agents engaging in such activities without complying with the provisions of that act. At the insistence of the Senate conferees the House managers agreed to eliminate these provisions from the conference report.

Subsection 8 (b) (5) relating to excessive initiation fees was not contained in the Senate amendment. In the House bill union initiation fees were among 10 provisions providing for certain rights and immunities of members of labor organizations against arbitrary action by the officers of a union to which they belonged. This was the so-called bill of rights subsection in the House bill. The Senate conferees refused to agree to the inclusion of this subsection in the conference agreement since they felt that it was unwise to authorize an agency of the Government to undertake such elaborate policing of the internal affairs of unions as this section contemplated without further study of the structure of unions. In the opinion of the Senate conferees the language which protected an employee from losing his job if a union expelled him for some reason other than nonpayment of dues and initiation fees, uniformly required of all members, was considered sufficient protection. In acceding to the wishes of the Senate conferees in this respect the House group did point out, however, that subsections 3 (a) (3) and 8 (b) (2) of the Senate amendment did not sufficiently deal with the situation in which unions wishing to continue a monopoly of certain trades might pass a resolution requiring all new members to pay exhorbitant initiation fees and thereby frustrate the intent of the Senate bill. The House bill limited initiation fees to $25 per member except where a greater amount was permitted by the Board. The Senate conferees were of the opinion that it was not practical to set a definite amount by law but were willing to accept the principle that where employment was conditioned upon membership in a labor organization exorbitant initiation fees should not be charged.

Consequently the conference agreement contains a new provision (subsec. 8 (b) (5)) making it an unfair labor practice to charge fees which the Labor Board finds excessive or discriminatory to employees covered by compulsory membership agreements. It also provides that in making such findings the Board shall have regard to the practices and customs of unions in particular industries and the pay received by the employees of whom the initiation fee is required.

Section 8 (b) (6) of the conference agreement covers a matter with which the House bill dealt extensively under the topic of featherbedding practices. There was no corresponding provision in the Senate amendment. The provisions in the House bill made unlawful and enjoinable any strike to compel an employer to accede to featherbedding practices. Among the activities defined as a featherbedding practice by the House bill were: (a) Agreeing to employ persons in excess of the number reasonably required, (b) paying money in lieu of employing such an excess number of persons, (c) paying more than once for services performed, (d) paying money for services not performed, and (e) paying a tax for the privilege of using certain articles or operating certain machines or agreeing to restrictions upon their use. While the Senate conferees were in sympathy with the objectives of this portion of the House bill, it seemed to them that it was almost impossible for courts to determine the exact number of men required in hundreds of industries and all kinds of functions. The provisions in the Lea Act from which the House language was taken are now awaiting determination by the Supreme Court, partly because of the problem arising from the term "in excess of the number of employees reasonably required." Therefore, the conferees were of the opinion that general legislation on the subject of featherbedding was not warranted at least until the joint study committee proposed by this bill could give full consideration to the matter. Since the matter of exacting money for services not to be performed borders definitely on extortion, the conferees agreed to the insertion of a paragraph (sec. 8 (b) (6)) which makes it an unfair labor practice to cause or attempt to cause employers to pay money under such circumstances.

Subsection (c) relating to the right of employers, employees, and labor organizations to express opinions and views freely conforms substantially with the language of subsection 8 (d) (1) of the House bill and is a substitute for section 8 (c) of the Senate amendment. The House conferees were of the opinion that the phrase "under all the circumstances" in the Senate amendment was ambiguous and might be susceptible of being construed as approving certain Board decisions which have attempted to circumscribe the right of free speech where there were also findings of unfair labor practices. Since this was certainly contrary to the intent of the Senate, as the accompanying report of the committee with respect to this subsection indicates, the Senate conferees acceded to the wish of the House group that the intent of this section be clarified.

Since the adoption of the conference agreement some inquiries have been received as to whether or not the guarantee of freedom of expression contained in this section is limited to expressions "which are not printed, graphic. * * *." These words are not words of limitation but were added in the House bill so as to make it clear that freedom of expression was not confined to oral utterances. The language of the report of the House committee makes it clear, moreover, that what the sponsors of the House bill had in mind were primarily oral utterances. There has also been some question raised with respect to the phrase "constitute or be evidence of an unfair labor practice." The purpose of this language is to make it clear that the Board is not to use any utterances containing threats or promises of benefit as either an unfair practice standing alone or as making some act which would otherwise not be an unfair labor practice, an unfair labor practice. It should be noted that this subsection is limited to "views, argument, or opinions" and does not cover instructions, directions, or other statements which might be deemed admissions under ordinary rules of evidence. In other words this section does not make incompetent, evidence which would ordinarily be deemed relevant and admissible in courts of law.

Section 8 (d) defines the term "to bargain collectively" and is substantially the same definition which appeared in the corresponding section of the Senate amendment. There is clarifying language providing that the 60 days' notice provisions should not be construed as requiring either party to discuss or agree to any modification of terms or conditions contained in a contract during the life of the contract and that the requirement of notice ceases to be applicable when the bargaining representative has lost its majority status. In adopting the language of the Senate bill, the conferees rejected a definition of collective bargaining which was contained in the House bill which required among other things the taking of a strike ballot in every strike.

Representatives and elections: Section 9 (a) relating to the definition of the exclusive representative and the rights of individual employees to present grievances is identical with section 9 (a) of the Senate amendment.

Section 9 (b) is also the same as section 9 (b) of the Senate amendment with the exception of an addition of a third clause relating to plant guards. As has been previously stated, the Senate rejected a provision in the House bill which would have excluded plant guards as employees protected by the act. The conferees on both sides, however, have been impressed with the reasoning of the Circuit Court of Appeals for the sixth circuit in the Jones and Laughlin case in which an order of the Board certifying as a bargaining representative of guards, the same union representing the production employees was set aside. Although this case was recently reversed by the Supreme Court on the ground that the Board had it within its power to make such a holding, four of the Justices agreed with the Circuit Court of Appeals holding that this was an abuse of the discretion permitted to the Board under the act. One of the members of the Board has also expressed this view in a number of dissenting opinions. Under the language of clause (3), guards still retain their rights as employees under the National Labor Relations Act, but the Board is instructed not to place them in the same bargaining unit with other employees, or to certify as bargaining representatives for the guards a union which admits other employees to membership or is affiliated directly or indirectly with labor organizations admitting employees other than guards to membership.

Subsection 9 (c) (1). The conference agreement is identical with corresponding section in the Senate amendment.

Subsection 9 (c) (2) of the conference agreement also follows the Senate amendment except in one minor respect, the provision which prevents the Board from denying a labor organization a place on the ballot by reason of an order not issued in conformity with section 10 (c). In the opinion of the Senate conferees the language of the Senate amendment which prevents the Board from continuing the present disparity of treatment with respect to independent unions was sufficient to accomplish the result now expressly spelled out by the conference agreement. Since the House conferees expressed some doubt on this question, however, the Senate conferees agreed to the insertion of this language.

Subsection 9 (c) (3) relating to the 12-month rule and run-offs in elections follows the language of the Senate amendment. With respect to the rights of strikers to vote, the Senate language read: "employees on strike who are not entitled to reinstatement shall not be eligible to vote unless such strike involves an unfair labor practice on the part of the employees." This clause provoked some controversy in conference as the House bill provided that unfair labor practice strikers would cease to be employees under the Wagner Act. The Senate refused to agree to the House method of dealing with unfair labor practice strikers. The decisions of the Board which treat unfair labor practice strikers and economic strikers differently does not rest on anything in the act but is simply a matter of determination by the Board. The effect of the Senate language, however, would have been to have written this policy into the statute. Since it was not the intent of the Senate conferees to approve the practice, they agreed to omit this clause. Thus the matter still rests within the discretion of the Board.

Subsection 9 (c) (4) relating to consent elections was in the Senate amendment but the House insisted upon the deletion of language which would have authorized prehearing elections.

Subsection 9 (c) (5) adopts the House amendment written to discourage the Board from finding a bargaining unit to be appropriate even though such unit was only a fragment of what would ordinarily be deemed appropriate, simply on the extent of organization theory.

Subsection 9 (d) of the conference agreement conforms to the Senate amendment. The House bill contained a provision which would have permitted judicial review of certifications even before the entry of an unfair labor practice order. In receding on their insistence on this portion, the House yielded to the view of the Senate conferees that such provision would permit dilatory tactics in representation proceedings.

Subsection 9 (e) (1), (2), and (3) relating to the elections necessary to authorize a union to bargain for a compulsory-membership agreement are substantially the same as the corresponding subsection in the Senate amendment except that the rule with respect to the appropriate showing has been changed from "a substantial number" to 30 percent, the figure contemplated by both bills. The House conferees receded from insisting upon a provision which would have required the secret ballot authorizing a union-shop contract to be taken only after the employer and labor organization had agreed upon a compulsory-membership contract.

Subsection 9 (f) and subsection 9 (g) requiring labor organizations as a condition precedent to being recognized as representatives under section 9 or being permitted to file charges under section 10 must file certain information with the Secretary of Labor and furnish certain financial reports to their members, differs from the corresponding subsections in the Senate amendment only with respect to paragraph (f) (6). This paragraph was adopted at the insistence of the House conferees after they had receded from their position of having the bill of rights section included. It requires that the information which the unions are to file shall also detail the provisions followed with respect to certain union matters affecting the rights of individual members.

Subsection 9 (h) of the conference agreement embodies the principle of an amendment adopted when the bill was being considered on the floor of the Senate which would have prevented a labor organization from being eligible for certification if any of its local, national, or international officers were members or affiliates of the Communist Party or believed in or supported organizations advocating the overthrow of the United States Government by force or any other illegal or unconstitutional method. There was a similar provision in the House bill, although the language was somewhat different. In reconciling the two provisions the conferees took into account the fact that representation proceedings might be indefinitely delayed if the Board was required to investigate the character of all the local and national officers as well as the character of the officers of the parent body or federation. The conference agreement provides that no certification shall be made or any complaint issued unless the labor organization in question submits affidavits executed by each of its officers and officers of its national or international body, to the effect that they are not members or affiliates of the Communist Party or any other proscribed organization. The penal provisions of section 35 (a) of the Criminal Code (U. S. C., title 18, sec. 80) are made applicable to the execution of such affidavits. This section of the code was amended by Congress so that it applies generally to representations made to induce action by an agency of the Government as well as the filing of false or fraudulent claims. Violations of this section are punishable by fines not in excess of $10,000 or prison sentences not in excess of 10 years.

Prevention of unfair labor practices: The existing law provides that the rules of evidence prevailing in courts of law or equity shall not be controlling in hearings before the Board, and in reviewing orders of the Board, the courts are bound by its findings as to the facts if supported by evidence. The House bill adopted a weight of evidence test in court review and provided that Board proceedings, so far as practicable, be conducted in accordance with the rules of evidence applicable in United States district courts. The Senate bill left unchanged the existing law with respect to the conduct of Board hearings, but gave additional authority to the courts in review of Board cases by providing that the Board findings must be supported by substantial evidence on the record considered as a whole to be conclusive. Widespread abuse of its latitude in admitting evidence was prevalent in the early history of the Board. It is the current practice of the Board in its hearings generally to follow the rules of evidence prevailing in the courts. Therefore, the Senate conferees were agreeable to the adoption of the House language with respect to the conduct of Board proceedings but insisted that the Senate rule on court review be accepted as the conference agreement.

The conference agreement adopted from the House bill a procedural provision providing that trial examiner's findings and recommended orders automatically become the orders of the Board within 20 days in the absence of exceptions being taken by any party. This device, in many cases, will expedite final determinations and reduce the work load of Board members and their legal assistants.

In all other respects, section 10, the enforcement section of the act, remains as in the Senate bill.

Investigatory powers: Section 11 authorizes the Board to conduct hearings and investigations and to subpena witnesses. This section was not changed in the Senate amendment and was modified by the conferees in only one respect. The Board is required upon application of any party to issue a subpena as a matter of course. A procedure is established whereby the person subpenaed may move to quash the subpena if the evidence requested thereby does not relate to any matter under investigation or does not describe with sufficient particularity the evidence required.

Section 12 of the conference agreement remains as in the Senate amendment and in the present act.

Limitations: Section 13 of the conference agreement remains as in the Senate amendment.

A new subsection has been added to section 14 to make it perfectly clear that nothing in the act is to be construed as authorizing compulsory union membership agreements, in States where the execution or enforcement of such agreements would be contrary to State law. Many States have enacted laws or adopted constitutional provisions to make all forms of compulsory unionism in such States illegal. As stated in the report accompanying the Senate committee bill, it was not the intent to deprive the States of such power. The conferees, therefore, had no objection to the adoption of the House provision to that effect.

Sections 15, 16, and 17 of the conference agreement remain as in the Senate amendment and none change existing law.

Effective dates: The Senate bill did not contain any postponed effective date. Realizing that the additional duties given to the Board as well as the numerous procedural changes required would necessitate the formulation of new rules and regulations and possible training of new personnel, the effective date of amendments to the National Labor Relations Act was made 60 days after enactment in section 104. In order that the additional Board members and the general counsel might immediately be appointed to share in formulating new rules and regulations, such authority may be exercised forthwith.

Consideration was given to excepting the provisions for compulsory union membership agreements from the postponed effective date. Here again, however, the Board would be ill prepared to process the many petitions for the vote required by section 9 (e). The conference agreement, therefore, provides that compulsory unionism agreements entered into during the 60-day period between enactment and effective dates may not be valid for longer than 1 year. In all other respects, sections 103 and 104 remain as in the Senate amendment.

TITLE II—CONCILIATION OF LABOR DISPUTES IN INDUSTRIES AFFECTING COMMERCE; NATIONAL EMERGENCIES

Title II of both the Senate and House bills contained provisions creating a new independent conciliation service, and provisions for the treatment of strikes affecting the national health or safety. Both provided for a Director appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to head the new service. The conference agreement, with few exceptions, follows the Senate amendment.

Under the House bill the new service was to be known as the Office of Conciliation, while the Senate called it the Federal Mediation Service. Under the conference agreement it is to be known as the Federal Mediation and Conciliation Service. The policy statement remains as in the Senate bill.

Section 203 of the Senate amendment provided that if the parties could not be brought to direct settlement by conciliation or mediation the Service was authorized to seek to induce the parties to submit the dispute to voluntary arbitration, with the United States contributing not to exceed $500 to the costs of arbitration. The conference agreement does not mention arbitration as such, but provides that if the parties cannot be brought to settlement by conciliation and mediation the Service shall seek to induce them voluntarily to seek other means of settlement without resort to strike or lock-out. The provision relating to Government contribution to the cost of arbitration has been omitted. In seeking to induce the parties to seek other means of settling the dispute, the Director has a duty to attempt to secure submission to the employees of the employer's last offer of settlement for refusal or rejection in a secret ballot. Such vote is not compulsory because the Senate conferees refused to accept the House provisions for mandatory strike votes in all cases.

The only change in section 204 of the Senate bill, stating the duties of the parties to a labor dispute, is the deletion of the language which indicated a duty to submit grievance disputes to arbitration.

Section 205, creating an advisory committee for the Service, remains as in the Senate amendment.

National emergencies: Sections 206 to 210 of the Senate bill, dealing with the problem of strikes imperiling the national health or safety, have not been substantially changed. The authority to appoint the board of inquiry and to determine subsequent action has been lodged in the President rather than the Attorney General, and the reports which the board of inquiry is to make are to include each party's statement of its position.

Section 210, giving to the Bureau of Labor Statistics the duty of collecting and maintaining a file of collective-bargaining agreements, remains as in the Senate amendment.

TITLE III—SUITS BY AND AGAINST LABOR ORGANIZATIONS

Section 301 differs from the Senate bill in two respects. Subsection (a) provides that suits for violation of contracts between labor organizations, as well as between a labor organization and an employer, may be brought in the Federal courts. Subsection (b) now provides that both employers and unions shall be bound by the acts of their agents and, as in the amendment to the National Labor Relations Act, the requirement that the agents' acts be actually authorized or subsequently ratified is not controlling.

Restrictions on payments to employee representatives: Employer contributions to union welfare funds were prohibited by the House bill. The Senate amendment restricting the operation and purposes of such funds was adopted by the conferees with some clarifying changes. A new provision has been added requiring that payments for the purpose of providing pensions or annuities must be paid into a separate trust set up for that exclusive purpose. The provision making joint control of the trust has been made inapplicable to funds established prior to January 1, 1946, and contributions to trust funds providing for pooled vacation benefits prior to January 1, 1947, are not prohibited.

Boycotts and other unlawful combinations: Section 303, relating to various kinds of boycotts and jurisdictional strikes, is substantially the same as the corresponding language in the Senate amendment, except that a strike or boycott to compel an employer or a self-employed person to join a labor or employer organization is also proscribed by this section.

Restrictions on political contributions: The House bill contained a provision making permanent the provisions which were contained in the War Labor Disputes Act whereby labor organizations were prohibited from making political contributions to the same extent as corporations. In addition, this section extended the prohibition, both in the case of corporations and labor organizations, to include expenditures as well as contributions. Moreover, expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections and political conventions were made unlawful to the same extent as those made in connection with the elections themselves. There was no comparable provision in the Senate amendment. The conference agreement in section 304 adopts the provisions of the House bill, with one change. Under the conference agreement, expenditures and contributions in connection with primary elections, political conventions, and caucuses are made unlawful to the same extent as those made in connection with the elections themselves. As a clarifying change, the definition of a labor organization has been set forth in full rather than incorporating the provision of the National Labor Relations Act.

Strikes by Government employees: The House bill made it unlawful for any employee of the United States to strike against the Government. Violations of this section were to be punishable by immediate discharge, forfeiture of all rights of reemployment, forfeiture of civil-service status, and forfeiture of all benefits which the individual had acquired by virtue of his Government employment. The conference agreement, in section 305, makes it unlawful for any individual employed by the United States or any agency thereof (including wholly owned Government corporations) to participate in any strike. Violations are to be punishable by immediate discharge and forfeiture of civil-service status, if any, and the individual is not to be eligible for employment by the United States for 3 years.

TITLE IV—CREATION OF JOINT COMMITTEE TO STUDY AND REPORT ON BASIC PROBLEMS AFFECTING FRIENDLY LABOR RELATIONS AND PRODUCTIVITY

Title IV of the conference agreement adopts the provisions of the Senate amendment, with one change. The committee is directed to make its final report not later than January 2, 1949.

TITLE V

Sections 501, 502, and 503 of the Senate amendment are contained in the conference agreement with the same section numbers.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, there are many minor provisions. We accepted the House provision with respect to freedom of speech. I think that is a provision which meets with general approval. Even Mr. William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor, was in favor of a free-speech provision for employers. We accepted the House provision, which was perhaps a little stronger than the Senate provision, but not substantially different in principle.

We accepted a provision regarding plant guards. We had exempted foremen in the Senate bill, but we had not exempted plant guards. The House bill exempted plant guards, and also time-study employees and personnel forces. We did not accept any of those provisions, except that as to plant guards we provided that they could have the protection of the Wagner Act only if they had a union separate and apart from the union of the general employees.

The conferees rejected the broad prohibition of all kinds of strikes. They rejected the repeal of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. The provisions regarding injunctions are exactly those which were in the Senate bill, and were approved by the Senate. The only strikes which are declared to be illegal are secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes. In such cases the injunction can be obtained only through the National Labor Relations Board. In that respect the House accepted entirely the provisions of the Senate bill.

Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer any specific questions. I do not believe that I need to go through the entire bill at this time.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. Does the provision to which the Senator just referred include language about exactions in connection with featherbedding?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. The Senator was speaking about subparagraph (6) of section 8, on page 8.

Mr. TAFT. That is correct. It makes it an unfair labor practice "to cause or attempt to cause an employer to pay or deliver or agree to pay or deliver any money or other thing of value, in the nature of an exaction, for services which are not performed or not to be performed."

Mr. PEPPER. The definition of "exact" in Webster's New International Dictionary, second edition, unabridged, is as follows:

> To demand or require authoritatively or peremptorily; to enforce the payment of or a yielding of; to compel to yield or furnish; hence to wrest, as a fee or reward when none is due.

Would it be an unfair labor practice for a group of women working in a textile mill to insist upon the employer giving them a rest period of 15 minutes each morning, and to be paid for that work period when they were not actually working?

Mr. TAFT. No; I do not think that is in the nature of an exaction.

Mr. PEPPER. Suppose they said they were going to strike if they did not get the rest period, and they therefore forced the employer to give it to them as a condition of continuing to work.

Mr. TAFT. They are paid for the work they do.

Mr. PEPPER. But they are paid for the 15 minutes when they are resting and not working.

Mr. TAFT. In my opinion that would not be a violation of this section.

Mr. PEPPER. There are contracts in force between a great many unions and employers under which, if a worker reports for work in the morning at the appointed time and finds that he is not going to be required to work that day, the employer must pay him for the day's work. Would insistence by a labor union upon payment of a day's pay to a worker who reported for work in the morning, when the employer gave him no work to do when he got there, be considered an exaction?

Mr. TAFT. No; I do not think that is in the nature of an exaction. He is paid for coming to work at the request of the employer. It is not in the nature of an exaction.

Mr. PEPPER. What I wanted to emphasize to the able Senator is that the language in the conference report is so broad that it would clearly include such a situation, because it is provided that it shall be an unfair labor practice to "cause or attempt to cause an employer to pay or deliver or agree to pay or deliver any money or other thing of value, in the nature of an exaction, for services which are not performed or not to be performed."

It seems to me that the language is broad enough to cover both the cases which I have mentioned, because they involve a demand that payment be made for time when actually no work was performed.

Mr. TAFT. I am sorry to disagree with the Senator, but it seems to me that it is perfectly clear what is intended. It is intended to make it an unfair labor practice for a man to say, "You must have 10 musicians, and if you insist that there is room for only 6, you must pay for the other 4 anyway." That is in the nature of an exaction from the employer for services which he does not want, does not need, and is not even willing to accept.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator further yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. In the paragraph immediately following the paragraph which we have been discussing, subparagraph (c) on page 8, the following language appears:

> (c) The expressing of any views, argument, or opinion, or the dissemination thereof, whether in written, printed, graphic, or visual form, shall not constitute or be evidence of an unfair labor practice under any of the provisions of this act, if such expression contains no threat of reprisal or force or promise of benefit.

Under that provision, if an employer were to say on Monday, "I hate labor unions, and I think they are a menace to this country", and if he fired a man on Thursday and the question was whether that man was fired for cause or fired because he was agitating for a union in the plant, would the statement made on Monday, in which the man said, "I think labor unions are a menace to this country" be admissible in evidence as bearing on the question of the reason for the discharge?

Mr. TAFT. All these questions involve a consideration of the surrounding circumstances. It would depend upon the facts. Under the facts generally stated by the Senator, I think that statement would not be evidence of any threat. There would have to be some other circumstances to tie in with the act of the employer. If the act of discharging is illegal and an unfair labor practice, consideration of such a statement would be proper. But it would not be proper to consider as evidence in such a case a speech which in itself contained no threat express or implied. That is the effect of the House language which we accepted.

Mr. PEPPER. If the Senator will permit, that is the point I want to emphasize——

Mr. TAFT. That is the effect of the House language.

Mr. PEPPER. That under the criminal law at the present time any statement a man may make prior to a given act which the court may try to evaluate may be admitted in evidence as having some relationship to his intentions. But the conference report deliberately excludes statements of that sort, unless the statement contains an actual threat, thereby depriving the Board of the full evidence in the case.

Mr. TAFT. So long as the Board has a statement of that kind the employer's mouth is practically shut. In case he makes a speech later on and is charged with some unfair or unlawful labor practice, and that can be considered in evidence, it means that he cannot afford to speak at all. Without that provision there is not freedom of speech. I say that is one thing that a man ought to have. He ought to have freedom of speech, and it seems to me we should put in the word "evidence."

Mr. President, I shall be glad to answer any questions as to any other changes in the bill. I think I might make the general statement that as to every controversial subject which was discussed by the Senate or which was in controversy in the Senate the conferees stood by the Senate versions, and those versions were accepted by the House conferees.

The other matters are matters of collateral interest and were not discussed, or were matters on which the Senate had not expressed itself.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. How much new matter was put into the bill in conference?

Mr. TAFT. I think I referred to the only two new matters; that is, striking by Government employees, and the one which we have just been discussing.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Those are the two important ones?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. There were three things which might be said to be new matters.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I think the question of State contracts was one; that is, making union contracts a condition of employment. I think that is new. There was a compromise in the House on language spelling it out.

Mr. TAFT. The Senate committee report stated on its face that State laws would still remain in effect. All we have done is to write in expressly what our committee report said.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to ask the Senator from Ohio a question. In two sessions of the Congress I have introduced a bill providing for the printing of the voting records of Senators and making them available to the people on the payment of their actual cost. The bill has gotten no place. It has not been reported. We are not going to permit a labor union to print the voting records of Senators. How are people to find out how we voted?

Mr. TAFT. Surely the Senator has something besides labor organizations in the State of Idaho. He must have other friends. Any individual friends of the Senator can publish the same thing. The question merely is whether in political campaigns we are going to permit labor unions or corporations to use funds which they have accumulated for some other purpose to elect or to defeat a presidential candidate.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. BALL. I do not think there is a single thing in the bill which prohibits any union or corporation or anyone else from printing any public official's voting record. That is not a campaign for or against a candidate. It is simply the printing of public information.

Mr. TAFT. I was thinking of the way most of the labor organizations are on record. They do not, as a rule, merely print facts.

Mr. BALL. The Senator was thinking of the PAC?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield further?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should like to return to the question, because I think it is important. Take the matter of a radio program sponsored by either a union or a corporation. I think the AFL or the CIO, one or the other, has a news commentator who comments on the news. Could he comment on political candidates favorably or unfavorably?

Mr. TAFT. If the General Motors Corp. had a man speaking on the radio every week to advocate the election of a Republican or a Democratic Presidential candidate, the corporation ought to be punished, and it would be punished under the law. Labor organizations should be subject to the same rule.

Mr. TAYLOR. That is altogether different. It is a more subtle thing. When a commentator is broadcasting the news every day he can do a lot more good or harm to a man by coloring his broadcast and presenting it in the guise of a news commentary than he could openly.

Mr. TAFT. The Senator is right. It is a question of fact which would have to be raised in every case. Is it a contribution to a candidate or is it not? Possibly a knock is a boost sometimes. That argument might well be made by a person who was taking part in an election.

Mr. TAYLOR. I should be happy to have him mention my name at any time, in any capacity, good or bad. There will be some very fine definitions required. I am afraid we shall wind up with our radio commentators absolutely hamstrung if they are sponsored by anyone.

Mr. MAGNUSON and Mr. BARKLEY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILEY in the chair). Does the Senator yield; and if so, to whom?

Mr. TAFT. I yield first to the Senator from Washington.

Mr. MAGNUSON. I understood, when I asked the Senator whether or not there was any new matter placed in the bill in conference, that there were three points. Do I correctly understand that those were in the House bill?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. MAGNUSON. There was no absolutely new matter? What may be new to the Senate bill was in the House bill, is that correct?

Mr. TAFT. Yes. There is nothing new. We changed the provision regarding Communist officers. The Senate adopted an amendment which provided that no union could be certified if any of its officers were Communists. That seemed to us impracticable. With the agreement of all the conferees we provided that the union must file an affidavit that none of its officers are Communists, or whatever the language may be. Otherwise, the way it was passed by the Senate, the whole certification might be tied up for months while determination was made as to whether a man was a Communist. Today it is provided that officers shall file statements to the effect that they are not Communists. If a man who files such a statement tells an untruth he is subject to the same statute under which Marzani was convicted last week. That seemed a fair modification to make, although it was not in the House bill. But there is no provision as to that subject that was not in one bill or the other.

Mr. MAGNUSON. The Senator's contention is that whatever is in the conference report was either in the House bill or the Senate bill?

Mr. TAFT. Yes.

Mr. KILGORE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield to the Senator from West Virginia.

Mr. KILGORE. Getting back to the subject of radio broadcasting about which we have been talking, I note that the bill uses the words "employer associations," "corporations," and "national banks." I am wondering if an association such as the National Manufacturers' Association, the National Coal Association, or the Association of American Railroads, could sponsor radio broadcasts or advertise in a political way on behalf of a political program. All advertising of that nature is not necessarily for a candidate. It may be for the platform of a party, or something of that nature.

Mr. TAFT. The question is, again, a question of fact. We have had a law against contributions by corporations for years.

Mr. KILGORE. I realize that.

Mr. TAFT. The question as to whether it is in connection with an election I suppose depends on how close it is to the election; how closely it is tied in with something which is a direct issue of the election. It is a question of fact in each case. We did not change the law in that respect.

Mr. KILGORE. I fear I did not make my question clear. Organizations such as, let us say, the National Coal Association, the National Association of Manufacturers, and other similar organizations are not corporations. It is true that they have both individual and corporate members.

Mr. TAFT. When that question was asked here before, I answered it by saying that if an association of manufacturers accepts contributions from corporations and others that violate the laws by making contributions for political purposes, I think it will be an accessory with those corporations and will be liable under the act. I stated that before as my opinion.

Mr. KILGORE. I know the Senator from Ohio did. But suppose the association makes annual assessments on each member, be he either an individual or a corporation, and sponsors a radio program of the sort we are discussing.

Mr. TAFT. I still think that would be the use of funds for political purposes; that would be contributing and assisting in that general result.

Mr. KILGORE. Of course, that was the opinion of the committee.

Mr. TAFT. Yes; and it is my opinion. The same thing is true, let us say, of the PAC, if the PAC collects funds from labor unions, rather than from individuals.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes.

Mr. TAFT. The PAC has ordinarily collected its funds from individuals.

Mr. KILGORE. Yes.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. PEPPER. I wish to ask the Senator from Ohio whether he agrees with the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. BALL], who just expressed the opinion that if a labor organization used its funds to disseminate the voting record of a candidate for office, during the time of the campaign, that would not be unlawful. Does the Senator from Ohio agree with the Senator from Minnesota that that would not be unlawful, because it would not be an expenditure in connection with an election in which certain candidates or political parties are involved?

Mr. TAFT. I think it would depend upon all the circumstances in the case. If it was merely a bare statement of actual facts and simply direct quotations of what the man had said in the course of certain speeches on certain subjects, and was not colored in any way, I would rather agree with the Senator from Minnesota. But I think it would depend, in each case, on the character of the publication.

Mr. PEPPER. Of course, the language is "in connection with." The provision does not contain any statement as to whether the statement is colored or not. The words simply are "any expenditure in connection with an election." I do not see how the Senator could say that the publication of a voting record, in the midst of a campaign, was not an expenditure in the midst of an election.

Mr. TAFT. That is not a very practical question, because no one would do just that. Either it is an argument for him or against him, or it is not.

Mr. MURRAY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. TAFT. I yield.

Mr. MURRAY. I should like to inquire what would be the situation in a case in which an industrial organization has a chain of newspapers which obviously are operated for political purposes, and which have a deficit at the end of each year, which is made up by the corporation, the newspapers being used for purposes of advancing the political interests of the corporation, influencing elections, and advocating the election of certain favored candidates. What would be the situation in such a case, under this provision of the bill we have been considering?

Mr. TAFT. I think that corporation had better be careful. It is a more difficult case to prove, as the Senator realizes, because the contribution is indirect. But if I were an attorney for such a corporation, I would advise that corporation to be very careful, and that it might very easily be found to be violating the law.

Mr. MURRAY. Of course these corporations are very well versed in the legalities, and generally they organize such newspapers as separate independent corporations. So it is very difficult to discover just who is operating them, what their expenditures are and where their financial support comes from.

For instance, I made inquiry from the Securities and Exchange Commission in an attempt to discover the status of a great string of newspapers in my State. I wished to learn where the money comes from for their operation and how it is expended and who pays the deficiency. But I could not get any information from that source. It will be very difficult to discover what the real situation is in such cases.

Yet great corporations can operate in that manner, whereas a labor union publishing a newspaper, will not under this bill be able to carry any information to its members in connection with the elections, either by printing the records of the candidates or advocating the election of certain candidates.

Mr. TAFT. Those are questions which may be difficult of proof, just as it may be difficult to prove who may be paying the deficits of the Daily Worker. Those things are always defects in any law. But I think if they were actually pinned down and proved, they probably would be found to be violations of the law. That would be my impression.

Mr. MURRAY. But of course it is obvious that the unions would be at a great disadvantage under this bill, because these large corporations can control all the weekly newspapers throughout a State, by placing lucrative advertisements with them. That is a practice in Montana and many other States. The corporations can give contracts for advertising purposes to all the weekly newspapers, and thus can have their support in the elections and in the campaigns involving economic issues. Under this provision, the unions will be entirely confined to publishing newspapers that do not carry any information or propaganda advancing their interests.

Mr. TAFT. Probably the Senator from Montana saw that the American Federation of Labor has announced the spending of $1,500,000. So it is not wholly without funds to advertise in opposition to the measure which is now before the Senate.

So apparently large sums of money are available on both sides.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the conference report on House bill 3020.

Mr. MORSE obtained the floor.

Mr. MAGNUSON. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will yield to me, I should like to make a brief statement on the point which has just been under discussion. Much has been said to the effect that the purpose of this measure is to equalize the opportunities of corporations and labor unions. The provision we now are considering makes the situation entirely unequal, as the Senator from Montana has pointed out. As he has stated, a string of newspapers is operated in his State, and most of them operate at a deficit. In many cases the deficit is made up by a large corporation that is up to its ears in politics all the time. Those newspapers can be published for 365 days a year and can be absolutely under the direct control of that large corporation, and can make deprecatory statements about the candidates for public office, and can do so as much as they wish to do, whereas the union, which obtains its funds only from dues paid by the union members, will not be able to engage in such activities. Of course, the union could obtain voluntary contributions for that purpose, but it is very difficult to operate a newspaper day in and day out on the basis of voluntary contributions. So in such a case the unions will be penalized, and so will similar organizations which collect their money from dues. A labor organization presumably is a collection of individuals for nonprofit purposes, whereas a corporation is set up for profit, and we have always considered the two to be different.

Let us consider the National Grange, for instance. I do not think it should be denied this privilege. It obtains its funds by means of the collection of dues. The National Grange or the national cooperatives or any other national organizations which obtain their funds by means of the payment of dues will be able to use those dues to put out all the political propaganda they wish to put out, whereas a labor union, which also is a collection of individuals, presumably for nonprofit purposes, will not be able to do so.

Thus we see that in this case the pendulum has swung too far the other way. I do not deny that in some cases it is necessary to equalize the two relative positions, but surely this proposal is a blow against the right of labor-union members to express their will through their own voluntary organization. It will be practically impossible for labor-union members to do so, whereas the corporations will be able to do so by various means, and they have done so in times past.

If this measure becomes law, it will mean that the voices of corporations in politics in the United States will be far stronger than the voices of labor unions. In itself, that is sufficient basis for a veto of this measure.

Mr. MORSE. I thank the Senator from Washington [Mr. MAGNUSON] for his excellent contribution to this debate. I agree with him completely. I can well imagine why the politicians who are so strong for this bill want to prevent labor unions from participating in political campaigns. However, such attempts to weaken the political strength of labor will only serve to make the workers of this country more convinced than ever that they must take a very active part in politics if they are to protect their rights and freedoms.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield to me for a moment, let me say that the provisions of this measure overlook the essential differences between corporations and labor unions. A corporation is a person, but is not a citizen, under the laws of the United States. A corporation is entitled to the protection of its property, but it cannot vote, because it is not a citizen, in the sense that a person is a citizen. A labor union is not a corporation, it is simply an unincorporated association of people. In legal character, it is no different from a lodge, or a church, or the WCTU, or any other organization of human beings who get together to further their common good. Therefore, when labor unions are working together, through their own instrumentalities, they are simply working for the furtherance of the welfare of citizens of this country; and citizens were not created to make money. That is the reason why corporations are created.

I should just like to have leave to quote, as I quoted once before, what the late Chief Justice Taft said about labor unions:

> Labor unions are recognized by the Clayton Act as legal when instituted for mutual help and lawfully carrying out their legitimate objects. They have long been thus recognized by the courts. They were organized out of the necessities of the situation. A single employee was helpless in dealing with an employer. He was dependent ordinarily on his daily wage for the maintenance of himself and family. If the employer refused to pay him the wages that he thought fair, he was, nevertheless, unable to leave the employ and to resist arbitrary and unfair treatment. Union was essential to give laborers opportunity to deal on equality with their employer. They united to exert influence upon him and to leave him in a body in order by this inconvenience to induce him to make better terms with them. They were withholding their labor of economic value to make him pay what they thought it was worth. The right to combine for such a lawful purpose has in many years not been denied by any court.

Mr. President, this prohibition, therefore, is denying to citizens of this Nation the right of free press, the right of free speech, the right of disseminating information of public value. It is a chain upon the citizens' activity, and we well know that these labor organizations are composed of working people. They do not have people who are their members who can contribute hundreds of thousands or millions of dollars to political campaigns. They have to do it collectively. So they are denied the privilege of collective expression in political campaigns and are being discriminated against in favor of the corporations of the country.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Florida [Mr. PEPPER] is right in what he says. This bill is a device for making unions so weak that they cannot carry on effective collective bargaining.

Mr. President, I wish to now set forth my major reasons for opposing the conference report. I shall prefer, in the interest of both time and continuity of my remarks, that I not be interrupted until I have finished my major discussion, and then I shall be glad to answer questions on my remarks.

There has been considerable talk, Mr. President, on the floor and in the cloakrooms about pressure that has been put on Members of the Senate to vote for or against the labor bill pending before the Senate. Of course, that is no new experience for any of us. Let me say that the pressure does not come from only one side on this matter. I can well testify to that, because I have been in the position where I have been receiving it from both labor and employer groups.

From the very beginning of this historic debate on labor legislation, as the President knows, I have held to the point of view that some major legislation should be passed by the present session of Congress. I think I have made a substantial contribution to this problem of labor legislation in the form of the legislation I introduced, particularly in respect to basic amendments of the Wagner Act. I am not going to go into the points I have raised in a series of speeches which I have heretofore given on the floor of the Senate during the present session setting forth my views as to the type of labor legislation that should be passed and the form in which it should be passed. I will simply mention here that if anyone wants a rather full view of my position on labor legislation, he must refer to my many speeches on the subject. Suffice for this speech I shall just refer to my other speeches by way of incorporating them in this speech by reference. When I proposed some of my labor bills I was bitterly criticized by some labor elements in this country, and I am still criticized by them. However, I think they well know that their criticism does not bother me a bit. They are welcome to keep right on criticizing me, as can any other group in the country, because I intend, so long as I am in the Senate, to propose those things which I think are sound and stand for those things, irrespective of the source of any criticism that may be heaped on my shoulders in regard to my proposals for legislation on any subject that I think is sound legislation. I say again to labor this afternoon that I think it of great importance to the public welfare as well as to the long time interest of American labor and industry and consumers generally, that the Wagner Act should be modified in those respects which I have heretofore proposed in the legislation which I have offered in this body.

I have been criticized also, Mr. President, by employer groups because they thought my legislation did not go far enough. In view of the fact that I found myself being criticized both by labor and by industry, I felt that maybe perchance I might be right, I might be taking the position that the Senate itself ought to take—a pretty sound middle-of-the-road course that would represent constructive, progressive advancement in the field of labor legislation.

But I was a little surprised at the type of communications I received. Mr. President, I was as much surprised as the Senator from California was surprised at the type of communications he read into the RECORD yesterday afternoon, showing certain techniques, as he pointed out, that labor was seeking to bring to bear upon him for a vote against the conference report and a vote in support of a veto, should a veto be handed down by the President. I, too, was a little surprised at what I received, Mr. President. I do not know of labor using exactly the type of pressure on me which the Senator from California [Mr. KNOWLAND] referred to in his remarks yesterday, but it is probably because of my innocence as to the source of some of the pressure. But I do want to say that I was a little bit surprised at the type of pressure the United States Chamber of Commerce has been using on me. I have a very good sense of humor about it, too. If I were a wealthy man and politically ambitious, I should like to contribute to the United States Chamber of Commerce at least some expense money in support of the type of pressure that has flowed from some of their activities. During the last couple of weeks they have had out in my State, Mr. President, a very jovial and, I believe, a very able and very nice fellow, who has been making the rounds of the chambers of commerce of my State and putting the so-called "political heat" on me. The newspaper accounts of his speeches are very interesting. Of course, I do not want to bind him by what the newspapers say, but these reports have come now from so many sources over so many days that I think the presumption is that he has been saying something about to the effect of what I shall now read. I read from the Capital Journal, of the capital city of my State, the issue of May 21, an interesting little story with the headline "Pressure on Senator MORSE for labor bill vote urged":

> Members of the chamber of commerce who listened Tuesday afternoon to a talk by Jacob D. Allen, national affairs adviser for the Chamber of Commerce of the United States, were advised to exert some pressure on Senator WAYNE MORSE in an effort to get him to bow to the majority relative to labor bills that have passed both Houses of Congress and are now in conference.
> Allen had much to say in praise of MORSE—

I am afraid though, from the reports I have received from friends, that it was faint praise, Mr. President—> but described him as crosswise in bed with the majority of his own party and even with half his colleagues in the Democratic Party.

>
> "He should," he said, "follow the example of IVES and others who fought the legislation shoulder to shoulder with him, and now bow to the majority."
>
> Allen said that in a recent talk with Senator TAFT, the Republican leader told him that "should the President veto the labor bill the matter of politics would become an essential element, and many Democrats might change their votes to sustain his veto.
> "TAFT felt that if MORSE were to reverse his stand it would break the backbone of the PEPPERS in Congress."

This Mr. Allen, as spokesman for the United States Chamber of Commerce, made similar statements over my State for several days. In my home town he suggested to the chamber of commerce that they send up a prayer that I see the light and vote for this labor bill. I was reverently moved when I heard that the United States Chamber of Commerce was praying for my political well-being. I know they are after my political scalp. It will be a good fight. However, Mr. Allen's prayerful interest in me at least succeeded in stirring up a great many telegrams which were sent to me urging that I vote for this labor bill.

Mr. TAFT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. TAFT. Does this article purport to quote me to that effect?

Mr. MORSE. Oh, yes; it is in quotation marks.

Mr. TAFT. I enter my denial now, for the sake of the record.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator from Ohio does not need to enter his denial. In fact, I was just waiting for the Senator to make a comment, because I want the record to be made perfectly clear that although the Senator from Ohio and I have our differences over the merits of issues, we do not have any differences when it comes to personal dealings with each other. I want to say to the Senator from Ohio that I have always received from him the finest of personal and professional dealing, and he does not have to tell me that he was misquoted in this newspaper account of what the United States Chamber of Commerce spokesman is reported to have said. But I want to make the quotation a matter of record, because it is the type of thing that I am subjected to, and it is the type of thing that the Senator from Ohio is subjected to from other sources. However, it is that type of representation which has stirred up the many critical telegrams which I have received from businessmen in my State as this United States Chamber of Commerce spokesman has traveled up and down my State criticizing me and praying for me at the same time.

I think that one of the regrettable things about this whole program of political pressure which has faced the Congress so far as the adoption of labor legislation is concerned is that battle lines of propaganda have been drawn from the very beginning of our debate on labor legislation.

On the one hand we find great groups representing employers, such as the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers and other employer associations, propagandizing the people of the country for months with regard to labor legislation, to such an extent that in my judgment they have really whipped up an emotional state of mind on the part of millions of our people. Our people are now talking in terms of emotional sanctions. It is a hysterical response. They are asking for drastic, punitive action, and when they are asked whether or not they know anything about the details of the legislation for which they ask us to vote, they confess that they do not, but state that there must be something done.

These great antilabor employer associations and organizations say certain false things in advertisements in our newspapers, and the people come to believe them because they do not read any denials of them. That is an interesting technique. It is a Fascist technique and a Communist technique. Repeat misrepresentations often enough and people will accept them as true.

Mr. BALL. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MORSE. I yield.

Mr. BALL. Has the Senator read some of the full-page and half-page advertisements of labor organizations such as the AFL?

Mr. MORSE. Yes. If the Senator will be patient for a few minutes, I will take them apart, too.

Mr. BALL. They bear very little relation to the facts, as I have read them.

Mr. MORSE. The Senator is right when he says some of the union ads have not presented all of the facts. I am trying to balance the scales in this criticism of mine. Of course the millions of dollars spent by employers to spread falsehood and propaganda is what has poisoned public opinion.

The advertisements which have been published by employer representatives involve the Communist and Fascist technique—statements of half truths. It is the technique of omitting relevant facts which ought to be placed in the advertisements in order to give a true picture of the problem which is being discussed.

As the Senator from Minnesota has so correctly pointed out, when we pick up the advertisements of the labor organizations and read their propaganda, we frequently find more propaganda which falls into the same errors which characterize the type of propaganda and the techniques used by the United States Chamber of Commerce and the National Association of Manufacturers.

As I see it, these two great economic forces, management and labor, have girded themselves for battle. We have an economic war ahead of us. We are to have a test of economic strength.

One of the reasons why I oppose this bill is that, in my judgment, an attempt is being made so to change the law that it will not carry out the principles of equality in collective bargaining for which I have pleaded in this session of Congress. One of the objections I shall make is that I believe that the bill will not result in a fair equalizing of the rights of labor and management. Management under this bill will be given such an advantage over labor that it can prevent effective collective bargaining by unions. I want to see those rights equalized. I am such a firm believer in government by law rather than by men that I do not want to see legislation enacted which in many cases will force a test of defiance of law because enforcement of it would result in great injustices. When a large body of people believe that a law is unjust, they are going to exert the basic, fundamental right which exists in a free society to oppose the administration of such a law.

That will not produce labor harmony. I do not condone such noncompliance with law but I cannot ignore the fact that human beings will resist the enforcement of unjust laws.

Mr. President, I believe that all of us, on both sides of this issue, must rise above political pressure and propaganda, and make it very clear to management and labor that our duty in the Congress of the United States is to vote on the merits of these questions as we see them, and that we have no intention of yielding to political pressure. I am sure that such is the attitude of my opponents on this question, and I know that it is my attitude and that of my associates on the side opposed to the conference report.

Let me cite a typical telegram urging me to yield to the majority on this issue. I have received many from businessmen in Oregon. This one is more kind than most of the others. Nevertheless it shows the effect of the type of propaganda which I have been discussing. It is a telegram from a very dear friend, one of the outstanding industrialists in my State. He is very much disturbed because I am going to vote against the conference report, and because I am going to vote to sustain a veto if a veto is handed down. Senators can see what is bothering him when he writes as follows:

I hope, WAYNE, that you will be able to vote favorably upon the conference-reported labor bill. I recognize with you the weak spots in this legislation, and I too am sorry that your arguments before the Senate were not fully supported. However, I am convinced after checking with many people in various fields, including farmers, laboring men, and employers in Oregon, that the people of your State want this legislation passed, rather than lose corrective legislation at this immediate session. I hope you will recognize what I am sure is the desire of your constituents in this matter. Regards.

There is not a more sincere or finer employer in the State of Oregon than is the sender of that telegram. I think I know what has happened. It has happened to hundreds of my friends within the employing class in my State. They have the notion that unless we pass this legislation we shall not have any legislation at all in this session of Congress. But I say, Mr. President, that such need not be true. We can vote down this conference report, or, if it is agreed to, we can vote to sustain a veto if a veto is handed down; and there is still ample time by August 1 to pass fair and constructive legislation. So I do not accept the premise that it is this bill or not any. There is another premise which I do not accept, and that is that it is my obligation or my responsibility to sit here and vote in accordance with what I think a majority of my constituents want at this time. I just do not accept that principle of representation in the Senate of the United States.

Therefore I replied to the sender of that telegram as follows:

Thank you for your wire. Deeply regret that I cannot vote for conference report bill. I am satisfied that it is unsound legislation in its present form. However, if I knew that every person in the State of Oregon wanted the bill passed, I would still vote against it because my obligation in this job is to vote for what I consider to be sound legislation in the public interest and not for legislation which a temporary majority may think it wants when you and I know that a majority of the people of Oregon have not analyzed the weaknesses and limitations of this legislation. I can assure you that it is not an easy decision for me to make because I agree with you that undoubtedly a majority of my constituents think they want this legislation. However, what they really want is legislation which will check the major labor abuses and bring about a maximum degree of industrial peace. Unfortunately this legislation will not accomplish those objectives and hence I cannot and will not vote for it.

Regards.

Mr. President, it is not at all pleasant, it is not at all politically comfortable, to find oneself in a position in which he is satisfied that the majority of the people of his State have been so propagandized with regard to a piece of bad legislation that they really believe it is the piece of legislation that should be passed.

On the other hand, as I read the constitutional debates on the basis of which this Government came into being it was not contemplated that under a representative form of government a man in the Senate of the United States should vote in accordance with the dictates of a majority as determined by a Gallup poll or some other method of determining a temporary majority opinion. Rather, the basic theory of representative government requires a Senator to assume the solemn obligation, intended by the founding fathers, and vote for legislation which he believes to be in the public interest, even though he knows that as of that moment a majority of his constituents would vote contrary to his judgment. Then it is his obligation of political leadership to stand up and tell his constituents why he took the action which he did. If his reasons are not satisfactory to them then it is their opportunity and privilege to remove him from his seat at the next election. I think the people of my State want me to represent them by exercising an honest independence of judgment on the merits of issues as I find them back here. They want me to weigh the views of those constituents who write and wire to me, but cast my votes free of political pressures and unmoved by threats of loss of political support if I do not do the bidding of some pressure groups.

It is only on the basis of that principle of representative government, Mr. President, may I say from this platform today to the people of my State, that I desire to remain in the Senate of the United States. It was on the basis of that principle that I ran for this office and the people of Oregon elected me on the basis of that abstract principle. I believe they will keep me here to apply it. If we cannot exercise that type of independence of judgment in representing the people of our States, then I want to say that I do not desire to serve in the Senate of the United States if I have to serve subject to yielding to the type of pressures that management and labor groups are seeking to bring to bear upon the Members of the Senate for votes on this labor bill. I have a hunch, Mr. President, that after the present wave of emotion passes and after the people of my State come to see in actual operation the effects of such legislation as is now being proposed, if it is placed on the statute books, a large majority of them will come to thank me for exercising the independence of judgment which I intend to exercise in casting my vote against this bill.

I shall vote against the bill that has been reported by the conference committee because, after careful study, I am completely convinced that the amendments added in conference make it an impracticable and unadministrable law. Virtually every amendment which has been made threatens the legitimate rights of the American workingman; the net effect is to discourage and stifle collective bargaining and to impede, if not make impossible, effective enforcement of the National Labor Relations Act.

I supported the Senate committee bill, which was a fair, reasonable, constructive, and enforceable bill, and I opposed the amendments that were made on the floor of the Senate because they seemed to me to strike serious blows at the rights of labor and to impair the efficient administration of the law. The amendments which have been made in conference not only infinitely aggravate and multiply every serious vice of the Senate amendments but they add such restrictive and administratively unfeasible provisions of their own that even if I believed the bill we passed was sound and helpful, I would be compelled to vote against the conference bill, because of the inevitably disastrous effects I am sure it will have on industrial peace in this country. I say with every emphasis at my command that this bill will be causative, not preventive, of labor difficulties.

Before discussing the reasons why I believe this will be its consequence, I must say that it is difficult for me to understand how anyone who has studied this conference committee bill and understands labor relations at the plant level can contend that the essential principles of the Senate bill have in no way been impaired. It is true, of course, that certain glaring but much discussed injustices were not added to the bill. But I am unable to believe, as we are told, that merely minor changes were made in conference; that no important matter of principle was sacrified or surrendered; and that the essence of the Senate bill has been retained except for chipping here, some patching there.

Many of the changes made by the confereees may be termed procedural, rather than substantive. But as I have frequently stated, it is virtually impossible to separate procedure from substance, especially in the field of labor relations.

I want to repeat that now, because it is so basic to the protection of our rights.

The so-called procedural changes that have been made have a total effect more harmful to sound labor relations than would have been the effect of several of the substantive proposals rejected on the floor of the Senate and by the conferees. Hence it is necessary to consider the technical procedural amendments made to the Wagner Act in order to make a proper appraisal of the conference bill.

I pause at that point to reemphasize it, Mr. President. I say, again, that we cannot separate procedural rights from substantive rights. Let me control the procedure of an agency, a tribunal, or a body, and I will control the substantive rights administered by that body.

The bill has been loaded with provisions which make it a Pandora's box of vexatious litigation that can and will harass and weaken unions. Under the bill as amended, every organizational drive by unions, every effort to achieve collective bargaining, and every strike could be met and defeated by destructive lawsuits in the courts, and hundreds of unfair labor practice charges by malcontent employees before the Board. I cannot emphasize too strongly that any legislation that invites and encourages litigation over labor relations is not going to solve our problems of labor unrest or be conducive to harmonious relations between employers and employees. This bill is full of mischievous provisions of that kind, all of them added or their effects aggravated in conference.

Take, for example, in this connection, the so-called minor changes to be found in the definition of the term "agent," set forth in section 2 (13) of the conference committee bill, and in the amendment to section 7, dealing with the rights of employees. On their face they do seem innocuous and uninjurious to legitimate rights of labor. The amendment contained in section 2 (13) provides that in determining whether a person is acting as an agent of another person for purposes of responsibility under the statute, the question of whether the specific acts performed were actually authorized or subsequently ratified should not be controlling. The amendment to section 7 provides, innocently enough, that the employees shall also have the right to refrain from joining a union or from engaging in concerted activities for collective bargaining.

These amendments would, however, have tremendously serious consequences. They must be read in connection, particularly, with sections 8 (b) (1) and 303 (b) of the bill, which provide, respectively, that it shall be an unfair labor practice for a labor organization or its agents to restrain or coerce employees in the exercise of the rights guaranteed in section 7, and that anyone injured by certain strikes or boycotts may sue the union in Federal court without regard to the amount in controversy.

I have always thought that these provisions, even as they appeared in the bill we passed last month, so plausibly worded and giving the impression that those who oppose them are in favor of coercion or improper strikes and boycotts, were a great trap for labor unions, because they gave antiunion employers, of whom we still have many, very effective devices to weaken unions, to slow up organizational work, and to delay certifications by endless litigation. The amendments made to the bill in conference, however, multiply this danger many times. They constitute open invitations to every employer to litigate out of existence every union treasury.

Under the amended definition of the term "agent," a labor organization might be subject to civil suits and unfair labor practice charges because of the misconduct of any steward or organizer in the plant, even though the union had not authorized or ratified the acts in question. The whole body of law built up around the Norris-LaGuardia Act to protect unions against such destructive lawsuits would be threatened. Because of the terrific abuses to which unscrupulous employers and courts, unfriendly to unions, subjected the rights of labor by virtue of such lawsuits, the Norris-LaGuardia Act specifically provides in section 6 that labor unions, their officers and members shall not be liable for the unlawful acts of individual officers, members, or agents, except upon "clear proof" of actual participation, or upon a showing of actual authorization or ratification of such acts after actual knowledge. This provision of the law, sponsored and passed by a Republican administration, is now drastically limited by this "minor" amendment.

Mr. President, let me say that one has only to refer to the La Follette investigation to recognize the techniques that antilabor employers will use in order to accomplish what I think will develop again under this act.

Apparently the purpose of the new definition of the term "agent" is to overrule the recent decision of the Supreme Court in United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America v. U. S. (decided March 10, 1947). Regardless of whether we agree with the Court's decision in that case, it seems to me that the new definition represents a completely disingenuous approach to the problem. In my opinion, a forthright approach would be to suggest a direct amendment to section 6 of the Norris-LaGuardia Act, frankly designed to remove whatever unjustified immunity labor unions are thought to enjoy under the present law. Instead, we are asked to amend the Norris-LaGuardia Act by indirection, while at the same time we are assured that that statute is in no way affected.

Moreover, it is still my view, after further careful study, that under the amendment making certain strikes and boycotts "unlawful," we have returned to individual employers the right to secure an injunction. I am convinced that my legal conclusion is sound that this amendment, to that extent, also sets aside the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

Let me say that one thing certainly is perfectly clear: Before we can get very far in the administration of this measure, if it becomes law, a whole series of United States Supreme Court decisions will be required to interpret and iron out the ambiguities which in my judgment run throughout the measure. It is evident that by this bill it is proposed that we put on the statute books legislation which will harass unions and union activities in the United States for months and possibly years by way of costly litigation.

By specifically providing in section 7 that employees have the right to refrain from collective bargaining, the conferees have still further multiplied and encouraged the number of situations in which unfair labor practice suits can be brought against unions to stifle organization. In the first place, the provision is specious. There is no necessity for such a provision, because employees are always free to vote against collective bargaining, and any strong-arm tactics are already subject to local criminal penalties. It was only when employees desired to join a union that they were met by discharges, espionage, and blacklists, and that national protection was needed. Again, Mr. President, I refer the Senate to the La Follette investigation report. This bill is an open invitation to union-hating employers to return to their vicious union-busting practices. By inserting this needless provision, however, we make it possible for every organizational campaign by a union to be met by employer-inspired charges by individual employees that the right of each to refrain from collective bargaining has been violated by some enthusiastic employee or other union member soliciting memberships for the union. The Board would be swamped with petty litigation, and the Federal Government would be involved in a huge police-court business, often instigated by employers who desired to harass and stymie legitimate union objectives. If we thought that under the Senate bill there might be opportunity for false charges and a multiplicity of dilatory and destructive suits agains unions, what shall we say of these provisions which make such suits a virtual certainty?

The tendency of this bill to invite and encourage destructive and delaying lawsuits and litigation in labor relations, instead of collective bargaining, is also shown by the amendment inserted in section 8 (b) (4), making it an unfair labor practice and subject to civil damage suits to engage in strikes and boycotts which have "as an object" certain undesirable ends, such as assignment of particular work tasks. The Senate bill provided that strikes "for such purposes" were unfair labor practices, and I agree, as my own bill makes clear, that such strikes are wholly indefensible and should be stopped.

But the effect of the amendment is to resurrect, with a vengeance, one of the unhappiest chapters in American industrial life. I refer to the days when courts were quick to enter injunctions restricting every form of employee self-help because one objective, at least, of some leaders or participants was improper. Now employers will be encouraged to enter damaging lawsuits against every kind of action by labor unions based on the same grounds. Whether these suits have merit or not, they will inevitably weaken the union's treasury, divert its energies and resources, and delay organizational work and collective bargaining.

We talk so much, Mr. President, about the right to strike. I suppose it could be said, for purposes of emphasis, that the right to strike is, after all, no better than the status of the union treasury. I say that because after all laborers strike to win a strike, and they cannot win a strike with an empty treasury.

Because I believe the bill as it is proposed will open wide the doors of opportunity to employers to bring a multiplicity of suits for the antilabor purpose of emptying the treasuries of unions by the cost of litigation, I wish to say that the bill will prove to be administratively unworkable. Unions will soon learn that they must boycott the Board and resort to direct economic action against antilabor employers. Dig in, tighten your belts, and fight will become the battle cry of the economic war caused by this bill.

Finally, I think the proclivities of this bill for endless, frustrating, litigation are clearly shown by the amendments made to the registration requirements of the Senate bill. I believe that unions should be required to make public their financial statements and I have supported legislation to that effect. The Senate bill contained what I thought were quite comprehensive and more than adequate requirements in this connection. The conference committee amendments (sec. 9 (f) (6)) now add no less than 12 further separate categories of information as to which detailed statements or references to constitutional provisions and by-laws must be filed. No Board proceeding can possibly be wholly immune from attack for failure to disclose some one of the many details required. Employers will be quick to make such allegations because full compliance is made a condition precedent to the Board's jurisdiction for all purposes.

If the conference committee's bill contained no other amendments than these, which throw almost every aspect of labor relations into the courts or litigation before the Board at the whim of any anti-union employer or malcontent employee, it would be so severely damaged and modified as no longer to merit, in my opinion, the support of any one of us who desires to legislate soundly and fairly in this difficult field.

Another serious objection I have to the amendments in the conference bill is the fact that they will hopelessly confuse and enormously multiply the difficulties of administration of the act. The amendment to section 7, protecting the right to "refrain" from collective bargaining, is an example of this mischief also. This is particularly apparent, it seems to me, in connection with section 9 (b) dealing with appropriate units.

Under this latter section the Board is required to decide in each case what unit is appropriate in order to assure to employees the fullest freedom in exercising the rights guaranteed in the act. By amending section 7 so as to recite a right both to engage or refrain from engaging in concerted activities, we give the Board a hopeless task. Shall it find the appropriate unit to be one that will achieve most effective and sound collective bargaining, or shall it find the appropriate unit to be the group which will best assure the equal right of the employees to refrain from and reject collective bargaining? I am confident that the conference committee contemplated that the unit should effectuate, not defeat, collective bargaining, and certainly that is in the best public interest. But the amendment unnecessarily obscures this intention and will inevitably cause confusion and difficulty.

In this connection we must examine, too, the provisions of the bill requiring the Board to determine:

First. What are reasonable union initiation fees, having regard to the practices and customs of trade unions in the particular industry and to current wage scales, and Second. What are proper work-task allocations as between unions involved in jurisdictional strikes.

The Board must perform both of these tasks without the assistance of economic analysts, for under section 4 (a) of the bill it is forbidden to hire such employees. This is much like requiring the Veterans' Administration to provide hospital and medical care for veterans but forbidding them to employ doctors and nurses.

I am especially disturbed about the amendment made in conference which requires the Board itself, rather than an arbitrator, to decide these jurisdictional disputes. I think the provision is completely unworkable. Under this provision the Board will have to hear and decide the merits of the disputes in the motion-picture industry and the controversy of over 50 years' standing between the teamsters and brewery workers unions, to mention only a few.

The provision in the Senate bill authorizing the Board to appoint an arbitrator to settle jurisdictional disputes over work assignments was taken from the bill I introduced, S. 858. One of the major reasons for suggesting that an arbitrator, rather than the Board itself, handle these problems was that time is of the essence and the regular procedure of the Board is not an effective remedy for these cases. I certainly agree that jurisdictional disputes must be settled, but I am satisfied that the procedure now set up in the bill is not an effective solution.

I am so convinced of that, Mr. President, that I wish to dwell on the point a moment longer. I say that neither the Board as a board nor a court as a court is the appropriate body which should have the task of determining the merits of a jurisdictional dispute. It is a problem which lends itself best for solution to arbitration. It certainly is true, I am perfectly willing to confess it, Mr. President, that I propose in my bill, and I now defend, a procedure which in the last analysis says to labor, "If you cannot settle a jurisdictional dispute between the two unions involved without strike action then you must submit that issue to compulsory arbitration."
